Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have been voting for this appropriation for 20 years, with a view of doing just that thing. I am afraid that we are not getting any results for the money that we are appropriating. That would seem to be the condition, because the boll weevil has now covered the entire South and is more destructive of cotton than he was even 20 years ago.

Mr. CARTER. There is some substance to what the gentleman says, but the gentleman has not been voting for this appropriation for 20 years, because it has not been in the bill for over 12 or 15 years.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, yes; longer than that.

Mr. CARTER. The boll weevil never got into the United States until about 15 or 20 years ago. We certainly did not have the appropriation before the boll weevil crossed the Rio Grande River. I think I remember the first amendment that was adopted for this purpose. I think I offered the first amendment offered on this floor for the investigation and combating of the boll weevil. It went out of the bill on a point of order made by Charles Scott, then chairman of the Committee on Agriculture.. I think that was in the Sixtieth Congress. Perhaps that same year the appropriation was put into the bill by the Senate and remained there. The gentleman from Kansas must remember that this boll weevil is a new proposition. He is a new insect; he is a very lively, wiley, and vigorous individual, very hard to control, and hard to get any definite information about.

When this gentleman in Louisiana first began to experiment with Mr. B. W. he found this out, and the difficulties have increased as he has drawn closer to his subjects. After trying many other experiments he finally dropped onto this arsenic solution, and he knew this would tame him if he could only induce him to partake, but there another difficulty was met.

If he put it on the boll of cotton the boll weevil would bore down into the boll and would not get enough of the arsenic to kill or disable him. He finally thought out the scheme of putting it into the water that the boll weevil was to drink, but he did not know just where to find that. He camped in the cotton patch, took his cot and slept there, I have been told, and one morning just between darkness and sunup he looked up and saw a boll weevil crawl up on a leaf of cotton on a cotton stalk and drink from a drop of dew. He then said, "I have got you now if I can just get this stuff to you cheap enough." He made it up in a powder and he sprinkled it on the cotton, but the rain came along that evening and washed it off. He experimented and experimented until he finally found that if he could get the arsenic into the dew he had a chance at Mr. Boll Weevil. Finally the experiment of applying the powder late in the afternoon or evening was found to be successful providing no rain intervened to wash it off. It has been a very costly experiment; it has been a tedious experiment. It has been one that has taken a great amount of effort and a great amount of time and care to develop. As I understand it now this arsenic solution has been put into such shape, has progressed to the point where they can kill the boll weevil, and the only problem now remaining is the question of the cost of putting it on the cotton crop. I am advised that it takes about $8 per acre to sprinkle with arsenic, counting the sprinklings that are lost on account of rain, but that when it is sprinkled it will destroy the boll weevil in that particular cotton patch. Eight dollars an acre might be a fair charge in the Mississippi Delta or some place where they raise a bale of cotton to the acre, but in a country where they average only from one-quarter to one-half of a bale of cotton to the acre, as they do in most of the cotton country, then that cost becomes prohibitive. Eight dollars an acre for killing the boll weevil when you get only a quarter of a bale of cotton to the acre, at a price of from 6 to 8, 9, or 10 cents, is not profitable business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTER. But if these experiments continue until we have the price of putting out this poison brought down to something like a reasonable basis—and I have no doubt that it can be done by proper machinery, and I understand that that is what a part of this appropriation is to be used for—then we can bring the cotton industry back to the point that it once had in the South.

One word about another thing. There is a way to raise a certain amount of cotton even with the boll weevil. Take it down in the district of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], or especially in the district of my friend from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN], where they have been fighting this boll weevil for 10 or 15 years, they raise a certain amount of cotton, even with the boll weevil, in dry seasons. On the other hand, in north Texas, in Oklahoma, in Arkansas, and in other States lying along the border of the cotton belt, where our farmers have only recently made the acquaintance of Mr. B. W., they have not had sufficient experience to combat the evil and must be taught. A part of this money is used for instructive purposes, to show the farmer how to farm with the boll weevil. There are a great many things to be done. First, early in the fall each year all of the stalks must be cut.

They must be burned up, and destroy the larvae and the boll weevil himself. None of the stock must be plowed under the ground because you plow under the boll weevil also. There is a certain system of cultivation—so many plowings at certain intervals. Some have a sort of contraption fastened to the plow to which they hang a gunnysack saturated in oil. That seems objectionable to the boll weevil. In fact, the more you disturb him by working the crop the less harm he seems to do. That is one thing the Department of Agriculture is trying to teach the cotton farmer of the South to do. I think that this money is one of the best appropriations in this appropriation bill, and it really ought to be increased. We ought to have more instead of the small amount we have now.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have been fighting with the boll weevil since 1898. That year I had about two or three thousand acres in cotton. I am sorry to say I do not own that land now. It is gone. That year it infested my plantation, and that year we made no cotton. The following year, 1899, we had what is called the Galveston storm; and from my section, thoroughly infested with the boll weevil, by that storm it was blown 300 or 400 miles up the State, and the next year it appeared up there; and I can state to the gentlemen of this committee every year they have infested more and more territory. There is no way of stopping their spread until now. It is reported by the Agricultural Department that they cover the entire cotton area of Texas. It is conceded by the financial writers; and if you will notice the Journal of Commerce yesterday, they said, reviewing the whole situation, that the boll weevil has infested all sections and that the ravages of the boll weevil this year are greater than ever in the history of the country; and I would not be surprised if next year we would be threatened with a cotton famine. However, as a member of this subcommittee, I supported the appropriation for the $150,000 on the ground that that was all that was necessary to be appropriated, because they did not use but $148,000 last year. Since then, however, I understand that Dr. Hunter, who is a field man and entomologist and actively engaged in the field work in combating these ravages, has come to town and informed them that, by reason of the increased area and increased experiments they will have to conduct and the increased information they will have to carry to different sections heretofore uninfested, this $15,000 would be necessary. It would be unfortunate, gentlemen, to curtail this appropriation or to stop this appropriation at this time. Within the last two or three years they have hit on the only method, in my judgment, that has any chance of success.

Within my recollection as a cotton farmer, and I was raised between cotton rows. I know the time when we had what was known as the cotton leaf worm which would come every year or every other year and eat every leaf off the plant and destroy further production. We could not kill it; we could not destroy it. Somebody somewhere, whether the Department of Agriculture I do not know, for I was too young in those days, discovered the use of Paris Green and London Purple and went into the cotton belt, and by a simple application of those poisons they successfully combated and absolutely destroyed the cotton-leaf worm. This arsenate is in both a liquid and powdered form, but the most successful way to apply it is in the powdered form. During the nighttime, just before the dew falls, they go with the machine and sprinkle the leaves in the cotton fields. The dew comes, and this is soluble in water, the weevil drinks it and dies. The question is of getting that machinery that will do this work successfully and at an expense so low that the farmer can afford to purchase and use it. If they can do that then we have the problem solved and the cotton industry will be safe from absolute and utter destruction.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. What methods have been employed by the Department of Agriculture heretofore to destroy the boll weevil?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Nearly every method you can think of. On the recommendation of the Federal Government's Department of Agriculture, when I was farming in cotton, I had the rows lined with little Negro children, picking up the little fallen squares in which the weevil lays its nest, and bringing them in by the hundreds and burning those squares. It was hand labor, if you please. Every square, in each of which there were hundreds and hundreds of eggs, was burned. I will venture that the culture method is successful in some years. If you cultivate your land like you would a garden and prepare it like you would a garden, and have the ground fairly pulverized, and plant your cotton at an early period, and get a good start in a dry year, you can make a reasonable crop before the weevil appears in sufficient numbers to destroy the crop. In a wet year you will not get anything.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we have made very good progress to-day, and I hope the gentleman will move to rise.

Mr. ANDERSON. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that, of course, I did not anticipate that the boll weevil would excite this debate. I would like, however, to get through with this bureau.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is pretty late.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. WALSH having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HICKS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

THE BIRTHPLACE OF ANDREW JACKSON.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks, I desire to set forth some further facts as to the birthplace of Andrew Jackson and close that question, so far as I am concerned. When I closed my remarks on that subject on February 23, 1922, printed in the RECORD of February 25, I was criticizing the reliability of Parton's evidence and deductions. The statement had been made by Mr. HAMMER, and acceded to by me in debate, that Parton had 18 statements. I find that was error. It was only seven, and all but one got their alleged information from Sarah Lathan and her mother, Mrs. Leslie, and only one of them quote Mrs. Leslie. One quotes old Mrs. Cousar and old James Faulkner. I discuss them here. On page 53 Benjamin Massey says Sarah Lathan told, according to his recollection, that Mrs. Jackson left home and came to McKemey's and there Andrew was born, and they then went to South Carolina. James Faulkner says that Sarah Lathan said that Mrs. Jackson after her husband's death moved from the home on Twelve Mile Creek to the Crawfords, on Waxhaw, and on the way stopped at McKemey's, and Andrew was born there. She, being 7 years old, went with her mother, Mrs. Leslie, the midwife. John Lathan, son of Sarah, said Sarah told him the above. That soon after Andrew Jackson, sr., died Mrs. Jackson left Twelve Mile Creek to go to live with the Crawfords in Lancaster County, in South Carolina, and stopped at McKemey's, and there Andrew was born. Thomas Faulkner says Sarah Lathan, his aunt, and Mrs. Leslie, his grandmother, had both made these statements in his presence; that Mrs. Lathan had been dead 35 years and Mrs. Leslie 50 years at the date of making this statement—1858. See page 53, footnote. "To the same effect testify Samuel McWhorter, Jane Wilson, et al., page 55." In other words, all the above heard what they told from Mrs. Leslie and Mrs. Lathan, and only Thomas Faulkner spoke of hearing Mrs. Leslie make the statement.

The others only heard Mrs. Lathan, who claims she was at the birth when only 7 years old. These are the people who made affidavits—all but one traceable to Sarah Lathan alone and one to her mother, Mrs. Leslie. Then the other witness is James D. Craig, of Mississippi (p. 55), who wrote a letter. He remembers enough to destroy Parton's theory and also the evidence of the above witnesses. He says he heard old James Faulkner say that he was once sleeping with Andy in the McKemey house, and that Andy told him he was born in that house. Now Parton says that Jackson thought he was born in South Carolina, and always said so, but that he did not know. His witness says that he did know. Jackson certainly did not make that statement, or he would never have repudiated it as often and explicitly as I have shown that he did. He said over his own signature: "I was born on the James Crawford place, in Lancaster district, South Carolina."

Now, there were two things about Jackson; he was bluntly truthful and notoriously persistent. If he had said he was born in McKemey's house, he would have maintained it until the end. The witness, Craig, is mistaken as to what house Faulkner referred to. The Crawford house was only 2½ miles away, and after a lapse of 50 years it is easy to be confused. Again, Craig says he heard old Mrs. Cousar say she was at the birth, at McKemey's house and, I believe, assisted in dressing the infant. This is the only witness as to Mrs. Cousar's alleged statement. Again, Craig says he heard Charles Finly say he assisted in hauling the corpse to Waxhaw Church and helped to bury it there; that he brought Mrs. Jackson and her boys with the corpse, and after the funeral conveyed them to the residence of George McKemey, where soon after Andrew was born. He must have been a grown man, say, 25 years old, as he was managing the whole transportation scheme. In 1820, if alive, he was 78 years or older. If Craig heard him talk, it must have been at least 40 years before his statement, and Craig had in the meantime moved to Mississippi. But the statement contradicts Sarah Lathan's and Mrs. Leslie's. They say Mrs. Jackson was moving to the Crawfords's and stopped at McKemey's on the way when Andrew arrived. Craig says Finly said he took them from the burial at Waxhaw to McKemey's, where Jackson was born. Parton adopts the Craig-Finly view and thereby repudiates the most numerously relied on witnesses. These are the only witnesses relied on by Parton, and they do not agree amongst themselves, and Parton does not quote them fully or accurately.

The statement of James Faulkner coming from the North Carolina records is before me. It states many things which Parton omits. He says his father, old James Faulkner, did not come to America until 1784, and made his first crop in 1785. Now, Parton leaves that out. He has Craig's statement that old James Faulkner says he slept with Jackson at McKemey's, and Jackson told him he was born there. This James Faulkner statement shows that Jackson had gone to read law when old James arrived, was a grown man, and the Craig-Faulkner story was a myth. He cites also the McWhorter statement as being the same as the others. I have before me the McWhorter tradition in the affidavit of Henry McWhorter, who states that the tradition is that his great-grandmother was also a midwife at the birth of Andrew Jackson—making three midwives on that occasion—and that it was at McKemey's. And the tradition also is that Jackson was captured and taken to Charleston to prison, where he was kept until the end of the war. This is so notoriously incorrect that Parton no doubt omitted it, for it would discredit the entire traditionary statement. Jackson never was in prison at Charleston. Let us look at some other Parton inaccuracies, for every bit of evidence North Carolina produces comes back to him. On page 102 he states that Jackson left to study law in 1784, and says at that time Webster was 4 years old—wrong; he was born in 1782 and was 2 years old and not 4. He says also that Benton and Cass and Taney were not born then. See how accurate. Benton was born in 1782, Cass 1782, and Taney in 1777. Yet Parton says he was not born up to 1784. Taney had been the Attorney General of the United States, Secretary of the Treasury, and Chief Justice 25 years when Parton wrote. If that indicates anything, it indicates gross inaccuracy. Now, I will cite other historical works: Martin Van Buren in his autobiography, page 541, says "If the question of the tariff could be satisfactorily disposed of, General Jackson, in addition to being greatly strengthened in all Southern States, might reasonably count on carrying his native State, South Carolina"; annual report American Historical Association for 1918, volume 2, page 541, published under act of Congress; Brady, I have already cited, published in 1906; and Bassett, I have cited, published in 1911. He was born in Tarboro, N. C., educated at Trinity College, N. C., professor of history at Trinity from 1893 until 1906, doctor of philosophy, Johns Hopkins University, and now professor of history at Smith's College at Northampton, Mass. He repudiates the claim of North Carolina. The Encyclopedia Britannica, eleventh edition, 1911, written by William G. Sumner, says, "He was born in the Waxhaw settlement, in Union County, N. C., or Lancaster County, S. C."

The New International Encyclopedia, edition of 1917, says: "He was born March 15, 1767. There has been much controversy between North Carolinians and South Carolinians regarding the place of his birth. There is a tradition that he was born in the Waxhaw settlement, in Union County, N. C., but Jackson himself thought he was born near Waxhaw Creek, in Lancaster County, S. C., and in the opinion of his most thorough biographer the weight of evidence seems to favor South Carolina." (Written by Prof. William P. Trent and Prof. Newton D. Mereness.) William G. Sumner's History says: "Parton fixes his birthplace in Union County, N. C.; Kendall in South Carolina." The Americana Encyclopedia, volume 15, published in 1922, says: "Jackson was born in Waxhaw settlement, near border line between North and South Carolina, the 15th of March, 1767. It is a matter of dispute to which of these States the home of his birth belongs, but the evidence is in favor of South Carolina." (Written by Marcus W. Jernigan, associate professor of history, University of Chicago.) Frost, who wrote at once after Jackson's death in 1846, states in the first sentence: "Andrew Jackson was born on the 15th of March, 1767, in the State of South Carolina." (See edition of 1887, Lee & Sheppard, publishers, p. 1, Old Hickory in Rough and Ready Series.) Of the numerous memorial addresses published on his death in 1845 all who speak of his birth place it in South Carolina. I cite a number: Address delivered at Fayette, Miss., June 30, 1845, by Judge Wilcox, says: "Andrew Jackson was born in Waxhaw settlement, in the State of South Carolina." Jeremiah Black, in a memorial address delivered at Philadelphia in 1845: "Andrew Jackson had his birth in one of the back settlements of South Carolina." Lincoln Clark, Dusenbury Memorials, page 6, July 19, 1845, says: "Andrew Jackson was born the 15th day of March, 1767, in the Waxhaw settlement, in the State of South Carolina, in the present district of Lancaster."

Dusenbury's Memorial Volumes, page 1, published 1845, says he was born in South Carolina. B. F. Butler's memorial address says, "He was born in that State," South Carolina (Dusenbury, p. 59), delivered in New York City, June 24, 1845. A. F. Morrison at Indianapolis, June 28, 1845, says, "He was born in the Waxhaw settlement, in South Carolina, March 15, 1767" (Dusenbury, p. 133). Francis R. Shunk at Harrisburg, Pa., on July 24, 1845, says, "Andrew Jackson was born in South Carolina of Irish parents on March 15, 1767" (Dusenbury, p. 146). Hon. Ellis Lewis, Lancaster, Pa., June 26, 1845 (Dusenbury, p. 147), says, "Andrew Jackson was born in what was called the Waxhaw settlement, in South Carolina, March 15, 1767." Hon. Pliny Merrick, Boston, July 9, 1845 (Dusenbury, p. 168), says, "He was born in the State of South Carolina on the 15th of March, 1767." John Van Buren, Albany, June 30, 1845 (Dusenbury, p. 102), says that there were two occasions when the country rallied to him universally, "The first was the bold and manly stand he took with our ancient ally, France, and the second, the vigorous enforcement of the laws in his native State of South Carolina." John A. Bolles, Lowell, Mass., July 15, 1845 (Dusenbury, p. 233), says, "He of all men was the appropriate and fitly chosen agent of the people at that great epoch when his own native State resolved to assert her individual sovereignty and cast off her allegiance to the Union" (nullification). Hon. Hendrick B. Wright at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., July 4, 1845 (Dusenbury, p. 238), says, "Andrew Jackson was born the 15th of March, 1767, in what was then the Colony of South Carolina." W. McCartny, Easton, Pa., June 28, 1845 (Dusenbury, p. 282), says, "A native of South Carolina, he was early engaged in the cause of his country"; page 288, also, "The executions of the laws of the Union threatened serious collision with South Carolina—South Carolina, the land of his birth."

Samuel A. Cartwright, Natchez, Miss., July 12, 1845, Dusenbury, 292, says, "Born on the 15th of March, 1767, in the Waxhaw settlement, South Carolina, and at the early age of 13 took part in the Revolution." William Irwin, Lancaster, Ohio, July 12, 1845, Dusenbury, page 307, says, "He sought protection and peace in South Carolina. There at the Waxhaw settlement General Jackson was born March 15, 1767." J. G. Harris, Charlotte, Tenn., July 17, 1845, Dusenbury, page 317, says, "Born in South Carolina, he entered the Revolutionary War at the age of 14." George Bancroft, Washington, D. C., June 27, 1845, Dusenbury, page 3, says, "South Carolina gave a birthplace to Andrew Jackson." McCandless, at Pittsburgh, July 17, 1845, says, "Jackson's nativity was amid the happy hills, the pleasant shades, and refreshing glades of the Palmetto State—that State which he regarded with filial love but whose truant spirit he was compelled to rebuke. When in after years she manifested her rebel disposition toward the Government, which in justice and wisdom he administered, he cherished that State with touching sensibility, he remembered the playground of his early days; and when in the stern reality of mature life he was called by the responsibility of his political position to correct the errors and defections of her statesmen, he did so as one honoring his parentage but resolved to execute his high commission." Mr. McCandless's statement is abundantly justified that he cherished the playground of his youth by the letter which I quote below. Robert Mills, from whose atlas the map was made which appears with my speech of February 23, 1922, published in RECORD of February 25, on this subject, sent him a copy of the map and asked as to the correctness of the place designated "General A. Jackson's birthplace," to which he replied as follows:

HERMITAGE, July 8, 1827.

DEAR SIR: I have received your favor of the 15th ultimo, accompanied with a map of the district of Lancaster, within which I was born. For this flattering evidence of your regard be pleased to accept my sincere thanks. A view of the map pointing the spot that gave me birth brings fresh to my memory many associations dear to my heart, many days of pleasure with my juvenile companions; but, alas, most of them are gone to that bourne where I am hastening and from which no one returns. I have not visited that country since the year 1784; most of the names of the places are changed; all the old generation appears to have passed away and to be succeeded by another more numerous and often differently named. The crossing of the Waxhaw Creek, within 1 mile of which I was born, is still, however, possessed by Mr. John Crawford, son of the former owner, Robert, who lived there when I was growing up and at school. I lived there for many years, and from the accuracy with which the spot is marked on the map, I conclude the whole must be correct. With great respect, I have the honor to be, sir,

Your very obedient servant, ANDREW JACKSON.

Addressed to Robert Mills, Columbia, S. C.

This letter comes from the Dimitry family, of New Orleans, descendants of Mr. Mills, who made the map shown with my remarks, and who also was the architect of the Washington Monument, but who died before it was well begun. He sent the map to General Jackson for corrections, if any were needed as to his birthplace, and the above letter is the result. It was published in the New Orleans Picayune January 10, 1915. The sentiment expressed in that letter corresponds with Mr. McCandless's remarks, and the approval of the map made in 1820, and accepted everywhere until 14 years after Jackson's death, should settle the controversy. Surely all the great men of the day who were called by the great mass meetings held all over the country were not wrong. What North Carolinian that day asserted a claim and repudiated the assertions of the 16 eulogists, including Bancroft, who asserted South Carolina nativity? If they say the Daughters of the American Revolution monument lately erected in North Carolina without protest settles it, what about the numerous great men who asserted to the contrary in addresses widely published, and so valuable as to be bound and preserved, going unchallenged in 1845?

Where were the North Carolina orators? Did they even have a memorial service? Were they claiming him then? Not so as to be visible to the naked eye. At Raleigh the Raleigh Standard, the leading Democratic paper, said editorially, on June 25, 1845:

The reputation and character of Andrew Jackson have at all times been cherished with peculiar affection by North Carolinians. Though born in the Waxhaw settlement within the bounds of our sister State of South Carolina, our people have always looked upon him as their son, for it was among them, at the age of 18, he selected and studied his profession.

That was their claim in 1845; now they want to advance it from adoption to birthright. The Standard, on July 2, published a chronology of Jackson's life. The first item is as follows:

Chronology of Andrew Jackson; 1767, March 15, born, near Waxhaw settlement, South Carolina.

And so forth. On July 9 it publishes Bancroft's eulogy, cited in my speech of February 23, stating South Carolina nativity. On August 13 it published a memorial address of Judge W. B. Rodman, of North Carolina Supreme Court, delivered at Washington, N. C., on June 26, 1845, which says of Jackson:

He was born in 1767 and South Carolina was the home of his birthplace.

So the gentlemen of North Carolina also were deluded about his birthplace, and the Charlotte Daughters of the American Revolution Chapter, 60 years later, had to set them right. But let us see what Charlotte, Mecklenburg County, did about it. Surely they were horror-stricken at the historical misstatements and biographical ignorance of all the great men enumerated above, who were asserting Jackson's South Carolina nativity. But not so; they join in the general refrain. On June 27, 1845, the Charlotte paper, then named the Mecklenburg Jeffersonian, devoted a page to General Jackson, whose death it announced and made no claim to his nativity. On July 4 it gave considerable space and published the elaborate arrangements for memorials all over the Nation, mentioning, especially, Butler in New York and Bancroft in Washington. On July 11 it is stated that a meeting was held, presided over by Thomas L. Hutchison, I believe, one of Jackson's relatives, resolutions laudatory of him were introduced by Hon. G. W. Caldwell and passed unanimously, but no claim was asserted that he was a native of Mecklenburg. The meeting set a day, July 24, to have a memorial service, and Rev. J. F. W. Freeman, D. D., was asked to prepare and deliver the memorial.

On July 25 the Jeffersonian reports that the meeting was held and Doctor Freeman delivered the address on General Jackson to "a large concourse" of people, which the paper hoped to publish in full later. On August 22 it published it, and Doctor Freeman says in that address: "Andrew Jackson was born on the 15th of March, 1767, in settlement of the Waxhaws, State of South Carolina." Thus Doctor Freeman put that vast concourse of people assembled in 20 miles of the birthplace on notice of our claim. On August 1 the Jeffersonian carried a notice "That the publication of Kendall's Life of General Jackson will be resumed about the 1st of the next month and 'twill be completed by the close of the present year." Then follows this extract from a letter of General Jackson, dated May 25, 1845, to Mr. Kendall: "On the subject of my papers, you are to retain them as long as you think necessary to use them. Should you die, they are to pass forthwith into Mr. Blair's hands. I have full and unlimited confidence in you both." Here was a community, which now claims Jackson with intolerant temperament, confronted with the statement, "to a large concourse of people," many of them his kin, that "he was born in South Carolina." Nobody wrote to the Jeffersonian in dispute of it. The declaration was made on July 24, the issues of the 25th, and of August 1, 8, and 15, and no protest. Then, on August 22, the Jeffersonian published the speech, with that statement staring them in the face, and still no protest. If there was anything in their contention, somebody would have certainly made some protest. Having been silent then, General Walkup was in no position in 1859 to get a reversal of verdict on the tradition of some good old ladies. There is another thing about the Jeffersonian, it put the people on notice that Jackson had implicit confidence in Kendall's history, and the first part of it, containing a map with the place of Jackson's birth, marked just as it is in the map with my speech of February 23, published in the RECORD of February 25, 1922, was out and widely circulated, and the Charlotte paper was publishing to the world that the same would be completed by publishing the later part, and no protest suggested as to Kendall's statements and maps showing Jackson's birthplace in South Carolina. The papers above referred to are in the Congressional Library. Kendall makes the statement as to the birthplace of Jackson that he was born in South Carolina, and attaches a map designating the place where Mills places it.

The Western Carolinian, published at Salisbury, N. C., by Philo White, in its sketch of Andrew Jackson when he was inaugurated President, in its issue of April 14, 1829, says, "He was born near Camden, S. C., March 15, 1767." His birthplace was in Camden district, at that time 45 miles from the town, and Camden was their market town, and the term "near" was a relative term. The paper goes on to say he read law in Salisbury. (See file in Congressional Library.) Now, one word as to where George McKemey lived. In James Faulkner's statement, part of which Parton did not set out, he says, "George McKemey lived at the place which he described until he died, and that his uncle, George Leslie, lived with him several years before he (McKemey) died at that place." The abstract of the North Carolina property set out by Parton shows that McKemey sold the North Carolina property to Thomas Crawford in 1792, hence McKemey was not living on that part of the land when he died, and if the place on which the monument stands is the Cureton place, as they claimed, it was not the place on which McKemey lived, for he was not dead when he conveyed it away, and Faulkner says he lived at the same place until he died. The census of 1790 does not show George McKemey or McCamie or any McCamie of any kind in the county of Mecklenburg. And yet if Faulkner is right he must have been there then. But it appears that McKemey got 520 acres of land in his tract, 300 acres in South Carolina and 220 in North Carolina, all one tract, divided by the State line as finally located, and he lived on it. Now, if his home was on the part that lay in South Carolina it explains Faulkner's statement that he lived in the same place until he died, notwithstanding the fact that he sold the 220 acres in North Carolina to Crawford. It also explains why he is not in the census of 1790 in Mecklenburg County, and why George Leslie, who lived on his place or lived with him as Faulkner puts it, does not so appear. The 520 acres was granted to McCain, who in 1762 sold 520 acres to Repentance Townsend, and Townsend in 1766 sold 520 acres to McKemey, 220 of it being in Mecklenburg County, N. C. Now, against all the statements of Jackson, who without doubt settled the question when he was a young man and his mother was alive and all the contemporaries of Jackson and of the maps of that era and especially the one made by Mills, the great engineer, who designed the Washington Monument and many of the public buildings of the District, and in the face of all the unchallenged statements made by his eulogists and the newspapers of the day, and especially the great concourse of people at Charlotte, in Mecklenburg County, N. C., which now claims him, who heard Dr. Freeman assert that he was born in South Carolina, with no protest or contradiction in the paper which published the address, we have the statement of four people who said in 1858 that they heard Mrs. Lathan, who had then been dead 35 years, and of one man that he heard Mrs. Leslie, then dead 50 years, and of one man that he had heard old Mrs. Cousar, many years dead, say he was born at George McKemey's, in North Carolina, and one of these witnesses also added Charles Finly and old James Faulkner as witnesses whom he had heard make statements which contradict the others, and on tradition like that they attempt to overturn the established facts of history. My native State, North Carolina, insists on claiming to be the mother of a man who persistently all his life repudiated her claim to maternity and reiterated his repudiation in his will. She seems unfortunately to be long on claims and woefully short on pride and proof.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LUHRING, for 10 days, on account of illness in family.

To Mr. MCCORMICK, for two days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. FENN, for five days, on account of important business.

CONFERENCE REPORT—EXECUTIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana, from the committee of conference, submitted a conference report on the bill (H. R. 9981) making appropriations for the Executive, and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for printing under the rules.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman from Indiana if it is his thought to deal with that report to-morrow?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I would like to have it considered if we can do so to-morrow, if it does not interfere with the Agricultural appropriation bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—CHINESE CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Acting Secretary of State in relation to four claims presented by the Government of China against the Government of the United States arising out of the negligent or unlawful acts in China of persons connected with the military and naval service of the United States, and I recommend that as an act of grace, and without reference to the question of the legal liability of the United States, an appropriation in the amount of $5,913.79 be made to effect settlement of these claims in accordance with the recommendation of the Acting Secretary of State.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 9, 1922.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 10, 1922.

(Legislative day of Thursday, March 9, 1922.)

The Senate met in open executive session at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

FOUR-POWER TREATY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole and in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty submitted by the President of the United States between the United States, the British Empire, France, and Japan, relating to their insular possessions and insular dominions in the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, last night, just before we took a recess, we had some discussion in regard to the rates of speed and the armament of the different vessels of the navies of the United States, Great Britain, and Japan. I made a mistake in replying in regard to the new vessels of the United States, putting their speed far too high. I had in mind at the time the speed of cruisers; but none of our battle cruisers have been built; they are a part of the program which is given up.

I have before me tables showing everything that was asked for, I think, last night, the main battery of each of the vessels, the displacement, the year built or completed, the speed, and the weight of metal thrown.

I will say in regard to the vessels in the Japanese table that the speed of 24 knots of the Mutsu and the Nagato, which are their two new vessels, is an estimate made by us, and perhaps claimed by them, but is not absolutely known. The last four vessels on the Japanese list—the Kirishima, the Haruna, the Hi-Yei, and the Kongo—are battle cruisers, as is indicated. Therefore, they have a higher speed, but a low weight of metal thrown. They are all old ships.

The United States has seven modern post-Jutland vessels. We had five, but owing to the change brought about by the retention of the Mutsu, we have seven. The Maryland, California, Tennessee, Idaho, and Mississippi are on this list, but under the arrangement made on the retention of the Mutsu we have also the North Dakota and the Delaware, which are at the foot of the list. The oldest ships are dropped and are replaced by two of the West Virginia class, which are of the same class as the Maryland. Their speed is 21 knots. They are all battleships and not battle cruisers, and they average, as I am informed by the Navy Department, a somewhat higher rate of speed than battleships of other nations, because they are each more modern. They are all post-Jutland ships, which means that there are changes in their construction and building brought about by the battle of Jutland.

In England there are four battle cruisers which are indicated at the bottom of the list, the Hood, the Renown, the Repulse, and the Tiger. The Hood is a new post-Jutland vessel of 43,000 tons and 31 knots, but her guns are 15-inch, while the guns on our vessels are 16-inch. Her weight of metal thrown is less than that thrown by ships like the Maryland and West Virginia. The other three, marked battle cruisers, the Renown, Repulse, and Tiger, are old ships with a very light weight of metal thrown.

There are also five vessels which I believe are battle cruisers of newer make, but at all events battleships, of as high speed as 25 knots estimated, but there are none of them old ships, and the weight of metal thrown is much less than ours. They have 15-inch guns.

With this explanation, I ask that the tables may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to article 1.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

As in legislative session, a message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9597) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the President to provide housing for war needs," approved May 16, 1918.

The message also announced that the House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10559) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes; requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SHREVE, Mr. HUTCHINSON, and Mr. OLIVER were appointed managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 4382) to provide for the application of the reclamation law to irrigation districts; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 2471. An act to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the survey and sale of certain lands in Coconino County, Ariz., to the occupants thereof," approved July 28, 1914 (38 Stat. L., p. 558);

S. 2993. An act authorizing a modification of the adopted project for Indiana Harbor, Ind.;

H. R. 8193. An act to amend the first proviso in the act entitled "An act to grant a certain parcel of land, part of the Fort Robinson Military Reservation, Nebr., to the village of Crawford, Nebr., for park purposes," approved June 25, 1906;

H. R. 9047. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant to the town of Winthrop, Mass., a perpetual right of way over approximately 755 square feet of the Fort Banks Military Reservation for the purpose of widening Revere Street;

H. R. 10267. An act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 108. Joint resolution authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to Jeanne d'Arc.

CONFIRMATION OF FRANK D. BABCOCK.

Mr. TOWNSEND. As in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the confirmation of Mr. Frank D. Babcock, to be postmaster at Haverhill, Mass., which was made on yesterday, be recalled and that the President be requested to return his name to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

As in legislative session,

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 4382) to provide for the application of the reclamation law to irrigation districts was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

PROSECUTIONS UNDER ESPIONAGE AND OTHER WAR ACTS (S. DOC. NO. 159).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney General, transmitting, in response to Senate resolution 226, directing the Attorney General to inform the Senate relative to prosecutions under the espionage law or for conspiracy to violate war laws, agreed to January 25, 1922, certain additional information, which, on motion of Mr. BORAH, was ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, DISTRICT MEDICAL CHARITIES (S. DOC. NO. 158).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the District of Columbia, fiscal year 1922, for medical charities, $7,000, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the executive committee of the League to Enforce Peace, favoring prompt ratification of the four-power treaty, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by General Guy V. Henry Garrison, No. 9, Army and Navy Union, of Washington, D. C., favoring the passage of the so-called Dyer antilynching bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LODGE presented resolutions adopted by the Massachusetts Federation of Churches, at Boston, Mass., favoring prompt ratification of the treaties prepared by the Conference on Limitation of Armament, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE MASSACHUSETTS FEDERATION OF CHURCHES,
Boston, March 7, 1922.

To the SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Care of Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
United States Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: The Massachusetts Federation of Churches, officially representing the denominational bodies of the State of Massachusetts, at a special meeting held on this date to consider the moral issues before the Nation and the State, unanimously voted, respectfully but earnestly, "to urge the Senate of the United States promptly to ratify the treaties agreed upon by the Washington Conference on Limitation of Armament as submitted by the President." The full resolutions follow:

"Whereas the conference of representatives of the United States and those of eight other nations, called to consider the limitation of naval armaments and the problems of the Pacific, after three months' deliberation, under the wise and efficient leadership of President Harding and Secretary of State Hughes, had agreed upon a number of important international treaties, and six of these, in which the United States is a party, have been submitted by the President to the Senate of the United States for its constitutional approval; and

"Whereas one of these treaties, between the United States, the British Empire, Japan, France, and Italy, provides for the reduction of naval armaments by the destruction of a large number of capital ships and the fixing of a ratio of naval establishments between the parties and the maximum number and strength of such ships to be possessed by each power during a period of 10 years, thus inaugurating an era of naval limitation in lieu of competition in naval establishment hitherto prevailing; a treaty which Senator Hughes has declared, 'ends, absolutely ends, the race in competition of naval armament. At the same time it leaves the relative security of the great naval powers unimpaired'; and

"Whereas another of such treaties adopts rules and regulations restricting the operation of submarines in time of war, making impossible such outrages upon common humanity as the destruction of the Lusitania, except at the cost of international outlawry, and further establishes rules against the use of noxious and poisonous gases; and

"Whereas by another of these treaties made between the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and France the parties agree to respect each other's rights in their insular possessions and insular dominions in the region of the Pacific, and agree to meet in conference to discuss any controversy which may arise between them respecting such rights, and in the event of any external aggression upon the rights of any of the parties to communicate fully and frankly with each other in order to determine what action shall be taken in view of such exigency, and which treaty upon ratification is to supersede the existing treaty creating the Anglo-Japanese alliance; and

"Whereas other of such treaties bring to an end the policy of aggression by other nations upon the sovereignty of China, and provide for the recognition of the unimpaired sovereignty of that country, and confirm the policy of equal opportunity for all nations in their trade and commerce with China; provide for a revision of her import duties, and establish a commission of the nine powers to deal with alleged infringements of the 'open-door' agreements; and

"Whereas a treaty between the United States and Japan settles the disputed question of the right of the United States to equal rights with Japan in the use of the island of Yap for ocean cable purposes, and also to equal rights with members of the League of Nations in the mandated islands of the Pacific north of the Equator; and

"Whereas all of these treaties supplement each other, and together constitute 'a great and successful effort to diminish the burdens of peace and to render more remote the horrors of war'; and

"Whereas the President of the United States in submitting these treaties to the United States Senate stated: 'Either these treaties must have your cordial sanction or every proclaimed desire to promote peace and prevent war becomes a hollow mockery':

"Resolved, That such treaties constitute great and important steps toward insuring world peace by providing for the peaceful settlement of questions which otherwise might disturb amicable relations between nations, and by ending international competition in the building of navies and all its inevitable burdens and evil consequences;

"Resolved further, That the Massachusetts Federation of Churches does hereby emphatically commend the work of the Washington Conference on Limitation of Armament, and most earnestly urges the Senate of the United States promptly to ratify the treaties agreed upon by that conference and as submitted to the Senate by the President of the United States."

Yours, truly,

JOHN J. WALKER, Secretary.
By E. TALLMADGE ROOT.

Mr. NELSON presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Cass Lake, Minn., remonstrating against the enactment of Senate bill 1948, providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAPPER presented resolutions adopted by the American National Live Stock Association at its twenty-fifth annual convention, Colorado Springs, Colo., protesting against the transfer of any bureau or division of the Department of Agriculture to other departments, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. JONES of Washington presented a letter in the nature of a petition from the Federal grand jury, United States district court, western division of Washington, at Seattle, Wash., praying for the enactment of legislation suppressing the traffic in narcotics, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LADD presented the petitions of Rose A. and C. A. Peterson, of Nortonville; of Peter Mousel and 136 others, of Flasher and vicinity; and E. H. Hurd and 10 others, of Hurdsfield, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the Government Grain Corporation so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of sundry citizens of Detroit, Mich., praying for acceptance of the proposal of Henry Ford relative to the Muscle Shoals project, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution adopted at the midwinter meeting of the Michigan State Horticultural Society at Coloma, Mich., favoring acceptance of the bid of Henry Ford relative to the Muscle Shoals project and passage of the so-called Purnell bill, granting additional funds for agricultural experiment work, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Frank Wendtland Post, No. 253, American Legion, of Royal Oak, Mich., favoring the enactment of legislation providing adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Plymouth, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation providing Federal censorship of moving-picture films, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted at the annual conference of American Historical Societies at St. Louis, Mo., favoring the construction of a Federal hall of records, so as to preserve precious records of historic value, which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. WILLIS presented petitions, numerously signed, of sundry employees of the Owen China Co., of Minerva, and the National China Co., of Salineville, both in the State of Ohio, praying for the passage of an adequate protective tariff law based upon American valuations, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented telegrams in the nature of petitions from the Kiwanis Clubs of Toronto, Toledo, Marion, Medina, Willard, Lisbon, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Carey, and Mansfield, all in the State of Ohio, favoring prompt ratification of the treaties prepared by the Conference on Limitation of Armament, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Local Union No. 499, of Stewartsville, Ohio, praying for the passage of an adequate protective tariff law based on American valuations, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Harry C. Egbert Camp, No. 1, United Spanish War Veterans, of Cincinnati, Ohio, favoring inclusion in the so-called soldiers' bonus bill of veterans of the Spanish-American War and the Philippine insurrection, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 3266) for the purchase of the Cape Cod Canal property, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 3267) for the relief of settlers and claimants to section 16, lands in the L'Anse and Vieux Desert Indian Reservation in Michigan, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. 3268) to authorize the Chicago, Detroit & Canada Grand Trunk Junction Railroad Co., or its successors or assigns, to lease certain of its properties in the State of Michigan; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 3269) to amend subdivision 3 of subsection B of section 9 of an act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, as amended, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(By request.) A bill (S. 3270) to encourage the construction and operation of additional railway facilities, to enable railroad corporations to pay off and reduce their interest-bearing indebtedness, to make investments of money in railroads more secure and profitable, to reduce the costs of transportation on railroads, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. HARRISON:

A bill (S. 3271) granting a pension to William Clark; to the Committee on Pensions.

AMERICAN RED CROSS HEADQUARTERS IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. SPENCER. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate joint resolution 43.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 43) to grant authority to continue the use of the temporary buildings of the American Red Cross headquarters in the city of Washington, D. C., which were to strike out the preamble, and on page 2, lines 8 and 9, to strike out "within such time as may hereafter be provided by Congress" and to insert "not later than December 31, 1924."

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments proposed by the House, that a conference be requested on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. FERNALD, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, and Mr. ASHURST conferees on the part of the Senate.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS OF 1920 AND 1921.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a very interesting statement and table prepared by Mr. O. P. Austin, statistician of the National City Bank of New York, being their bulletin of March, 1922. It compares the official figures of imports and exports for the United States for the full calendar year 1921 with those for the calendar year of 1920, showing the relative decline in quantities and values in 1921 when compared with 1920. I shall ask to have these two pages inserted in the RECORD. I think they contain some very valuable information.

I will say, Mr. President, that some people are very much concerned about prices, particularly with regard to steel products and farm implements. They can not understand why it is that there is a shutdown to some extent of production by the manufacturers and yet the prices for plows, wire for fencing, corrugated iron for roofing and building purposes, keep up at about twice what they were in 1914. They also can not understand how it is that the price of shoes keeps up when the producers of hides can hardly get anything for them. These are questions which disturb the consumers of the country and which are shutting off buying by the people of the things because they can not afford to pay the present prices. The statement may have a little bearing upon that question, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From National City Bank of New York Bulletin, March, 1922.]

LOWER PRICES BIG FACTOR IN FALL OFF OF OUR FOREIGN TRADE FIGURES.

(By O. P. Austin, statistician National City Bank of New York.)

Now that it is possible to compare the official figures of imports and exports of the United States in the full calendar year 1921 with those of the calendar year 1920 and to compare the fall in quantity with that of value, we find in nearly every case that the reduction in value is far greater than the reduction in quantity.

While the official reports of imports and exports do not state quantities of all articles entering or leaving the country, and while the units of measurement utilized in recording the quantities of merchandise imported or exported include in many cases merely the number of articles, it is possible to reduce all of the terms of measurement to a single unit of pounds, and thus to determine the actual number of pounds represented by all of the imports and exports, except the comparatively small number in which no official record is made of the quantities entering or leaving the country. Of the $13,500,000,000 worth of merchandise imported and exported in 1920 (which fell to about $7,000,000,000 in 1921) it is possible to determine the weight in the common unit of pounds of articles representing about 75 per cent of the total value, and comparing the reduction in quantities with the reduction in values, article by article and for the grand total, to at least approximate the relation which the fall in prices has had to the reduction in stated values of imports and exports, so much discussed in recent months.

COMPARISON BY POUNDS.

The results of such a study of the relative fall in quantities and values of all articles for which the quantity can be determined is presented herewith. It has been made by transforming to the common unit of pounds the quantities of each article of import or export in which the value in 1921 was about $1,000,000 and for which quantities imported or exported are officially recorded in any form. This analysis shows for the calendar year 1920 approximately 250,000,000,000 pounds of imports and exports, and in 1921 approximately 200,000,000,000, a reduction of 20 per cent in quantity, while the value of the merchandise for which the weight is named falls from $9,832,000,000 in 1920 to $4,988,000,000 in 1921, a reduction of 49 per cent in value, as against 20 per cent in quantity. In exports the fall in quantities of all articles for which weight can be shown is 22 per cent and the fall in values of the same articles 43 per cent. In imports the fall in quantity is 10 per cent and in value 56 per cent, this comparatively small reduction in quantity being due to the big increase in the imports of crude petroleum. Exclusive of petroleum, the fall in quantities of imports is 32 per cent, and in value 56 per cent.

RAW MATERIALS COMPARED WITH MANUFACTURES.

A division of the articles forming the 1921 imports and exports, respectively, into three great groups which form the bulk of all international trade—foodstuffs, manufacturing material, and manufactures—shows on the export side an increase over 1920 of 30 per cent in the weight of foodstuffs, but a reduction of 32 per cent in value; in manufacturing material a fall of 35 per cent in weight and 49 per cent in value; and in the manufactures for which weight can be stated the reduction is 27 per cent in weight and 50 per cent in value. On the import side, foodstuffs show a reduction of 23 per cent in weight and 64 per cent in value; manufactures a reduction of 7 per cent in weight and 47 per cent in value; and manufacturing material, including petroleum, a 5 per cent reduction in weight and 51 per cent in value, but exclusive of petroleum the manufacturing material shows a fall of 32 per cent in quantity and 57 per cent in value.

The fall in values per unit of quantity is most observable in the natural products, foodstuffs, and manufacturing material. Raw sugar imported, for example, shows a fall of 26 per cent in quantity and 76 per cent in value; coffee an increase of 3 per cent in quantity but a decrease of 43 per cent in value; wool an increase of 23 per cent in quantity but a decrease of 51 per cent in value; hides and skins a decrease of 32 per cent in quantity and 72 per cent in value; raw cotton a reduction of 54 per cent in quantity and 76 per cent in value; and rubber a decrease of 29 per cent in quantity and 69 per cent in value. On the export side, wheat and flour in combination show an increase of 18 per cent in quantity but a decrease of 32 per cent in value; cotton an increase of 5 per cent in quantity but a decrease of 52 per cent in value; tobacco an increase of 10 per cent in quantity but a decrease of 16 per cent in value; and coal a reduction of 36 per cent in quantity and 52 per cent in value.

The tables which follow show the weight and value of the principal articles imported and exported for which weights can be determined and the percentage of increase or reduction when comparing the full calendar year 1921 with the calendar year 1920.

Weights and values of United States foreign trade, 1920 and 1921.

THE MUSCLE SHOALS PLANT.

Mr. HEFLIN obtained the floor.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have no objection to a roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Harris	Nicholson	Spencer
Brandegee	Harrison	Norbeck	Stanfield
Broussard	Heflin	Norris	Stanley
Bursum	Johnson	Oddie	Sterling
Cameron	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Sutherland
Capper	Kellogg	Page	Townsend
Caraway	Kendrick	Phipps	Underwood
Colt	King	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Culberson	Ladd	Poindexter	Walsh, Mont.
Cummins	Lodge	Pomerene	Warren
Fernald	McCormick	Rawson	Watson, Ga.
Fletcher	McKellar	Reed	Weller
France	McKinley	Robinson	Williams
Gerry	McNary	Sheppard	Willis
Gooding	Nelson	Shields
Hale	Newberry	Smith

Mr. PAGE. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM] because of a death in his family.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] is detained on official business.

I was also requested to announce that the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] are absent on official business of the Senate at a hearing of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

I was also requested to announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] are detained at a hearing before the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. TRAMMELL] is necessarily absent on account of serious illness in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, two or three days ago an article appeared in the Washington Post stating that Representative KAHN of California, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in the House, had stated to Mr. Mayo, a representative of Mr. Ford, that the Muscle Shoals proposition was in such a tangle that it would probably take years to untangle it, and that a commission should be appointed to handle the matter.

Mr. President, I have talked to some of the Senators since that suggestion was made, and I am glad to say that none of them, so far as I know, has agreed that such a course was necessary. It occurs to me that this is an attempt to delay final action upon the offer of Mr. Ford to take over and operate that plant; that it is an attempt to dally, delay, and postpone the consideration of the proposition by Congress.

To take the matter out of the jurisdiction of Congress, to which it has been submitted by the Secretary of War, and to put it in the hands of a commission, would be, it seems to me, useless and unfair to the Members of Congress, and unfair as well to the people whom they represent in the law-making body of the Nation. Nearly every day farmer organizations, chambers of commerce, and various other organizations in the South and West are adopting resolutions urging upon Congress the wisdom, importance, and necessity of accepting the Ford offer.

Mr. President, I can understand how some Senators felt for a while when it was not clear that Mr. Ford was going to manufacture fertilizers at Muscle Shoals; that they should hesitate about indorsing his offer until all doubt on this point was removed; but Mr. Ford's representatives have stated before the Military Affairs Committee of the House that he is willing to bind himself to manufacture fertilizers at Muscle Shoals, and willing to make the contract specifically provide for that very thing. When that is done, I do not see why we should not proceed to accept his offer.

Some few days ago the Senate referred—and I think properly—the Ford offer to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, of which I am a member. I then took up with the members of the committee the matter of paying a visit to Muscle Shoals, of having the committee go down there in person and see for themselves this marvelous power site in the Tennessee Valley in my State. The committee have agreed to go; the Senate has provided that it shall go, and not only that the committee shall go but that other Senators who desire shall accompany the committee. That committee's visit, Mr. President, is waiting, for the time being, upon action upon the four-power treaty. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the leader upon the other side, I understand, does not want the members of the committee to leave until that treaty is disposed of; but as soon as it is disposed of the committee, I think, will immediately visit Muscle Shoals, and I feel that when it does so there will no longer be any doubt or misgivings in the mind of any Senator who goes as to the wisdom of completing the Muscle Shoals project or as to the advisability of accepting the Ford offer. When Senators see for themselves just what the Government has already done and realizes that its expenditure of $100,000,000 is doing no good whatever, and is not only doing no good but doing harm, because the money already invested will be a total loss unless the project is completed; and as the project now stands it obstructs the river and makes it unnavigable at that place. Prior to the construction of the dam up to the surface of the water the river was navigable for eight months in the year; but since the dam has been in part constructed the river can not be used for the purposes of navigation, so there it lies unfit for use for power purposes and an obstruction to navigation in the Tennessee River.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a very mournful editorial from the Chattanooga News. The writer has a tone of despair in his editorial. He feels that an effort is being made to junk the whole project at Muscle Shoals and that nothing will be done to complete this great project. I do not agree with him. I will not agree with him until I see this Congress deliberately refuse, upon a record vote, to proceed with that great project. Certain interests have done everything that they could to prevent the completion of the great dam at Muscle Shoals. We were told that it was not worth while. Somebody has been fighting the completion of this Muscle Shoals project all the time. A propaganda has been carried on here. I have received letters from various concerns—all the Senators have received them; Members of the House have received these letters—and this propaganda has been carried on by interests that do not want Henry Ford to get the Muscle Shoals plant.

I think the offer that Mr. Ford has made is the best offer that has been made. I do not blame any other concern for wanting Muscle Shoals, because it is a power site of such tremendous capacity and possibilities that I can understand how anybody who wanted to develop power should like to have it. There is an opinion prevailing, however, that a movement is on foot to tie up this plant and prevent its development because it will, when completed, come into competition with some other concern. In this editorial the Chattanooga News goes on to say that the commission suggested by Mr. KAHN is the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of Agriculture. The Secretary of the Treasury is in a manufacturing business himself. He owns an aluminum plant—the only one, I think, in the United States—and it has been said that Ford might want to manufacture something in competition with him, and therefore he would not favor allowing Ford to have Muscle Shoals. We have been told that the Secretary of War thinks more of the offer made by the Alabama Power Co. than he does of the one made by Henry Ford. If that is true, there are two out of the three on the suggested commission who are unfriendly to Ford to start with. One can not outvote two.

The Secretary of Agriculture, I believe, would be influenced by the demands of the farmers of the South and West. I think he is already friendly to Ford's offer; but in the absence of any fixed opinion that he may have upon the subject, being the Secretary of Agriculture as he is, I believe he would do that which was best for the agricultural interests of the country as he saw it, and that is why I believe he would favor the Ford offer. The Ford offer is distinctly in favor of the farmers of the country. They want the Ford offer accepted.

Another thing, Mr. President: The Fertilizer Trust of the United States is bitterly opposed to Henry Ford getting the Muscle Shoals plant, because he would manufacture fertilizer, and that would bring down the price they now charge, and millions of farmers in the South and West would profit by that very thing. The Fertilizer Trust wants to be let alone and permitted to have a monopoly of fertilizer production in the United States.

Senators, that raises a very nice question. Are we going to be dominated by a power like that? We ought to do that which is best for the people. We ought not to serve a special interest; and I repeat that I do not believe that that power is going to be able to control the Senate. I do not believe that it will succeed in the House. I do not see how any Member can excuse his vote to pigeonhole the offer of Henry Ford and stop this thing, whether it be done right out in the open on a roll call or whether it be done in a roundabout way by putting it in the hands of a commission, which, in my judgment, would mean the death knell of the whole thing.

I am opposed to appointing any commission to take up this matter. With the light that we will have from the hearings in the House committee and the hearings that we propose to conduct in the Senate Agricultural Committee after our visit to Muscle Shoals, I want the House and the Senate to act upon this question; and why should we not do so? Certainly 435 Members of the House and 96 Senators, representing all the people and all the varied interests of the people, would be better prepared to pass upon it and be better prepared to render a just and fair verdict than somebody who has interests somewhere that might have competition from Henry Ford when this plant is completed and in operation down at Muscle Shoals. There seems to be an effort to confuse and complicate the situation, Mr. President.

I want to suggest to Senators that we have had a good deal on paper about people who have been unemployed getting employment. It has been mostly on paper. Millions are out of employment yet; but there is nothing that this Congress can do that would do more to take care of half a million people than to turn over this project to Henry Ford, who would commence work within 10 days after the bid is accepted and the matter is turned over to him. He will put to work down there 100,000 people. With their families that will take care of from four to five hundred thousand people.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to my friend from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I am very much interested in the Senator's discussion of this matter. I am a member of the Agricultural Committee, and was a member of the committee which went into the Muscle Shoals matter two years ago. I am quite in tune with the statement of the Senator from Alabama, but I want to know of the Senator, who has a like sympathy with this legislation, whether he has studied both the proposal of Ford and the proposal of the Alabama Power Co., and whether he is now speaking with regard to the Ford proposal as the better of the two?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator is stating the reasons why he believes the Ford proposition is better than the other one, or, I might say, the other two proposals?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; I am in favor of the Ford proposal, in the first place, because of the statement made by his representatives before the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, in which he stated that he would bind himself to manufacture fertilizer, and the Alabama Power Co. does not do that at all.

Mr. McNARY. That is not the only element to be considered in the whole transaction, however.

Mr. HEFLIN. But one of the most important ones.

Mr. McNARY. As I recall the proposition of the Alabama Power Co., they are to make a fertilizer, but not a complete fertilizer. The fixation of atmospheric nitrogen does not produce a fertilizer in itself. It is only one of the ingredients that go to make a fertilizer applicable to use as plant food.

Mr. HEFLIN. But let me say to my friend from Oregon that Ford is going to make both ingredients, a completed fertilizer.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, will my colleague yield a moment?

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Did I understand the Senator from Oregon to say that the proposal of the Alabama Power Co. contemplated the manufacture of nitrates?

Mr. McNARY. If not, its proposal, as I recall—I am speaking only from memory; I have not looked at it for some time—contemplates the contribution to the Government of sufficient power to manufacture full-capacity fertilizer at nitrate plant No. 2, which would be the same thing.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have the proposition in my mind very clearly, and if the Senator will allow me I should like to correct his recollection.

Mr. McNARY. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The proposal of the Alabama Power Co. relates entirely to Dam No. 2. The only connection it has with fertilizer at all is that it proposes to turn over to the Government, for the use of the nitrate plant, 100,000 secondary horsepower; but it has no connection outside of that with the nitrate plant at all, whereas the Ford proposition is the only pending proposition that really contemplates the actual manufacture of nitrates for the manufacture of fertilizer and also contemplates the manufacture of fertilizer.

Mr. HEFLIN. I thank my colleague for his contribution to this discussion. He has stated the proposition correctly.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, in reply to the suggestion made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] to the effect that nitrates are only one ingredient of fertilizer, I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that nitrate is one of the essential elements, the predominant element, in all plant foods, and, curiously enough, the only one for which America is dependent upon outside sources of supply.

It is the essential ingredient. The fact of the matter is that when it comes to the production of grain the crops are almost entirely dependent upon nitrogen. With nitrogen alone wheat, oats, corn, and all other cereals can be made to produce a maximum, and yet we are dependent upon the nitrate beds of Chile to satisfy the enormously increasing demands of agriculture for that ingredient. We have certain by-products and certain limited sources in this country from which we can draw, but they are totally inadequate. Science has discovered a method of extracting nitrogen from the air which has passed its experimental stage and is now a commercial fact. It is for the purpose of taking the great, inexhaustible force of our water power in this country and connecting it with the inexhaustible supply of nitrogen in the air, thus combining these two natural and inexhaustible sources for the benefit of agriculture, that the farmers of this country and all the seers who have any vision of the future are insisting that this great water power, right in the center of the fertilizing-using section of America, shall be consecrated and devoted to the production of that element upon which this Nation must depend for an adequate supply of food.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama permit me?

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. I do not concede that the Senator from South Carolina speaks for all the farmers. I speak for one. I know there are certain cereals which require nitrate such as is taken from the atmosphere. There are other lines of vegetation and other crops which require potassium and ammonium, neither of which is manufactured there.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. McNARY. Let me finish this and then I will yield. The nitrate made at nitrate plant No. 2 is more useful in time of war than in time of peace because it is both a propellant and an explosive; but it is suitable and one of the necessary and primary elements in the manufacture of a fertilizer. I am not opposing it on that ground. I am not opposing it at all. I am simply making an inquiry. There must be some changes made there. As shown by the testimony, the Haber process, with which we are not very conversant, is better than the arc process and the cyanamid process now being employed at Muscle Shoals. Those are factors which must be taken into account, in my opinion, when considering these various propositions or offers to acquire this property from the Government which have been made.

Then I say to the Senator again, as I recall the statistics, we use in this country nearly 8,000,000 tons of fertilizer per annum, and the best they are offering down there is 100,000 tons. It is like a grain of sand in a wheelbarrow; it amounts to nothing.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

Mr. McNARY. Just a moment. I want to make another observation. It has been demonstrated that at Niagara Falls the horsepower unit costs about forty or fifty dollars, and if I am correctly informed it runs considerably over a hundred down there. I am wondering whether, in the production of a fertilizer, the plant at Muscle Shoals can compete with the plant at Niagara Falls, just across the line from Canada. Those are things which, I point out to the Senator from South Carolina, must be taken into consideration in appraising these various proposals made by Ford and by the Alabama Power Co. and perhaps considered in connection with the possible operation of the plant by the Government.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I wanted to correct the Senator when he was making a statement about the number of tons used in this country. He said they can make 100,000 tons at Muscle Shoals. The Senator forgets that commercial fertilizer is mixed up with the basic ingredients. One hundred thousand tons of nitrogen, 45 to 50 per cent pure, will make as many times more tons of commercial fertilizer as the ingredient in the fertilizer is less than the per cent of pure nitrogen; in other words, the completed, balanced fertilizer, according to the Department of Agriculture, is denominated, in the technical phrase, 8-3-3, or 8 per cent phosphoric acid, 3 per cent potash, and 3 per cent nitrogen, or ammonium. The Senator said a moment ago that there were other ingredients, potash and ammonium. Ammonium and nitrogen are convertible terms. One is simply a manifestation of the other in a different form. So, if they produced 100,000 tons of nitrogen down there, there would be a production of at least 300,000 tons of commercial fertilizer.

If the power at Muscle Shoals is used for the production of nitrogen, no man is able to tell the amount which could ultimately be produced. The Senator is a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and there came before us experts who testified that the Germans had a process by which, with the same power, they could increase tenfold the production of nitrogen.

It is not a question of the process. It is a question of our deciding that that great power shall be used for that purpose. I take it that our chemists and our men versed in the discovery of chemical processes are quite equal to any in the world, and since this thing has been established upon a commercial basis at Niagara Falls the Cyanamid Co. has demonstrated that it can produce it there and ship it to the South in competition with the Chilean nitrate. The processes are being improved every day, just as the processes of the application of steam to locomotives are being improved. It is a feasible thing, and it suggests its own development, and is being developed, just as steam suggests its own development. It is only a question of time until every water power in this country will be used, in part at least, for the production of this commercial fertilizer wherever agriculture requires it, and it is to the shame of America that we have allowed the farmers of this country to be exploited entirely by private interests.

I have no quarrel with private interests, but I do say that the great disorganized mass of our farmers, who, by the very nature of their calling and business, can not organize into the compact form in which commercial production organizes itself, has to have special treatment if we propose for them to stand up in the markets of the world and get the wherewithal to feed the nations of the world, and this is a beginning which I hail with delight, that this Government shall see to it that the natural force, the inexhaustible force, of our water power, shall be used, in combination with the inexhaustible supply of nitrogen, for the perpetual fertilization of the fields of this country. I think everything should be made subsidiary to that, and we should not stand up and quibble as to whether Henry Ford or the Alabama Power Co. shall develop this great power and convert it into something which will help agriculture. We should concentrate our minds on devoting it entirely to the production of this essential and indispensable article.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I agree with all the Senator has said regarding the great value of the use of fertilizer. There is no use discussing the need the country has for something to stimulate the growth of trees and the production of additional crops. The point I am trying to develop is this: Are the Senators on the Democratic side willing to accept the Ford offer before the Senate has made an investigation?

Mr. SMITH. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. McNARY. I have not concluded.

Mr. SMITH. It is not a question of whether we should accept one offer or another——

Mr. McNARY. The Senator talks about the processes. I repeat, American scientists have not yet discovered the secrets of the Germans in the development of the Haber process, the one to which the Senator referred a few moments ago, without naming it. But that has nothing to do with the question. We are making in one plant one kind of a fertilizer, which, I say, is more useful in time of war than in time of peace. But why the repetition that we should accept the Ford offer before we have studied any of the offers?

The Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has authorized certain members to go and visualize the plants and the water power and to consider these various offers, which do not parallel themselves. I am not speaking for one over another, but I do know that under the Ford proposition the Government will put up a great amount of money, and under the other the Government will put up no money, and in either instance the fertilizer is made there under the processes which were designed by the Government during the war. So I simply say, Are we going to prejudge this situation because of the talismanic effect of the name of Ford? Has he made a promise outside that is not in the contract? Why should there be statements made to-day, as there have been in the newspapers, that there is only one proposition, and that that is the Ford proposition, when we have not made an investigation?

I want to see that plant operated. With very few Republicans, I stood on this floor and cast my vote two years ago in favor of the Government operating the plant, and I am still for that; but I want the Government to select and fix upon the best proposition which can be had. It may be essential and better for the Government to operate the plant at Muscle Shoals, or even abandon it; but let us be open minded and not judge the matter until we have had an opportunity for calm and judicious investigation.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH. The only remark I wish to make is that I am not standing here pleading for the Ford offer, or any other, but I am pleading that, no matter what offer we do accept, it shall be upon the basis that this power shall be developed with the object in view of producing this element of fertilizer. If Mr. Ford makes the best offer, I am for him; but I am for those who are going to use this for the purpose of making the ingredients which are so essential. It is not a question with me as to whose offer is accepted; it is a question of having the contract drawn so that there will be no mistake about it, and if Ford's contract is sufficient, that will be all right; and if he can not take it at that figure, let us get some one who can; and if we can not get anyone, the Government itself ought to develop it. The people of America are paying enough each year to the Government of Chile as a royalty on fertilizer to build the Muscle Shoals dam twice over. We are allowing the farmers of this country to pay out of their own pockets $11 a ton for Chilean nitrate and thus support the Chilean Government. Our farmers pay enough for their nitrate to build the Muscle Shoals dam twice over.

I want to say in closing that it is a commentary on Henry Ford that he has so conducted himself in the manufacture and sale of the things he furnishes the public that he has the confidence and respect of the American people as a dealer. That is a commentary he ought to be proud of, and to my mind it will go with him through his life.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I would say to the Senator from Alabama that if this is interfering wth the course of his remarks, I can just as well say what I have to say at some other time.

Mr. HEFLIN. I was going to yield to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] briefly; but the Senator from Nebraska may proceed now if he desires.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will go on after the Senator from Nebraska concludes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, something has been said by both the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the effect that it may be that when we consider all that is involved in the Muscle Shoals proposition we will reach the conclusion that the Government ought to run the plant. I want to say to the Senators that I am now working on a bill with that in view; not that I am necessarily going to support it but I want to place before the committee which is going to investigate this subject all avenues of investigation.

I myself am not aware of any prejudice I have against any of the people who have made application, and as far as I know none of the members of the committee have any. I was with the Senator from Oregon two years ago, and voted for the further development by the Government of Muscle Shoals, and that is a different proposition, Mr. President, from what it would be if we were just entering upon the Muscle Shoals project. We probably would have been opposed to the Government entering into the development of that great power under any ordinary circumstances, and if the Government had not expended the large amount of money it already has expended and carried on the work to such an extent I do not think there would be very many of us who would advocate the Government going ahead with it; but we ought to consider Muscle Shoals, it seems to me, from the standpoint of the amount of money that has already been expended by the Government and the amount of beneficial work which has been done there.

If we go no further with it, we shall throw all that money away. So I want to consider it from the basic proposition that we start with Muscle Shoals as it is now. The question whether we should develop it, whether we should lease it, and upon what terms it should be leased, if leased at all, ought to be based upon the fact that we have already done a great deal of work and have partially completed the work that is necessary for the development of power there. So even though that is all thrown away and we go on the theory that we are going to throw it away, it seems to me we should base our proposition for a return, if we have any return, on a percentage basis, upon what it will cost from now on to finish it, perhaps adding to that what the improvement would sell for if we wanted to dispose of it.

There is no doubt but that we have spent a great deal more money on Muscle Shoals up to the present time than we would spend if we went into the business of developing it now, or it may be that we never would enter upon it under ordinary conditions. But that is water that has passed the wheel. We have done it. We have spent the money. We have the work so far completed, and we ought to take it now on the basis of whether we want to throw that all away or whether we ought to complete it. I think the committee and the Senate, in considering all the propositions that have come or that may hereafter come from Mr. Ford, from the Alabama Power Co., or from anybody else, ought to have with them the proposition of how much it will cost for the Government to develop it, for the Government to operate it, and whether that can be done as a practical proposition.

The bill for which I voted and of which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] spoke, which was defeated in the House, but which passed the Senate, was a bill prepared by the War Department, submitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and they had extensive hearings on it, of a very intelligent nature, too. They favored the bill, made a favorable report, and the Senate passed the bill. I have always thought and I said at the time that I thought that the bill was very faulty in some respects. It gave an opportunity, it seemed to me, for politics to get into the management, the control, and the operation of the plant.

I did not have the opportunity then to prepare what I wanted to prepare by way of a substitute for that bill. I expect to do that this time. I am going to present to the committee, though it may never be presented to the Senate, a bill which will provide for the development of this power by the Government of the United States, for its operation by governmental corporation, always, as all of us want to do, making provision for the production of fertilizer. That is the main object involved, and yet I do not want to tie the country or a lessee down to a proposition that he will have to do this for 100 years. It may be that in much less than 100 years we will have processes which will be so simple and so easy for the manufacture of fertilizer that we will want to use this power for some other purpose. I do not want to tie the hands of the Government for 100 years.

I think there is a growing sentiment, and it is natural, too, over the country generally, particularly the Southern States and the Eastern States, where they stand in need of fertilizer, that we ought to accept Henry Ford's proposition; but the resolutions that come to us, the decision that has been reached by thousands and hundreds of thousands of our people that we ought to accept that proposition, while made with perfect honesty and in absolute good faith, come from people who have never examined, and most of them probably have never even read, Henry Ford's offer.

It is done because they have confidence in Henry Ford and Henry Ford's proposition is going to last 100 years, and if we give full faith to all the confidence that anybody may place in Henry Ford—and I am one who places a great deal of confidence in him—we have to admit that Henry Ford, although he is a mighty good man, will probably not live 100 years, and that, like the rest of us, he has to die. When he dies he will not be able, from the place where he goes, to operate the Muscle Shoals plant.

Mr. KING. He ought to live as long as his cars live.

Mr. NORRIS. Some of them live a good while.

Mr. KING. Yes; the "flivver" lives on forever.

Mr. NORRIS. So it seems to me we must face this proposition squarely and take away from it all sentiment. We ought to put in the contract and in the bond what we expect to be done by Henry Ford's corporation or anybody else's corporation. Because some man is a good man now and for his own reputation will do the honest thing is no reason why we should not bind that man down by contract as to just what is going to be demanded.

I do not express any opinion as to who has made the best offer, neither do I express any opinion that I will myself favor the bill I propose to introduce, but I want the committee and afterwards the Senate and through the Senate the country, particularly the eastern and southern parts of the country, to have an opportunity when it is all over to pass on it with intelligence, with absolute fairness, without any bias and without any prejudice.

I think I come from a section of the country that is unprejudiced, because so far as fertilizer is concerned, which is the principal object of the development of this project, the country from which I come does not know what fertilizer is as a rule. We have soil that does not need fertilizer. God has made it good enough so we can get along without the Alabama Power Co., without Henry Ford, and without any other institution making fertilizer. We can raise corn for 40 years on the same ground, getting a good crop every year, and every year will bring a yield almost as great as the so-called soil that needs fertilizer would bring every year for 40 years. So we are unprejudiced. We realize that the East and the South need fertilizer and must have it, and because they need it we need it and the country needs it. Something that will make us independent of foreign domination in the fertilizer field and something that will make the people who have to buy the fertilizer independent of the so-called Fertilizer Trust ought to be brought about now since we are considering the great water-power project that will make us able to do that if it is handled right.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I agree with my good friend from Nebraska that we ought to set out fully in the contract just what is to be done by Mr. Ford or anybody else with regard to making fertilizer. I want fertilizer manufactured; that is the main thing; but the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the Senator from Nebraska, will not favor, I do not believe he will favor, putting the project in the hands of a commission, as was suggested by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in the House, composed of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of Agriculture. I am hopeful that the Senator from Nebraska will not favor anything of that sort, and I do not believe he will. Let us have Congress thrash it out as we ought to thrash it out. I think that we are capable of settling the matter in a fair and just way.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I was very much interested in what the Senator from Nebraska, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, had to say about this matter. As is usual and customary with him, he has stated the case fairly and justly. I feel sure that the investigation which his committee proposes to make will be the fair investigation which he suggested in his remarks.

I would like to call the attention of the Senate, though, if the Senator from Alabama will permit me, to the fact that Henry Ford's offer is the only offer that means the manufacture of a completed fertilizer. His offer does provide for that. I call the attention of the Senator from Alabama to the further fact that within a stone's throw of Muscle Shoals, of this great power plant, are the great beds of phosphate, practically inexhaustible in their supply, which can be used and which is used commonly as an ingredient of a completed fertilizer. The fact that those inexhaustible beds of phosphate are within reach of this plant that will be established there, taken together with Ford's agreement to manufacture a completed fertilizer, makes it peculiarly a splendid place for such a plant and for such an enterprise.

Mr. HEFLIN. I thank the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes, with pleasure.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I would like to ask, in connection with the statement made a moment ago with reference to Henry Ford, whether it is known what huge profits he has been making from the American people on his products?

Mr. HEFLIN. He sets out in the proposed contract that he will not make over 8 per cent.

Mr. MCKELLAR. It is fixed in the contract itself.

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. ODDIE. I am referring to what he has done in the past in regard to the profits on his products. I think an investigation was made before the Interstate Commerce Commission a few years ago in regard to the cost of the Ford car which might be interesting to study.

Mr. HEFLIN. I know what he did during the war—that he made supplies for the Government during the war at cost. He did not charge any profit at all. That is what he did when his country was involved in the World War.

But, as the Senator from Nebraska said, people have confidence in Ford. They know that he is a man who does things. He learned of this great project at Muscle Shoals and he invited Mr. Edison to go with him to see it. Both of them marveled at the wonderful power site which they beheld when they arrived at Muscle Shoals. Both came away delighted, well pleased with the situation, and both said that it would be an outrage not to develop and complete the proposition. Henry Ford said, "It can be made into a great plant to manufacture fertilizer for the farmers of the country, and I am willing to undertake to do it, and I will make an offer to the Government."

As the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has well said, there are hundreds of millions of dollars in that investment doing nothing, lost to the Government unless we pick it up and carry it on to completion. If we do appropriate a little more money—it will not take anything like the amount we have already spent—we will then save what we have expended, and we will put the proposition on its feet and in running order, and turn it over to a man who will pay the Government interest and a certain proportion of the principal, and who proposes to operate it and manufacture fertilizer and give employment to tens of thousands of people. Why, Mr. President, I do not know of any one single project that would do more good now to this army of unemployed roaming the country than to pluck out 100,000 of them and put them to work down there at good wages, enabling them to take care of their families. That of itself would justify Congress in going through with the matter at an early date.

The coal supply is being exhausted year by year. There is only so much coal in the earth, and we are disposing of it and consuming it by the millions of tons each year. The operation of this plant at Muscle Shoals and the completion of the dam and the power it will provide will run machinery enough to save millions and hundreds of millions of tons of coal every year. That is an item worth while. Not only that, but to-day, as the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has pointed out, we are dependent upon a foreign country for our nitrate for fertilizer. Not only that, but we are dependent upon a foreign country for our nitrate for munitions in time of war. Think of it. The farmers of the country must go to Chile for fertilizers to produce the wherewith to feed and clothe the world.

This great Government, the richest in the world, must go to Chile for its nitrate supply in time of war, and here is an opportunity for Congress to provide a plant to give us nitrates in case of war; to furnish fertilizers in time of peace; to give employment to thousands and tens of thousands of people who are now roaming the streets idle and hungry, and to develop a project in which the Government has already invested $100,000,000.

Mr. President, I want to say to my good friend from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] that we do need the fertilizers in the cotton-growing States. Cotton takes plant food out of the ground more rapidly, I believe, than does nearly any other plant under the sun. My friend lives in a State in the great fertile West which produces grain and hay in abundance, and cattle, but in the section where we grow cotton year in and year out the strength of the soil is extracted, and we have to replace it by plant food in the form of fertilizer. So we do need fertilizers.

In normal times we produce two-thirds of the cotton supply of the world. We have a monopoly of the production of short-staple white cotton. We need the fertilizer; we have got to have it; and yet we are to-day held up; our farmers have no say whatever in the price which they shall pay for fertilizer. The price is fixed by the Fertilizer Trust, and the farmers of the country are absolutely at the mercy of that trust. When the project at Muscle Shoals is completed and in operation our farmers will be freed from the clutches of the Fertilizer Trust. I repeat, we shall save coal; we will be freed from dependence upon a foreign country for nitrates in time of war; people will be put to work who are unemployed; and the hundred millions of dollars which we have already invested will be saved.

Senators, I can not see how Congress can refuse to act favorably upon the offer of Mr. Ford. I am not asking that it shall be acted upon now. My good friend from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] previously voted for this project, so did the the Senator from Nebraska and three others on the other side of the Chamber. I am not seeking to have the matter passed on before an investigation shall be had; but I do want to bring it to the attention of the Senate—and that was my purpose—and to enter a protest against a move being made to take the matter out of the hands of the two bodies which are investigating it—the Senate and the House—and lodge it in the hands of a commission the majority of which is already hostile to the project.

I want to bring to the attention of the Senate the fact that the farmers of the West have passed resolutions in a number of their organizations indorsing the Ford project. They have done the same thing throughout the South. I want to bring to the attention of the Senate just how they feel about this matter, and to state that Mr. Ford, through his agents in the hearings in the other House, has said that he was willing to bind himself to manufacture fertilizer. That is the main object, Mr. President, which our people have in completing the plant—to furnish cheaper fertilizers, and to free our people from the clutches of the Fertilizer Trust.

My good friend from Oregon made some reference to the plant at Niagara Falls. I want to say, Mr. President, that I very distinctly remember about the history of that matter. That very plant would have been on the Coosa River, in Alabama, but for a veto that Mr. Taft placed upon a bill which I succeeded in getting through the other House when I was a Member of that body. It was proposed to build that plant at Lock 18 on the Coosa River. The bill had passed the Senate and we got it through the House, but the bill was vetoed. When it was vetoed, America lost that plant. It went to Canada and is now operating in Canada because we declined to set it up in the United States. The waters of the Coosa River were then going to waste and serving no good purpose. We turned down that proposition and a foreign Government is now making money out of that great concern and enjoying its blessings and benefits. I hope, Mr. President, that the same fate does not await the Muscle Shoals proposition. The difference between the two plants is this: The Government had not expended any money on the project that went to Niagara Falls, but on the Muscle Shoals project we have expended $100,000,000. Here is an opportunity to save the $100,000,000 already expended and to complete this great project and enable the farmers of America to obtain cheap fertilizer. The Ford offer is full of promise and possibilities to agriculture in the South and West.

CONSOLIDATION OF NATIONAL FOREST LANDS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 490) to consolidate national-forest lands, which were, on page 1, line 10, after the word "land," to insert "in the same State"; and on page 2, line 10, to strike out the words "in which" and insert "within whose exterior boundaries."

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator in regard to this bill. I think I understand what the bill is, but I should like to make sure. From the statement of the amendments of the House it appears that the bill is in general terms.

Mr. SMOOT. It is a general bill, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. It proposes a general law in regard to the exchange of lands?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; of lands within forest reservations for lands outside. It only applies to the exchange of lands owned by an individual within a forest reserve for lands outside of the reserve of equal value and of like character.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. The bill proposes to give authority to exchange private lands for other lands without the forest reserves?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; that is, land within a forest reserve may be exchanged for lands outside. It is only for administrative purposes. We have passed dozens and dozens, yes, I think a hundred such bills.

Mr. NORRIS. The bills to which the Senator refers affected individual cases only, while this is a general bill.

Mr. SMOOT. This is a general bill to apply in such cases. I will say to the Senator it is not like the Idaho bill, which passed in relation to a great block of land which belonged to the State.

This bill affects individual lands within forest reserves. In such cases where the Government for administrative purposes desires to exchange other lands for the lands within forest reserves, in order to have the reserves entirely in Government ownership, it can give lands of a similar character and of a like value in exchange.

Mr. NORRIS. If this bill is passed, the officials of the department will have authority to act in every case where such application is made.

Mr. SMOOT. In every case; that is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. What report are they required to make?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no requirement as to report being made to Congress; but the proper officials will make examination just as examination has always been made heretofore in individual cases.

Mr. NORRIS. It will not be necessary for Congress to act in individual cases hereafter if this bill shall pass?

Mr. SMOOT. Not if this bill shall pass.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me the danger would be that it gives general power to the departmental officials that might be subject to abuse.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not see how the provisions of the bill could be abused, because it is guarded in every way. Exchange can only be made for land of the same character as the land which is within the forest reserve, and the exchange is entirely in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior. I am quite sure that there has hardly ever been a bill which has come here and been recommended by the department in individual cases which has not been passed.

Mr. NORRIS. I think, as a rule, that is true.

Mr. SMOOT. Such individual bills have occupied space in the RECORD, and taken the time of Congress in the past.

Mr. NORRIS. I am in favor of such exchanges. I think it would be desirable from the standpoint of the Government to have all of the lands in the forest reserve owned by the Government. The bill would have that tendency, and it is a good tendency; but to clothe some one with absolute power to make any trade that he wants to in a real-estate transaction it seems to me is a dangerous proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think the Senator could go that far under the provisions of the bill. It gives the Secretary power to make these exchanges as to the privately owned lands in a forest reserve. The Senator knows that where, years ago, before ever a forest reserve was created, an individual had a homestead, and has lived on that homestead since long before the forest reserve was created, when a forest reserve is created about him it robs him of nearly all the chances of getting any value out of that land.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I agree with that. As I said to the Senator. I think the object is a very worthy one; but if the matter should fall into the hands of incompetent persons, particularly when their work is not to be reviewed by anybody else, I can see how they might give very valuable lands to favorites who had homesteads within a forest reserve in carrying out the trade, and the Government might get the worst of the deal every time.

Mr. SMOOT. If I thought there was the least chance of any Secretary of the Interior ever taking any advantage of the Government in such a manner, I would not support the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. The Secretary of the Interior, of course, will not be able to look into every case personally. It will be some underofficial, some clerk, who will do it.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is a member of the Public Lands and Surveys Committee, and he knows that we have never yet acted favorably on a private bill unless we had a favorable report from the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. NORRIS. I know that.

Mr. SMOOT. We never would recommend the passage of one, nor would I try to have one passed unless it had a favorable report. We put that power in the hands of the Secretary in order to do away in the future with the necessity of passing many, many bills such as we have passed heretofore; and the bill had the unanimous report of the committee. I will say to the Senator that there was not a single vote against it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am interested in this matter, because I have bills that I have been trying to get out of the Public Lands Committee. As I understand, this is general legislation that will obviate hereafter any of this legislation that we have been passing in the form of individual bills relating to a particular forest reserve.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This applies to all the forest reserves and permits the exchange of private lands in the reserve for lands of a similar character outside?

Mr. SMOOT. That is all there is to it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah confer about this matter with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY]. He usually knows a good deal about these forest lands.

Mr. SMOOT. There is not any question that the Senator from Oregon is in favor of this bill. He had a couple of bills of a similar character passed here the other day.

Mr. MCKELLAR. He is estopped then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The amendments were concurred in.

COMMERCE AND LABOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10559) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on behalf of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. SPENCER, and Mr. HARRIS conferees on the part of the Senate.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back with amendments the bill (H. R. 10663) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 545) thereon. I wish to give notice that I shall endeavor to call up the bill for consideration to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

OLD GOVERNMENT BUILDING IN BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (S. 3258) to provide for the renting of the old Government building in Birmingham, Ala., reported it without amendment.

FEDERAL RESERVE BANK AT ATLANTA.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, several days ago I introduced a resolution to investigate the Federal reserve bank at Atlanta which has been guilty of sending out a speech of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] containing several attacks upon me and criticizing my position in relation to the deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board. The first motion in reference to the resolution, which was to refer it to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, was defeated by a majority of one vote.

Then the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] made a motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Banking and Currency. I protested against that course being taken and stated that I feared that the resolution would be put to sleep in that committee; I knew that at least some members of that committee would not enthuse over early action on the matter involved in my resolution. I have waited, Mr. President, some two or three days, and I have not heard a word from it. No member of that committee has risen in his place to report the resolution back to the Senate.

It is a plain proposition; there is nothing intricate about it. I charged in that resolution that the Federal reserve bank in Atlanta obtained the speech referred to, had it printed, circulated it, and wrote with it a letter calling on the recipient of the letter to say how he felt on the subject before he read the speech and how he felt on the subject after he read the speech and calling on him to make comment. One of the officials of the bank at Atlanta came out and stated, yes, they had done that, and a newspaper man down there secured a copy of the letter. I had that letter read in this Chamber, and it is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD where the committee should have no trouble finding it.

I read into the RECORD portions of a letter from the president of a bank in my State charging that they were sending out that speech, accompanied by that letter, and asking certain questions, and the banker added that he thought they were doing wrong; that the bank ought not to circulate the speech of one Senator attacking another or of one Member of the House attacking another; that the bank was getting into politics and expending illegally the money belonging to the bank and to the Government, and it ought not to be permitted.

Mr. President, those are all the facts that are necessary. The bank officials can not deny that they have done the things which I set out in that resolution. It is stated in the resolution that the Senate views with alarm and disapproval the attempt of one of these great banks to go into politics in this fashion, and that the Senate desires to keep them out of politics. Certainly every Senator in this body will agree with me on that. Then, why not report the resolution out? Why keep it in the committee any longer? I send to the Secretary's desk an editorial, which I ask to have read in my time, from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of Mar. 2, 1922.]

RESERVE BANK IN POLITICS.

Senator HEFLIN, of Alabama, who for months has charged the administration of the Federal reserve bank system with responsibility for our present business depression and widespread unemployment through its drastic policy of deflation, has been seeking in vain to bring about a Senate investigation. On one occasion his resolution failed by one vote; at other times, as he has revived it, the objection of some Member has prevented consideration.

Whether the Federal reserve system's deflation policy did or did not produce the present dull business situation, or whether, as Senator GLASS contended in a speech in its defense, the deflation policy headed off a worse collapse, we do not pretend to judge; but we do hold with Senator HEFLIN that the intrusion of the Federal reserve system into politics through the circulation in Alabama of Senator GLASS's speech, coupled with certain questions calling for answers, is a highly condemnable performance.

In sending out Senator GLASS's speech to banks and merchants in Senator HEFLIN's State the Federal reserve bank at Atlanta requested replies to these questions:

1. Before having read Senator GLASS's speech what was your opinion of the value of the Federal reserve system to our country?
2. What is your opinion after reading his presentation?
3. Do you now have a better understanding of the functions and operations of the Federal reserve system than you had before?
4. Any other comment you care to make is invited and will be welcomed.

Such a questionnaire can have no other primary purpose than that of inviting Senator HEFLIN's constituents to repudiate his position. And if there are any Alabama bankers who feel as Senator HEFLIN does, being at the same time dependent upon the Federal reserve bank at Atlanta for their discounts, what are they to do with these questions? Must they answer frankly and make themselves unpopular with an institution that has it in its power to ruin them? Or must they consider the welfare of their stockholders and send in some lying answers?

An administration of the Federal reserve system that practices or tolerates so flagrant a perversion of its power as this might easily be capable of all the other abuses charged against it.

Mr. HEFLIN. I now send to the desk an editorial from the Manufacturers' Record, and wish all of it read except the part I have marked out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

[From the Manufacturers' Record of Mar. 2, 1922, p. 82.]

FEDERAL RESERVE METHODS OF INTIMIDATION SHOULD BE THOROUGHLY INVESTIGATED.

Senator CARTER GLASS, of Virginia, delivered an address in the Senate in exculpation of the Federal Reserve Board. In many respects it was a worthless speech, however cleverly drawn up, because it undertook to deny that there had been any deflation. As it is admitted that one thousand million dollars of paper money was called in or destroyed within the space of 12 months, further comment is unnecessary. Men who are so ashamed of what they have done that they deny they have done it are entitled to little consideration. * * * The Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, the evidence shows, sent the address not only to its member banks but also to nonmember banks, to corporations, to merchants, to business men of all descriptions, and accompanied it with a questionnaire. Banks were to write to the Atlanta Reserve Bank and say whether or not they approved of what Senator GLASS said. A pistol was leveled at their hearts and they were told, "Say where you stand." And the inference was that if they did not stand back of Federal reserve maladministration they would hear from it later when trying to borrow.

Alabama banks particularly were swamped with the Glass speech. The object very obviously was to intimidate Senator HEFLIN, who has been fighting deflation. Out of its enormous profits a Federal reserve bank—one of these banks which has been talking so much about keeping the banks out of politics—was distributing a political speech, was going into propaganda on a huge scale, was bringing pressure to bear to prevent any criticism of itself. Nor was the Atlanta bank alone in this. We have received a copy of the same speech from the New York Reserve Bank and from other Federal reserve banks. Special efforts are being made through distribution of the speech to induce people to antagonize anybody who has dared criticize the management of the Federal reserve system.

The Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond has printed and is distributing the recent memorial to President Harding from the Federal Advisory Council inspired by Paul Warburg, in which the malicious and untrue statement is made that criticism of Federal reserve mismanagement was "incited by the willful misstatements of unscrupulous or ambitious demagogues." And the word has evidently gone forth, and the orders have been followed, to judge from results, that docile bankers whenever making a speech shall refer to decent men, who can not be intimidated, as "demagogues."

If the Federal reserve system can, out of its vast accumulations, carry on this kind of propaganda uninterruptedly, it can practically defeat any congressional or senatorial candidate and ultimately subvert the Government itself.

Senator HEFLIN has introduced a resolution demanding that the Senate appoint a committee with full powers to investigate this phase of the administration of the Federal reserve system. Senator SIMMONS says that "control of the politics of the country by an institution of this kind is as menacing now as it was in the days of Andrew Jackson." He demands that a resolution be broadened to go even more fully into the facts than Senator HEFLIN at first proposed. Senator after Senator took the same view. One quoted former Senator Joe Bailey, of Texas, as having said, when the Federal reserve system was created: "I would not turn over the control of the money supply of this Nation to any five men born of woman." But the control did pass. How that control was used the citizens of this country must know. They intend to find out the facts, not through a whitewashing investigation but through a real investigation. And indignation will run from ocean to ocean when the facts are revealed.

Let all good citizens watch the Senate, particularly business men who have been deflated into near ruin. Let them see if the effort to prevent a real investigation succeeds and by the votes of what Senators. There will have to be a counting of noses.

This matter has gone too far to be hushed up. Even if new forces have compelled a softening of Federal reserve policy, responsibility must be fixed for the crime that was committed. And what is our authority for the use of so strong a word as "crime"? No other than Abraham Lincoln himself, for the great war President was thus quoted in the Senate debate:

"I warn the American people not to permit a repetition of the crimes of history. Following great periods of deflation, if drastic artificial deflation is attempted, disastrous results must follow. I warn them not to permit the money power to take advantage of the condition of the people. I warn them not to permit high and usurious interest rates, contraction of the currency, or any change in the circulating medium that will affect the debt contracted until it has been discharged. Any movement to artificially deflate before the debt can be paid, to change the medium or circulation upon which the debt was contracted, would be a crime."

We agree with Abraham Lincoln and we do not know of any leader whom the administration could follow with more assurance of being right.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I wanted the Senate to hear those editorials read—one from Missouri and one from Maryland—and I have received comments from other newspapers in the country right along the same line. I want the Senate and the country to know what the Federal Reserve Board is doing through Federal reserve banks to control politics and suppress the truth.

I announced a few days ago that I should present a resolution—and I shall in a few days, covering all the subjects that I want investigated—to inquire into the publicity fund of the Federal Reserve Board, whom it has employed to write these articles and to carry on this propaganda, to whom it has paid money for this purpose, from what source it derives this money, and how much money they have for this purpose. I state now that it is my understanding that they have no right under the law to set aside any money for this sort of business. They are undertaking to suppress the truth. They are undertaking to carry on a propaganda, just as the editorial in the Manufacturers' Record sets out, to intimidate men in this body who dare to tell the truth as to their conduct.

The editorial says that they have done this thing and now they are ashamed of it and are trying to hide. Why should not the truth be told about it? I will tell Senators why they do not want it told. They expect in a few years from now to repeat this thing. They have tried to educate the American people to the belief that it is natural for a panic to come every five or ten years. I deny it. God Almighty never intended that a few men should look upon the mass of people as a man does on his game preserves, where he has thousands of acres fenced in, with wild game of various kinds, and when it suits his pleasure go out and shoot and slaughter them to his heart's content. I do not intend, as long as I am commissioned as a Senator in this body, to adhere to that doctrine or to permit it to be preached without protest that the American masses are like a lot of animals, the legitimate prey of the wolves of Wall Street, to feed upon whenever they desire to have a financial feast.

There is no necessity for a panic in this rich country of ours, the most fertile country on the globe, the country of an industrious and enterprising people, where all industries should run and every man and woman should have employment.

I do not intend that this Federal Reserve Board shall shut up the supply of money and credits and deny them to millions of people, throw them into a state of distress, and ruin them financially, get away with it, and say the conditions of the world outside produced it. I am going to make the truth known and let the RECORD show who is doing this.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to remind the Senator from Alabama that in all my study of the money question, to which I have devoted at least 15 years, I never discovered any trace of a financial panic until the sovereign power of creating and issuing money was taken away from the royal authority and given to private corporations.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is where it first started.

[At this point Mr. HEFLIN yielded to Mr. ROBINSON to speak of the four-power treaty.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the discussion of the four-power treaty is very interesting, but that pertains to our foreign relations. I am discussing the most vital power in our domestic affairs; I am discussing the misuse of the money power which should be used and was intended to be used by our Government for the good of the American people generally.

I was speaking a few moments ago, Mr. President, about the Federal Reserve Board having a publicity fund by which it employed agents at the Capital to suppress the truth and to send out propaganda to its liking. I hold in my hand a newspaper which has been sent to me from Preston, Fillmore County, Minn.—the Preston Times. I find in that paper an article the headline of which reads:

Federal reserve loses case in Supreme Court. Papers generally fail to comment on decision.

In this case, Mr. President, the newspaper complains that the newspapers of the country never gave this news item to the people. I wonder who suppressed that?

The Supreme Court of the United States condemned the Federal Reserve Board for making a run upon a State bank. They accumulated $35,000 worth of checks over a period of six weeks, as I remember the case, and went over to a State bank with a United States marshal, with the Federal reserve bank agent, and demanded payment of those checks. The State bank official said, "We can not pay all of them now; if you had presented them as they were given out, or when you got them, we could have taken care of them; but if you demand payment now you will break our bank." They demanded payment, with a United States marshal standing there. The purpose of it was to break this little State bank; and the Supreme Court of the United States severely condemned that conduct; it criticized the action of the Federal Reserve Board. That decision was handed down; it is an important decision to the American people, and yet it was suppressed and the news of that decision was never given generally to the country.

Senators, that is another item in the charges which I make. This concern in its business relation undertakes to kill a bank that is not a member of the system; the conduct of which it was guilty is criticized and condemned by the Supreme Court of the United States; the Federal Reserve Board lost the case; the case was decided in favor of the State bank, and yet that news was suppressed and not given to the country.

Now, I ask the Senate, and I ask my countrymen, what power is it that is rising up here in the Nation's Capital which can do such things as that, which can keep the press from giving news to the country, which can keep information of that character back, and then pounce upon any Member of Congress who dares to stand and criticize the crooked conduct of that board?

Are Senators going to permit that to go on? Are we going to sit supinely down, with folded arms and sealed lips, and permit such an octopus to spring up in the Capital of the Nation, reaching out in every direction, choking to death every concern that does not agree with it, and fostering everything that will do its bidding and lick its boots? That is the evil force that I am fighting, Senators. I am dealing with the most vital and dangerous thing in the economic life of the Nation.

I am getting letters from nearly every State in the Union from people who read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I am talking to that RECORD to-day. It is the only newspaper in the United States with a national circulation. Every day there issues from this Capital 34,600 copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. We can get the truth into that. That is why Senators see these editorials coming in here indorsing my position. The editors are reading the RECORD—they do not get the truth otherwise—and they are indorsing my position; they are sending in these articles stating that the party that will continue this board in power is hurting free institutions and must answer for it at the polls this fall.

Mr. President, let me repeat, it appears from this item in the newspaper from Minnesota that the Federal Reserve Board has made a run upon a State bank and undertaken to kill it by accumulating checks amounting to nearly $40,000 and then going down upon it in one day and presenting them, with a United States marshal present. The Supreme Court severely criticized that conduct.

Then what happened? Later on Representative BRAND, of Georgia, joined in the criticism that I was making of the Federal Reserve Board; then Mr. Platt, one of the "Gold Dust Twins" with Gov. Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, wrote him a letter and criticized and undertook to intimidate him. In connection with the charge about suppressing the views of the Supreme Court decisions, I want to give his language, quoted here before.

It is found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 25, 1921. Mr. Edmund Platt says to this Representative in Congress in a letter, if you please:

> I want to tell you that you are going to have these things quoted against you in time if you keep them up. * * * You will find a reaction from all this talk in the not very distant future—before the next primaries come, at any rate.

Mr. President, here is a letter written by a member of this board, doubtless instructed by some of the other members to write it, to a Member of the greatest lawmaking body on earth, telling him that if he did not quit criticizing their conduct they will beat him at the polls. Are you going to permit that to go on, Senators?

But, following that, what happened? I spoke in the Senate; the Senator from Virginia spoke five hours and I spoke five hours and a half, replying to him. In his speech the Senator from Virginia attacked me a number of times—one Senator criticizing another—and attacked the position that I had taken in this body; and the Federal reserve bank in Atlanta took that speech, had it printed, circulated it, and wrote a letter accompanying it, demanding of the bankers in my State to state how they felt about the subject before they read his speech and his attacks on me and how they felt about it afterwards. Those banks are dependent upon the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta for accommodation in cash and credit. The editorial just read from the Manufacturers' Record sets forth that it is like leveling a pistol at the heart of the bankers in my State for the Federal reserve bank to ask, "What is your position in this matter? Do you agree with Senator HEFLIN or do you agree with us and Senator GLASS?"

Mr. President, this is a very serious matter. The Manufacturers' Record quotes Senator SIMMONS as saying when he interrupted my speech that for the money power and Federal reserve banks to go into politics to-day is as dangerous as in the days of Hickory Jackson. That is literally true. Now, this bank in Atlanta has circulated that speech. I have printed their letter, as I have said, in the RECORD. Why can not we get the committee to report my resolution?

The Manufacturers' Record in its editorial invites the people of the country, especially the business people, to keep their eye on Senators, to see who it is that is trying to prevent this investigation, to see who it is that will not criticize and condemn a bank, a Government bank, for carrying on political propaganda and circulating the speech of one Senator against another. I do not care whether it was my speech or the speech of somebody else, what business have they got to use the Government's money and the Government bank's money to circulate the speech of one Senator antagonizing the position of another?

Senators, if this thing is not stopped now, free institutions in America are in grave peril. No trust is so dangerous as a money trust in politics.

Mr. President, there is not any doubt on earth about my position being correct on deflation, because the people of the South and West know to their sorrow how it affected them. They have had the gads put to them; you can not fool them with any of this stuff on paper, because, as my friend from South Carolina, Senator SMITH, once said about the toad:

> The toad beneath the harrow knows
> Precisely where the tooth point goes,
> But the butterfly along the road
> Preaches contentment to the toad.

That is what you have got, Mr. President. The farmers of the South and West are in dire distress. This deflation policy wrought that distress. The Federal Reserve Board intended to get away with it; they intended to say that it was caused by other things; but I have read the record; I have convicted them by their own bulletins; I have convicted them by the speeches of the governor of the Federal Reserve Board. He says that their effort to control the currency and credits must be judged by the effect that it has on business. Well, it killed business in my section; it killed business in the West. Then I took the governor at his word; I indicted him upon his statement, and I have convicted him upon it; and now they come along and say, "Oh, no; that is not true, and all those who talk in that way are vicious men and demagogues." They are circulating at the expense of the banks a pamphlet to that effect. Do Senators want to permit that thing to go on? You are permitting it.

Mr. President, I desire to keep the RECORD straight. A few days ago I made reference to the fact that William Boyce Thompson, treasurer of the Republican campaign committee, had borrowed $5,000,000. He is or was a director of the New York Reserve Bank. He borrowed it from a member bank, $3,000,000 of which was on a dummy note. The newspapers, without waiting to find out whether it was a fact or not, said, "Senator Heflin ought not to make such a statement as that upon the floor of the Senate." Some papers commented editorially right off the reel, without waiting to read my speech in the RECORD, in which I quoted from John Skelton Williams, but right off the reel criticized and condemned me and tried to hurt my influence. Why were they doing that? They said, "He is putting his finger on the sore spot." "He is telling the truth." "Drive him away from it." That is what they are trying to do.

Mr. President, when I made the statement on this floor that William Boyce Thompson, treasurer of the Republican campaign committee, borrowed $5,000,000 from a member Federal reserve bank in New York, $3,000,000 of which was on a dummy note, some of the newspapers immediately criticized me for making the statement. I sent this note to one of them:

A few days ago you reproduced an editorial from the Baltimore Sun criticizing me for saying that William Boyce Thompson, of New York, had borrowed, while treasurer of the Republican campaign committee in 1920, from a Federal reserve member bank in New York $5,000,000. I will thank you to publish this letter and the inclosed excerpt from my speech upon this subject and the statement from John Skelton Williams.

With best wishes.

Yours, very truly, J. THOMAS HEFLIN.

STATEMENT.

On February 9, 1922, in the Senate of the United States, Senator HEFLIN said:

"William Boyce Thompson, the treasurer of the Republican campaign committee, borrowed, partly under a dummy note, $5,000,000 through a member of the Federal reserve bank in New York."

The Baltimore Sun criticized Senator HEFLIN for making this statement.

On March 2 Senator HEFLIN had read in the Senate the following statement from Hon. John Skelton Williams, former Comptroller of the Currency, to the Baltimore Sun. This statement was addressed to and published by the Baltimore Sun:

Here follows the statement from Mr. Williams:

I have not seen and did not hear Senator HEFLIN'S speech in the Senate to which you refer, but I think it extremely probable that the foundation for such statement he may have made on this subject and which apparently has been misinterpreted or distorted in the press was the transaction or transactions referred to by me in an article on the "Administration of the Federal reserve system," printed in Commerce and Finance, of New York, September 21, 1921, in which I said plainly:

"Not only were the funds of the Federal reserve system extensively loaned to banks whose executive officers and directors were big borrowers, but the records show that one of the banks borrowing most heavily from its reserve bank was lending last autumn to a certain large borrower, who at that very time was also a director of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, over $5,000,000 (including a dummy loan of over $3,000,000)—mostly on highly speculative securities, while farmers and the 'country' banks were even then begging for relief and enduring ruinous losses because of the credit restrictions of the reserve system."

I stand by the absolute accuracy of that statement, and if Col. Thompson or any responsible official of the Federal reserve bank, or any other responsible person, undertakes to deny it, I am prepared to prove it.

How many of you have seen any notice in the newspapers about that? I had that editorial, which was printed in the Baltimore Sun, and the reply of Mr. Williams read here the other day, but how many of you have seen the papers saying that Senator HEFLIN comes back with a statement from John Skelton Williams, the former Comptroller of the Currency, who dares Mr. Thompson or anybody else to deny the truthfulness of his statement? None of you have seen it. Mr. President, we are entitled to have these things go out to the country.

I stated in my speech the other day that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] said that I had made incorrect statements, as follows:

That the Federal Reserve Board had earned or accumulated $100,000,000.

That the Federal Reserve Board had appropriated $26,000,000 to build a bank in New York City.

That the bank was to be built in Wall Street.

1. Mr. President, I meant that the 12 Federal reserve regional banks had earned $100,000,000 net up to the end of the fiscal year 1921, but I find that it was $124,000,000 instead of $100,000,000.

2. The Federal reserve bank in New York appropriated the money to build the New York bank with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, and without the approval of the board it could not appropriate one cent for that purpose.

Let me quote here from my speech made in reply to Senator GLASS:

Now, listen, Senators. John Skelton Williams, in his statement to me, says, "I have read your statement and each one of the distinguished Senator's criticisms is either misleading or entirely untrue, as the official records will prove." He denies that the Federal Reserve Board appropriated $26,000,000 or any other amount to the bank at New York, but he does not deny that the Federal Reserve Board connived with the directors of the New York bank and approved the construction of buildings estimated to cost, including the land, over $25,000,000 by the very latest estimate, as stated by the reserve board in its report to the Senate dated October 31, 1921.

In fact, the original estimates for that building were about $30,000,000, and subsequently reduced by about $4,000,000, as will be shown from the board's report to the Senate in response to the Overman resolution.

The Senator claims that the bank is not being built in "Wall Street," but, Senators, it is being built in the heart of the Wall Street district, within about 200 or 300 yards of Wall Street itself, although land could have been gotten a few hundred yards farther from Wall Street that would have been equally convenient to 97 per cent of the members of the New York reserve bank, and saved millions of dollars.

The Senator from Virginia said that the bank building in New York is designed and planned to accommodate 5,000 employees. But in 1917, when the total loans and discounts of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York were nearly three times as great as they are to-day, 829 employees were sufficient to transact its business, and I want to say here that was the time when we were selling Liberty bonds. That was the time when there was more work to be done than at any other time, and these 829 employees were sufficient then. Now they have multiplied them to about 3,000.

When the Senator made the statement that he did about the 5,000 employees the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] inquired:

"Mr. President, does the Senator from Virginia mean that that number of people are employed in the Federal Reserve Bank of New York?"

To which the Senator from Virginia replied:

"Will be."

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] added:

"They are."

What justification has the Senator from New York for making such a statement as that? It is not true that 5,000 people are now employed by the New York reserve bank, as alleged on the floor of the Senate by the Senator from New York. The board's report says that in July last the number of officers and employees was 3,087, and I believe this has already been reduced since I brought this matter to the attention of Congress. Who misled the Senator from New York? I am sure that he would not willingly mislead the Senate, but some one has evidently deceived him.

Now, as to that monument of Federal Reserve Board extravagance, the Federal reserve bank building at New York, which has been aptly referred to as a "financial monstrosity," the Senator from Virginia said:

"I have here an official statement which shows that Senators have been misled by estimates prepared a year ago, in March, 1921. It was an outside estimate of cost. Some Senators absurdly think that the estimated cost of a bank building in New York curtails rural credits in the State of Alabama."

Senators can imagine who the Senator was driving at then.

"The estimated cost in March, 1921, of the building at New York was $17,990,000, from which must be subtracted the price the bank will receive for its annex building, now being temporarily occupied and which will be abandoned and sold when the bank goes into the completed building."

What do Senators think of that? They are going to subtract money that has been sunk in another building which has already been erected. They are going to take that out of this.

Why should the cost of the "annex" be deducted from $17,990,000? Instead of deducting it, there should be added to that $17,990,000 estimated actual cost, the amount thus far expended on that annex, namely, $2,210,000. To this also must be added the estimated cost of the "vault equipment," $650,000, then add cost of land, $4,791,000, making a grand total of land and building $25,646,000, to which, I understand, should be added heavy taxes during construction. If any Senator has been misled as to these figures it is because he was misled by the reserve board itself. These are the estimates which were sent to the Senate by the board under date of October 31, 1921, in response to Senator OVERMAN'S resolution. In fact, in submitting these figures the board called attention to the fact that the original estimates were, as has been stated, about $4,000,000 more, or, say, $30,000,000.

John Skelton Williams furnished me these indisputable facts from the record. When John Skelton Williams first brought this matter to the attention of the country, and we raised the question here, they wisely decided that they had better trim off about $4,000,000 of the superfluity. So I helped to save the Government $4,000,000 by the fight I have been making on this. That is doing pretty well for one Senator who does not know what he is talking about, according to the Senator from Virginia.

The taxes alone on the banking palace now proposed, at the present rate of taxation in New York, would amount, if taxed at estimated cost, to about $700,000 a year, while the interest of 4 per cent per annum on the amount thus locked up would amount to another million dollars, and the cost of operating this huge building is yet to be added. The expenses as proposed bring the total up to more than $26,000,000.

The Senator from Virginia said in his speech that I had voted in the House for the amendment to the Federal Reserve act which permitted the Federal reserve banks to set aside these enormous sums for providing bank buildings. The RECORD shows that the amendment was put on late in the afternoon, just before the House adjourned. I was not present and I did not vote for it.

The speech of Senator GLASS, which is being circulated by the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, and other banks, carries all this misinformation about what I have said and done.

Mr. President, will the Senate toady and crawl before the Federal Reserve Board or will it in obedience to its duty demand that it adhere strictly to the functions for which it was created? Are we going to show ourselves worthy and capable of coping with this situation or are we going to prove ourselves to be incapable and unworthy to be intrusted with the solution of this great problem?

Mr. President, in behalf of those who believe that our great Federal reserve banking system should be kept out of politics and that nothing should happen that would impair or weaken in any way its great usefulness to the American people, I have made the fight to keep it true to its intended course. It has been maladministered and made to hurt the people that it was intended to help, and when I am fighting to restore it to its former state of usefulness and service I am fighting for the highest and best interest of my country.

THE FOUR-POWER TREATY.

During the delivery of Mr. HEFLIN'S speech,

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand that an arrangement has been effected whereby the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] will probably ask that the treaty be laid aside for the remainder of this day, with the prospect of making progress to-morrow. Before the treaty is laid aside I wish to make a brief comment on a subject matter of debate which arose yesterday.

I attempted to do what a great many others, particularly newspaper men, have been trying for a long time, namely, to find out who prompted or initiated the four-power treaty and who wrote it. It was not embraced in the call for the Washington conference issued by the President, nor was it on the program of the conference. Nevertheless, it was put forward by its proponents as a very important document.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], one of the American delegates who negotiated the treaty, in a statement which the Senate heard yesterday, informed us that he did not know who wrote it or who instigated it, but from his statement we inferred that it was probably the suggestion of Mr. Balfour.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] stated that he was not informed as to who had prepared the first draft, but that many hands had participated in it, and it appears from an International Press News Service item, published late yesterday afternoon, that a third member of the American delegation to the conference was interrogated as to who drafted the treaty or who suggested it, and that he declined to furnish any information if in fact he possessed any.

I inferred from one statement of the Senator from Massachusetts that the Secretary of State, the head of the American delegation at the Washington conference, perhaps had had more to do with the negotiation of this treaty than any other American delegate.

The news item to which I have referred does not quote the Secretary of State, who prefers not to be quoted directly. He is referred to in the news report, as I understand, as "a high official in the State Department." In any event, the news item mentioned says that a high official in the State Department was asked who wrote the treaty, and that he made this reply:

> Four delegations signed the treaty. Therefore it can truthfully be said that they all wrote it. Who wrote it does not matter. What is in it does matter.

That sounds like Mr. Hughes. Ordinarily the question as to who drafts an instrument is not material, but where the question arises as to who is actually interested in or benefited by the terms of the instrument; where the question arises as to whether all of the parties to the instrument were fully informed at the time they signed it as to the effect of the instrument, the circumstances under which that instrument was negotiated become of great importance.

My proposition is that when President Harding called the Washington conference to assemble it was not in his mind that an alliance between Japan, Great Britain, France, and the United States would be consummated at the conference; that when the conference assembled there was not in the mind of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], or the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], or the Secretary of State, or Mr. Root the conception that it would be necessary to agree upon such an instrument as this four-power pact before any progress could be made toward the reduction of armaments.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I think I can add a little bit to the force of what the Senator from Arkansas is very forcibly stating.

The order of knighthood known as the Knights of the Garter was, as the Senator well knows, founded by Edward III, based upon the dropping of a garter of the Countess of Salisbury during a great state ball at Windsor Castle. It is the most exclusive order of knighthood in Europe. It is not every earl who is a Knight of the Garter; it is not every marquis; it is not every duke; it is not every prince of the blood. To be a member of the Order of the Knights of the Garter is to receive from the hands of the King the highest social award which can be given, and that is the reward that has been given to Arthur Balfour.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Secretary of State declines to furnish the public even now any information whatever as to the real origin of this treaty. He says it does not matter who wrote it; substantially that it is nobody's business who wrote it. He made an announcement very shortly before the Senator from Massachusetts reported the four-power treaty to the plenary conference that no such instrument was in contemplation, so far as he knew. That statement was flashed from limit to limit of this continent. A number of newspaper reporters who sent it to their journals, relying upon the accuracy of it, referring to a rumor that a four-power treaty was to be forthcoming, announced that the proposal had been scrapped, and these correspondents suffered severe criticism from their employers because of the inaccuracy of the information which they published broadcast throughout the United States. The Secretary of State said to a number of representatives of the press, several of whom are in the gallery now, that if any proposition for an alliance or a four-power pact between Great Britain, France, Japan, and the United States was in contemplation, he knew nothing about it. Now, after the issue has arisen as to what constitutes the underlying motive of this proposal, what power, influence, or nationality originated it, conceived it, and what hand framed it, we have the information from two of the delegates representing the American Government at that conference that they do not know, and from a third, if my assumption is correct that the high official referred to is the Secretary of State, the declaration, in substance, that it is nobody's business or he does not know.

I wonder if Mr. Root, the other American delegate, knows anything about it, and, if he does know, if he will tell anything about it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HEFLIN. I hope the debate will not extend very long, because I do not want to have this whole treaty matter discussed in my time.

Mr. LODGE. It is the only debate which is in order. I shall take but a moment.

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. That is very kind of the Senator. I only desire to say, Mr. President, that when the Senator from Arkansas says, as I understood him, that this was not in my mind or anybody's mind, he makes a mistake. It was very much in my mind. As I said, I talked over this question before, I think, the conference was ever called, certainly weeks before it ever met. I talked it over with my colleagues in the Senate, I think, before the conference met. It certainly was very much in the minds of the American delegation.

Then, also, I noticed, in looking over the speech of the Senator from Arkansas of yesterday, a point that I did not then catch. In referring to the newspaper accounts he spoke of my first statement about the four-power treaty. I never made a statement about it of any kind until I presented it to the plenary conference. I can not answer for anybody else, but I made no statement. What might have appeared in the press I do not know, but I never made any statement of the kind.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator say he did not discuss the terms and purposes of the four-power pact with a prominent newspaper man some days before the four-power pact was reported to the plenary conference?

Mr. LODGE. Not to my knowledge. I do not remember ever to have discussed it. I would be glad to discuss it with the gentleman who said that I did.

Mr. ROBINSON. That, of course, does not become very important in view of the fact that the Senator states that the proposal was pending and under consideration for a time before the conference convened.

Mr. LODGE. I undoubtedly mentioned that it was under discussion. Undoubtedly I mentioned that.

Mr. ROBINSON. The significant fact is that with the proposal imminent and about to be published, the head of the American delegation represented to the press of the United States or to many of its agents that no such proposal was in contemplation in so far as his knowledge extended. The Senator from Massachusetts nor anybody else, I believe, will deny that when he published the four-power pact in plenary session it came as a great surprise to the people of the United States. The session of the conference, it seems to me, had been arranged with a view of having a dramatic demonstration. The men whose business it is to inform themselves and the newspapers and magazines which they represent of the progress of events know that it was a physical impossibility to obtain from any source information of a reliable nature respecting the question as to whether a four-power alliance or pact was in contemplation and the prospective terms of that four-power alliance or pact. The whole subject matter was kept as secret as possible, the head of the American delegation denying any knowledge of it.

The four-power treaty was one of the few subjects discussed at length in the plenary session at the armament conference. Usually when a resolution was reported the Secretary of State, the chairman of the conference, would rise and say—you have all heard it time and time again—"This measure has been discussed at great length in the committees, and I take it that no delegate cares to discuss the matter further. If there is no objection, we will proceed to determine whether it is assented to. The United States assents. Belgium? Belgium assents," and so on down the line, absolutely shutting off any possibility of debate.

But on the occasion when the four-power treaty was reported to the conference by the Senator from Massachusetts there was alleged debate. The Senator from Massachusetts himself made a brilliant, beautiful speech. The only criticism that I could make of it, if indeed any criticism is justified from me, is that it was totally lacking in important information concerning the subject whch it discussed.

The representative of the British Government, Mr. Balfour, rose and said it was one of the happiest moments of his life, because it relieved Great Britain and Japan of a very great embarrassment arising out of the existence of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, and that he and the other representatives of Great Britain and the representatives of Japan had felt that there was no possibility of getting relief from that alliance until something just as effective, something new, was substituted in its place. When the conference was over and Mr. Balfour returned to England he received the most brilliant and enthusiastic reception accorded a British statesman during my lifetime.

When Lloyd-George returned from Paris, after he manipulated and influenced and in many instances controlled the Versailles conference, he was given a cordial reception, but it did not compare with the splendor, the kindliness, the cordiality of the reception extended Mr. Balfour. Mr. Balfour had lived to an old age. He had desired to be known as the "great commoner." Throughout his life he had scorned titles of nobility, but when the title, the highest that England can confer, of "Knight of the Garter" was offered him, he yielded and became Sir Arthur Balfour.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. Just a moment. This glorification came to him because his Government recognized that Mr. Balfour had accomplished an alliance between the United States, Great Britain, France, and Japan. If England had placed any other construction upon the four-power treaty, Mr. Balfour would not have received the reception and the honor which were accorded him.

I yield to the Senator from Nebraska. I have concluded, in fact.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not see how the Senator can yield the floor to anyone else, as I had the floor yielded to me by the courtesy of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the Senator from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; he has, and he yielded to me.

Mr. HEFLIN. I yielded it to some one, but I am about ready to take it back.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me now?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I tried to interrupt the Senator from Arkansas when he was giving the reasons why Mr. Balfour had always refused decorations, but when they offered him a new garter he accepted it, and the Senator explained it by saying that he had accomplished something great. It seemed to me the explanation for it is that at the particular time when they offered this decoration Mr. Balfour needed a new garter.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama kindly yielded the floor to me some time ago, and I do not wonder that he has forgotten that he did so.

Mr. HEFLIN. It has been some time ago.

Mr. LODGE. My time has been occupied entirely by others. I only wish to say a word or two further.

I may as well correct one idea. Mr. Balfour remains a commoner. Although he has taken the first order in England, he is still a commoner. What rewards they choose to give him do not seem to me to concern us very much.

As to the plenary conferences, let me say that when the Secretary of State presented matters which had been discussed thoroughly by all the men present at that table and who had all agreed to them beforehand, and all the delegations had agreed to them, he naturally was not called upon to invite debate or statements. In this case only four powers had been concerned and there were five who had no part in it, necessarily.

The Senator from Arkansas also said that it was impossible to get at the terms of the agreement, which does not quite coincide with his statement that I had given the terms to somebody. As a matter of fact, I never gave the terms to anybody, and I do not think any member of the delegation did. That Mr. Hughes should have said to the public or to the press that this matter was not under consideration is to me inconceivable. I think Mr. Hughes can quite well take care of himself, but that he should have made a statement to anyone that this matter concerning the four-power treaty was not under consideration seems to me, as I said, inconceivable.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. Just a moment. I have the floor, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. HEFLIN. I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. LODGE. No; I am not quite through. I want to say one other thing by way of correction of something said yesterday by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and repeated by others, that the authorship of this treaty might be detected by the fact that it employed the language of the alliance between Japan and Great Britain. I have taken the two treaties and have compared them with the greatest care, word by word. They are very brief. That statement surprised me. Of course article 2, article 3, and article 4 of the treaty of alliance do not exist at all in the four-power treaty. The only resemblance that I could find between them was that in article 1 of the treaty of alliance occur these words:

> The two Governments will communicate with one another fully and frankly.

In the section of the four-power pact the words are—

> Shall communicate with one another fully and frankly.

They are very commonplace words and very frequent in diplomatic documents. That is the only resemblance between the two treaties.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator have printed in the RECORD the Anglo-Japanese alliance?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes; although it has been printed already as a Senate document.

Mr. BORAH. I suggest that article 1 of the Anglo-Japanese alliance and article 2 of the four-power treaty be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. LODGE. I will read them, and then they will appear in the RECORD.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me, I would suggest that instead of picking out clauses he print in the RECORD in parallel columns both the treaties in question.

Mr. LODGE. I will ask that that be done; but I will first read the two articles which I was asked to read.

Article 2 of the four-power treaty reads as follows:

> If the said rights are threatened by the aggressive action of any other power, the high contracting parties shall communicate with one another fully and frankly in order to arrive at an understanding as to the most efficient measures to be taken, jointly or separately, to meet the exigencies of the particular situation.

Article 1 of the Anglo-Japanese alliance reads as follows:

> It is agreed that whenever, in the opinion of either Great Britain or Japan, any of the rights and interests referred to in the preamble of this agreement are in jeopardy the two Governments will communicate with one another fully and frankly, and will consider in common the measures which should be taken to safeguard those menaced rights or interests.

It seems to me the wording is entirely different. I will ask that those two treaties be printed in parallel columns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The treaties referred to are as follows:

Anglo-Japanese alliance.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED KINGDOM AND JAPAN.

(Signed at London, July 13, 1911.)

PREAMBLE.

The Government of Great Britain and the Government of Japan, having in view the important changes which have taken place in the situation since the conclusion of the Anglo-Japanese agreement of the 12th of August, 1905, and believing that a revision of that agreement responding to such changes would con-

Four-power treaty relating to Pacific possessions.

TREATY SUBMITTED BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES, THE BRITISH EMPIRE, FRANCE, AND JAPAN, RELATING TO THEIR INSULAR POSSESSIONS AND THEIR INSULAR DOMINIONS IN THE PACIFIC.

The United States of America, the British Empire, France, and Japan.

With a view to the preservation of the general peace and the maintenance of their rights in relation to their insular possessions and insular dominions in the region of the Pacific Ocean, tribute to general stability and repose, having agreed upon the following stipulations to replace the agreement above mentioned, such stipulations having the same object as the said agreement, namely:

(a) The consolidation and maintenance of the general peace in the regions of eastern Asia and of India.

(b) The preservation of the common interests of all powers in China by insuring the independence and integrity of the Chinese Empire and the principle of equal opportunities for the commerce and industry of all nations in China.

(c) The maintenance of the territorial rights of the high contracting parties in the regions of eastern Asia and of India, and the defense of their special interests in the said regions.

ARTICLE I.

It is agreed that whenever, in the opinion of either Great Britain or Japan, any of the rights and interests referred to in the preamble of this agreement are in jeopardy, the two Governments will communicate with one another fully and frankly, and will consider in common the measures which should be taken to safeguard those menaced rights or interests.

ARTICLE II.

If by reason of unprovoked attack or aggressive action, wherever arising, on the part of any power or powers, either high contracting party should be involved in war in defense of its territorial rights or special interests mentioned in the preamble of this agreement, the other high contracting party will at once come to the assistance of its ally, and will conduct the war in common, and make peace in mutual agreement with it.

ARTICLE III.

The high contracting parties agree that neither of them will, without consulting the other, enter into separate arrangements with another power to the prejudice of the objects described in the preamble of this agreement.

ARTICLE IV.

Should either high contracting party conclude a treaty of general arbitration with a third power, it is agreed that nothing in this agreement shall entail upon such contracting party an obligation to go to war with the power with whom such treaty of arbitration is in force.

Have determined to conclude a treaty to this effect, and have appointed as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America: Charles Evans Hughes, HENRY CABOT LODGE, OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, and Elihu Root, citizens of the United States;

His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British dominions beyond the seas, Emperor of India: The Right Hon. Arthur James Balfour, O. M., M. P., Lord President of His Privy Council; the Right Hon. Baron Lee of Fareham, G. B. E., K. C. B., First Lord of His Admiralty; the Right Hon. Sir Auckland Campbell Geddes, K. C. B., his Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the United States of America;

And—

For the Dominion of Canada: The Right Hon. Robert Laird Borden, G. C. M. G., K. C.;

For the Commonwealth of Australia: The Hon. George Foster Pearce, Minister of Defense;

For the Dominion of New Zealand: Sir John William Salmond, K. C., judge of the Supreme Court of New Zealand;

For the Union of South Africa: The Right Hon. Arthur James Balfour, O. M., M. P.;

For India: The Right Hon. Valingman Sankaranarayana Srinivasa Sastri, member of the Indian Council of State;

The President of the French Republic: Mr. René Viviani, deputy, former President of the Council of Ministers; Mr. Albert Sarraut, deputy, Minister of the Colonies; Mr. Jules J. Jusserand, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the United States of America, Grand Cross of the National Order of the Legion of Honor;

His Majesty the Emperor of Japan: Baron Tomosaburo Kato, Minister of the Navy, Junii, a member of the first class of the Imperial Order of the Grand Cordon of the Rising Sun with the Paulownia Flower; Baron Kijuro Shidehara, his Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary at Washington, Joshii, a member of the first class of the Imperial Order of the Rising Sun; Prince Iyesato Tokugawa, Junii, a member of the first class of the Imperial Order of the Rising Sun; Mr. Masanao Hanihara, Vice Minister for Foreign Affairs, Jushii, a member of the second class of the Imperial Order of the Rising Sun;

Who, having communicated their full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed as follows:

I.

The high contracting parties agree as between themselves to respect their rights in relation to their insular possessions and insular dominions in the region of the Pacific Ocean.

If there should develop between any of the high contracting parties a controversy arising out of any Pacific question and involving their said rights which is not satisfactorily settled by diplomacy and is likely to affect the harmonious accord now happily subsisting between them, they shall invite the other high contracting parties to a joint conference to which the whole subject will be referred for consideration and adjustment.

II.

If the said rights are threatened by the aggressive action of any other power, the high contracting parties shall communicate with one another fully and frankly in order to arrive at an understanding as to the most efficient measures to be taken, jointly or separately, to meet the exigencies of the particular situation.

III.

This treaty shall remain in force for 10 years from the time it shall take effect, and after the expiration of said period it shall continue to be in force subject to the right of any of high contracting parties to terminate it upon 12 months' notice.

IV.

This treaty shall be ratified as soon as possible in accordance with the constitutional methods of the high contracting parties and shall take effect on the deposit of ratifications, which shall take place at Washington, and thereupon the agreement between Great Britain and Japan, which was concluded at London on July 13, 1911, shall terminate. The Government of the United States will transmit to all the signatory powers a certified copy of the procès verbal of the deposit of ratifications.

The present treaty, in French and in English, shall remain deposited in the archives of the Government of the United States, and duly certified copies thereof will be transmitted by that Government to each of the signatory powers.

In faith whereof the above-named plenipotentiaries have signed the present treaty.

ARTICLE V.

The conditions under which armed assistance shall be afforded by either power to the other in the circumstances mentioned in the present agreement, and the means by which such assistance is to be made available, will be arranged by the naval and military authorities of the high contracting parties, who will from time to time consult one another fully and freely upon all questions of mutual interest.

ARTICLE VI.

The present agreement shall come into effect immediately after the date of its signature, and remain in force for 10 years from that date.

In case neither of the high contracting parties should have notified 12 months before the expiration of the said 10 years the intention of terminating it, it shall remain binding until the expiration of one year from the day on which either of the high contracting parties shall have denounced it. But if, when the date fixed for its expiration arrives, either ally is actually engaged in war, the alliance shall, ipso facto, continue until peace is concluded.

In faith whereof the undersigned, duly authorized by their respective Governments, have signed this agreement, and have affixed thereto their seals.

Done in duplicate at London the 13th day of July, 1911.

E. GREY,
His Britannic Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

After the conclusion of Mr. HEFLIN's speech,

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I find that there are a number of Senators who desire to speak who are not ready to go on this afternoon, and we have had very little discussion of the treaty so far to-day. I am anxious to aid the judges' bill; and I simply desire to give notice that to-morrow at 12 o'clock, when we come in from the recess, I shall ask the Senate to take up the treaty and remain in session until at least they have disposed of the pending amendment.

I now move that the Senate return to legislative session.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, when does the Senator say that he is going to ask for a continuous session until we dispose of the pending amendment?

Mr. LODGE. To-morrow.

Mr. SMITH. To-morrow is Saturday.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; I know to-morrow is Saturday, but I think that one amendment can be disposed of before we adjourn, say, at midnight.

Mr. SMITH. That is very encouraging.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts that the Senate return to legislative session.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate resumed its legislative session.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGES.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of United States courts, to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for other purposes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	Nelson	Smith
Borah	Harris	Newberry	Spencer
Brandegee	Harrison	Norris	Stanfield
Broussard	Heflin	Oddie	Stanley
Bursum	Johnson	Overman	Sterling
Cameron	Jones, Wash.	Page	Swanson

Fernald	McCormick	Robinson	Weller
Fletcher	McKellar	Sheppard	Williams
France	McKinley	Shields	Willis
Gooding	McNary	Shortridge

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] are detained in the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKINLEY in the chair). Fifty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. CUMMINS addressed the Senate. After having spoken with interruptions for more than two hours, he said:

Mr. President, I find that owing to interruptions, which are very welcome, I shall not be able to conclude what I have to say about the bill this evening, although I hope that I can do it in a very few minutes when the bill is again under consideration. If the Senator from Massachusetts desires to take some action now looking toward suspension for the day, I have no objection.

MILITARY OCCUPATION OF HAITI.

Mr. KING. I submit a resolution which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The resolution (S. Res. 256) was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Whereas United States Military forces have been in occupation of the territory of the Republic of Haiti since 1915 and the Haitian people now desire the withdrawal of those forces and the abrogation of the Treaty of 1915 between the United States and the Republic of Haiti; and

Whereas the term of the present President of Haiti, elected in 1915, expires on May 15, 1922, and no elections for deputies and senators have been held in Haiti since the dissolution of the chamber of deputies and the senate in 1917: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the United States should forthwith terminate the aforesaid military occupation of Haiti, abrogate the Treaty of 1915 between the United States and Haiti under which the said occupation is maintained, and restore democratic constitutional government in Haiti; and be it further

Resolved, That in order to carry out the aforesaid purposes, the President of the United States is respectfully requested:

1. To denounce the treaty of 1915 and the protocol of March 28, 1917, extending said treaty, same to take effect on or before the expiration of the six months' period provided for in paragraph 3 hereof.

2. To take all necessary and appropriate action to restore full democratic, constitutional government in Haiti, and in particular to direct the brigade commander of the United States marines in Haiti to act as follows:

Temporarily to assume on the 16th day of May, 1922, such powers and functions of government in the territory of the Republic of Haiti as are necessary to provide forthwith for the holding of free popular elections in Haiti not later than July 1, 1922, for a constituent national assembly to be composed of one member for each existing commune; to convene said assembly in meeting not later than August 1, 1922, and to vest the said assembly with the functions and powers of framing and adopting a new constitution for Haiti, and of choosing and installing in office a President and Government of Haiti.

3. Within a period of six months after the date when the President of Haiti chosen by said constituent assembly shall have notified the Government of the United States of the adoption of a constitution and of the assumption of office by the said President to withdraw all military and naval forces of the United States from the territory of the Republic of Haiti and to cause to be restored to such reconstituted Haitian Government all functions and powers of government now or hereafter exercised in Haiti by all civil or military representatives of the United States.

EXECUTIVE SESSION WITH CLOSED DOORS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in open executive session, took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, March 11, 1922, at 12 o'clock.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate March 10 (legislative day of March 9), 1922.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 10, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by Mr. WALSH as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, when we consider how Thou dost preserve hope, awaken courage, create worlds of beauty, bring down blessings upon us and soothe pain, O that we could give Thee an adequate return. But we thank Thee and bless the name of our everlasting Father. Teach us that the best thing that we can do for Thee is to be kindly and helpful to Thy other children; to live upright in the presence of great truths and eternal laws and allow nothing to come between us and the wisdom of Jesus of Nazareth. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 227. Joint resolution extending the term of the National Screw Thread Commission for a period of five years from March 21, 1922.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 10559) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 2716. An act to give effect to certain provisions of conventions with foreign Governments for facilitating the work of traveling salesmen; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

THE BATTLE CRUISER "SARATOGA."

Mr. PATTERSON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a concurrent resolution passed by the New Jersey Legislature asking for the conversion of the battleship Saratoga into an airplane carrier.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Following is the resolution referred to:

TRENTON, N. J., March 7, 1922.

Hon. F. F. PATTERSON, Jr.,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith a copy of a concurrent resolution passed by the One hundred and forty-sixth Legislature of the State of New Jersey.

Very respectfully, yours,
UPTON S. JEFFERYS,
Clerk of the House of Assembly.

STATE OF NEW JERSEY,
ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-SIXTH LEGISLATURE.

Concurrent resolution passed by the general assembly March 6, 1922, and concurred in by the senate.

Whereas the recent conference on disarmament held at the city of Washington, D. C., decided that two of the six contemplated battle cruisers being built by the United States could be converted into airplane carriers; and

Whereas one of said battle cruisers, namely, the Saratoga, is now under construction at the plant of the New York Shipbuilding Co., at Camden, N. J., and is 35 per cent completed, and can be converted into an airplane carrier at less expense and with greater benefit to the United States by reason of the fact that our Navy would secure a vessel of 33,000 tons instead of a 27,000-ton airplane carrier, the limit fixed by the conference of disarmament for new vessels of that type; and

Whereas the selection of the battle cruiser Saratoga for completion as an airplane carrier by the President and the Navy Department would give employment to thousands of workmen for two years at the plant of the New York Shipbuilding Co.: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Assembly of the State of New Jersey (the Senate concurring), That the President of the United States, the Navy Department, and the Congress of the United States be respectfully requested to select the Saratoga as one of the battle cruisers to be converted into an airplane carrier; and be it further

Resolved, That the Navy Department be urged to finish other naval work on which conditions will permit continuing construction, with the view of providing employment for the unemployed of the State of New Jersey.

T. HARRY ROWLAND,
Speaker of the General Assembly.
WILLIAM B. MACKAY, Jr.,
President of the Senate.

Attest:

UPTON S. JEFFERYS,
Clerk of the General Assembly.
W. H. ALBRIGHT,
Secretary of the Senate.

THE PURCHASE AND DISTRIBUTION OF SEED GRAIN.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas submits a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

House resolution 303.

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order for the Committee on Agriculture to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider S. 2897, being "An act to appropriate $5,000,000 for the purchase of seed grain and of seed to be supplied to farmers in the crop-failure areas of the United States, said amount to be expended under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture," thereupon it shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of such consideration the bill shall be reported to the House with such amendments as may have been agreed to; the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and on all amendments thereto to final passage, without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the rule states the purpose for which it was reported out by the committee, and I see no reason why I should make any further statement about it, unless some gentleman desires to ask me a question for information.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. GARNER. Is it the purpose of the gentleman and the leaders on his side of the House to pass this measure at $2,000,000 instead of $1,000,000?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. My purpose and the purpose of the rule is to let the House decide whether it shall pass at $1,000,000 or $2,000,000.

Mr. GARNER. I congratulate the gentleman on his liberality in allowing the House the opportunity to consider the $1,000,000 bill by virtue of the rule. I wondered if it is the intention of the leaders of the House and the gentlemen who are formulating the policy of the organization to place it at $2,000,000 instead of $1,000,000. It is for the gentleman to say.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is not a matter for me to decide. I fear if I should decide it I would decide it in favor of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, when this subject matter was before the House on Monday last I expressed my individual views upon it. Nothing has occurred since, I will say, that has caused me to change those views. However, the House by a very decided majority indicated its willingness to make a loan of $1,000,000 in this territory for seed purposes.

Now, the bill that is made in order by this rule, I assume, is the bill reported from the House Committee on Agriculture. The Senate passed a bill carrying $5,000,000 to make loans for the purpose of purchasing seed and feed in this so-called drought-stricken area. The House Committee on Agriculture amended that bill so as to strike out "$5,000,000" and insert "$2,000,000." The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] on last Monday moved to suspend the rules and pass a bill carrying a million dollars to be loaned for the purchase of seed only.

I assume, of course, that there was some sort of understanding amongst the leaders of the majority whereby the gentleman from Iowa made that motion instead of a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill as reported by his committee. I repeat the House by a decided majority indicated its willingness to appropriate $1,000,000 for seed buying, and the majority having so voted it is not my disposition, if they care to bring in a rule for that, to do further than express my individual views about it, which, as I say, have not changed since that time.

This rule makes the $2,000,000 proposition in order for both seed and feed. I assume the majority will vote for the rule. So far as I am concerned, I shall not contest the adoption of the rule, but I shall watch with a great deal of interest to see what amendments are offered on the majority side when the bill comes up for consideration.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Last year practically this same territory was granted similar loans of $2,000,000. Of that sum will the gentleman tell us exactly how much has been paid back to the Government?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. About $640,000.

Mr. BLANTON. And the amount outside of the $640,000 paid back was secured by a first lien on the crops, and the crops are all gone; and if the security is all gone, then we are to understand that the Government of the United States lost $1,400,000 last year; and if it grants $2,000,000 more of loan this year, if we have no better crops this year than last year, and no better prices, and no better conditions, then we may expect to lose $1,400,000 this year?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman from Texas in his mathematics is far more correct than he usually is on questions that he discusses. His figures are fairly correct.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. I would like to advise the gentleman from Texas in that connection that much of that which remains unpaid has been secured by the agents of the department and is secured now by a lien against this coming season's crop.

Mr. BLANTON. If I may be permitted to say it, whenever you pass the first crop year it is awfully hard to get crop mortgages paid.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. This discussion is pertinent to the bill and not to the rule.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to ask the gentleman something that is pertinent to the Committee on Rules I think.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield for that question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is a great deal of destitution among the coal miners in certain sections of the country—Ohio, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Kentucky, and Alabama. Several resolutions have been introduced to make appropriations for their relief. I have been informed that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] has been making an effort to secure consideration of that proposition by the Committee on Rules and to get them to take some action.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Committee on Rules has never had a suggestion made to it that it had jurisdiction of that question and there is no such matter pending before the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then I have been misinformed. I am glad to get the information.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 62, noes 21.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote because there is no quorum present, and raise the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. It is clear that there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees. As many as favor agreeing to the resolution will, when their names are called, vote "yea," those opposed "nay." The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 201, nays 116, answered "present" 2, not voting 109, as follows:

APPROPRIATION BILL FOR THE DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 10559, making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 10559, making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman if he is going to give the House an opportunity to vote on the items of legislation that have been placed on the bill?

Mr. SHREVE. We hope that when we are through there will be no legislation on the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Another committee of conference has agreed to some legislative matters, and their conference report was printed in yesterday's RECORD. If the gentleman's committee in conference does likewise, agrees to items of legislation, will he give the House an opportunity to vote on it?

Mr. SHREVE. We hope so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. SHREVE, Mr. HUTCHINSON, and Mr. OLIVER.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication:

MARCH 10, 1922.

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MR. SPEAKER: I herewith resign from the following committees: Expenditures in the Department of Commerce, Flood Control, and Insular Affairs.

Very respectfully,

FRANK MURPHY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent the following leaves of absence were granted:

To Mr. MCCLINTIC, for three days, on account of illness.

To Mr. ELLIOTT, indefinitely, on account of sickness in family.

PURCHASE AND DISTRIBUTION OF SEED GRAIN.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 2897, an act to appropriate $5,000,000 for the purchase of seed grain and of feed to be supplied to farmers in the crop-failure areas of the United States, said amount to be expended under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MANN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 2897, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2897) to appropriate $5,000,000 for the purchase of seed grain and of feed to be supplied to farmers in the crop-failure areas of the United States, said amount to be expended under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. As I caught the reading of the rule, the bill was to be considered only under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The rule provides that the bill shall be read.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will there be two readings of the bill or is this the reading for amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. This is the reading for amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. The rule provides that the bill shall first be read and then shall be considered under the 5-minute rule. I think if the Chairman will look at the rule he will see that he is in error.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is correct; this is the first reading of the bill, and the Clerk will finish the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, for the crop of 1922, to make advances or loans to farmers for feed to relieve animals in the crop-failure areas of the United States, where he shall find that special need for such assistance exists, for the purchase of feed and of wheat, oats, barley, and flaxseed, for seed purposes, and, when necessary, to procure such seed and sell same to such farmers. Such advances, loans, or sales shall be made upon such terms and conditions and subject to such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe, including an agreement by each farmer to use the seed thus obtained by him for the production of grain or flaxseed. A first lien on the crop to be produced from seed obtained through a loan, advance, or sale made under this section shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be deemed sufficient security therefor, or in the case of loan for feed for the relief of live stock the lien shall be made on the live stock. The total amount of such advances, loans, or sales to any one farmer shall not exceed the sum of $300. All such advances or loans shall be made through such agencies as the Secretary of Agriculture shall designate. For carrying out the purposes of this section there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000,000, to be immediately available, of which not more than $1,000,000 may be used for the purchase of feed for relief of live stock.

SEC. 2. That any person who shall knowingly make any false representation for the purpose of obtaining an avdance, loan, or sale under this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 15, after the word "hereby," insert the words "authorized to be."

Page 2, line 17, strike out the figures "$5,000,000" and insert "$2,000,000."

Page 2, line 19, after the word "stock," insert "and not more than $20,000 may be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in the administration of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, for the crop of 1922, to make advances or loans to farmers for feed to relieve animals in the crop-failure areas of the United States, where he shall find that special need for such assistance exists, for the purchase of feed and of wheat, oats, barley, and flaxseed, for seed purposes, and when necessary to procure such seed and sell same to such farmers. Such advances, loans, or sales shall be made upon such terms and conditions and subject to such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe, including an agreement by each farmer to use the seed thus obtained by him for the production of grain or flaxseed. A first lien on the crop to be produced from seed obtained through a loan, advance, or sale made under this section shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be deemed sufficient security therefor, or in the case of loan for feed for the relief of live stock the lien shall be made on the live stock. The total amount of such advances, loans, or sales to any one farmer shall not exceed the sum of $300. All such advances or loans shall be made through such agencies as the Secretary of Agriculture shall designate. For carrying out the purposes of this section there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000,000, to be immediately available, of which not more than $1,000,000 may be used for the purchase of feed for relief of live stock.

The Clerk proceeded to read the first committee amendment.

Mr. BLANTON (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that under the rule which was adopted by the House the Senate bill was made in order for consideration, not the Senate bill as amended by the Committee on Agriculture, there being no reference in the rule to any committee amendment of this Senate bill. The whole rule applied to the Senate bill itself. I make the point of order that the Senate bill as read is now open for amendment prior to the reading by the Clerk of the committee amendments; and unless the minority leader, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], desires recognition, I ask for recognition to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the first committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 15, after the word "hereby," insert the words "authorized to be."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition on the amendment. This amendment authorizes, unless the committee amendment be adopted, $5,000,000 to be appropriated and loaned and expended in certain territory of the United States within the confines of about two States. During the year 1918 there existed in the States of Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and Colorado and parts of two other States an unprecedented drought, which had extended over a period of three continuous years in certain sections of the States named. This drought was so great that the farmers had been compelled to nail their homes up and leave. There was not a blade of grass left. The turf was gone. There had not been a drop of rain in some instances in a period of 18 months in certain sections. The cattlemen had been forced to ship their mother cows and calves to market, and where they were not able to sell them as canners, they were forced to ship them across the country hunting grass and water. Under such conditions in order to save them from ruin I introduced a measure here asking that certain loans be extended them in order to buy feed and seed. The matter was turned down because of the one excuse that it was merely an unfortunate situation for the farmers and the cattlemen who happen to live in these six States.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a minute I will. Both the Committee on Agriculture and the Committee on Appropriations said it was merely an unfortunate situation for these people, and they should stand and take their medicine without asking Congress to help them out. That was the condition that existed with respect to six States. Not a dollar was given them, and I know of cattlemen in my section of the country who up to that time were worth $1,000,000 and whose checks were good for $100,000 in a single bank, but who to-day, because of the refusal of Congress to even grant them a loan, despite those conditions, are paupers, and they have not a cent on God's earth to their names.

Mr. BURTNESS. Now, will the gentleman yield on this very point for a correction?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. Because last year these conditions existed in certain other sections of the country, Congress loaned these people in North Dakota and Montana $2,000,000 of the people's money. The crops have passed, have gone out of the control of this Congress, and only $600,000 was repaid. There was an actual loss to the Treasury of $1,400,000 last year. In the face of those circumstances, because these people are unfortunate and had a poor crop year, this Congress now comes forward and says that it will add another million four hundred thousand dollars loss, and that this year they will deplete the Treasury of the people and take another $2,000,000 out and send it to the winds of the West, and perhaps get $600,000 back, and perhaps not get anything back. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does not the gentleman remember that his own State of Texas in the very year that he claims Texas received nothing did receive from the Federal Treasury by way of loans for seed purposes the sum of $292,000?

Mr. BLANTON. In 1918 not a single cent. Later on, after it was too late to save the farmers and the stockmen from ruin, they did get help after long insistence.

Mr. BURTNESS. In 1919?

Mr. BLANTON. In the latter part of 1919, from the President's fund; yes. In 1918 not a single cent.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does not the gentleman know that out of the President's loan fund $292,000 went to Texas?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; it went there in 1919 when it was too late to do good. I remember it distinctly, because a Texas man, Hon. Clarence Owsley, was Assistant Secretary of Agriculture. I went to him and placed the proposition before him; I told him it meant the ruination of the cowmen of the West and of our farmers, and he turned me down, and he turned them down to their ruin.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does the gentleman contend that Texas did not receive $292,000 of loans from the seed-loan fund provided by President Wilson?

Mr. BLANTON. Later, yes; but in the time that the emergency existed in 1918 not one cent.

Mr. BURTNESS. But did not the gentleman's district benefit from that loan fund?

Mr. BLANTON. Not a dollar; not a farmer or a cattleman in my district got one cent when the emergency existed.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I think it is well to let the committee understand briefly the history of the seed loans. The first seed loan that was made was made out of the presidential contingent fund, and was not made to help farmers. The first loan was made by reason of the war to encourage the people to plant wheat to help win the war, and that loan was made out of the President's contingent fund through the Federal farm loan banks. However, there was Government help for certain classes of people engaged in agriculture during that administration. The Secretary of the Treasury took a large fund and deposited it in Texas banks, and it was loaned and used to help the drought-stricken regions of Texas—not $2,000,000 but more than $50,000,000 in that one State.

My name has been mentioned here with reference to a bill which has been reported with an insinuation that I was to forgive the debt. When the President loaned money out of his contingent fund in order to produce food to help win the war the contract that the Federal farm loan banks made provided that they should not repay the loan in case of a crop failure. It also provided a schedule of interest which ran as high as 77 per cent in some cases. Now, the contract did not define a crop failure. Subsequently Congress passed a law defining a crop failure under that contract at 5 bushels or less. The only bill I have reported on this subject rather is this. Some men who did not raise 5 bushels previous to the signing of the contract of a crop failure paid in $62,000. The Federal farm loan banks wanted to settle all that matter with the Treasury and with those people and the bill I reported was simply to clarify the situation enough to return the money——

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. I will.

Mr. SNELL. Is the act of May 31, 1920, the one that defines a crop failure?

Mr. TINCHER. No.

Mr. SNELL. What was that act?

Mr. TINCHER. In 1921 this Congress did pass a law by way of an amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill appropriating money to be actually loaned to pioneers that had crop failures to the extent that they were needing money for seed. This is the loan where they paid the Government $660,000, as I recall it, out of the $2,000,000, and they have a lien on the personal property of the farmers for a considerable portion of the balance. Now, the only reason these loans were not paid in total was by reason of another crop failure. I believe as an economic proposition that we have got the choice of saying to these people, these farmers, "You get off or arrange for seed to try another crop." My section of the country is not affected at all by this. The section where I live is the greatest agricultural section in the world. We have the seed; we are not calling for it, but those who need it should get it. I lived there when we were pioneers. I live where the now greatest agricultural section of this country was classed by my friends in the East as a semiarid region. I know some of the trials of the pioneer, and I know how hard it is, but I believe that when these pioneers have experimented until they find what is the proper crop in the country that they are going to make a go of it like all the western country have. Every time they moved a few hundred miles west the folks back home told them that they were going to an impractical agricultural region. I believe this will be a success, but we have to face a situation. Here are these men on this land; they own the land. One man says that there have been three or four crop failures already. He says they can not raise a crop——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TINCHER. I ask for three minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TINCHER. Now, that does not necessarily follow from the fact that there have been three or four failures. The best section of our State had as high as seven crop failures. Now, these men have improved their farms, they are taxpayers, food producers, and some of the best farms in the country have been adapted to a kind of agriculture that can be successfully carried on in that section of the country, and if this Government did not collect a dollar, in the interest of humanity and the growing population of this country it could not better expend $2,000,000 than to go on with these experiments, neither could it expend $2,000,000 on a hardier, more patriotic, hard working, worthy class of people than these pioneers who have been out there trying to follow in the footsteps of their forefathers and extend the limits of our country as it has been extended in the past. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman if any loans were made in his section of Kansas in those days of which he speaks?

Mr. TINCHER. No, sir; they were not. But that is no reason why there should not be in these days. We did not spend much money on battleships out of the Federal Treasury in those days. I believe the Federal Government was run on less than a billion dollars a year, much less.

Mr. BRAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. I will.

Mr. BRAND. I want to ask the gentleman why they do not authorize these banks to require the giving of a mortgage on the land instead of on the crop, which is indefinite and uncertain?

Mr. TINCHER. I will frankly say to the gentleman I have no direct testimony, but my experience with the pioneer is that if he gave a first lien on anything he never would go on one of these claims on these pieces of land. The chances are, I will say to my friend, that every one of these men——

Mr. BRAND. He can give a second mortgage.

Mr. TINCHER. He would have no relief in giving a second mortgage.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. TINCHER. I will.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to be entirely clear in my own mind in regard to this act of May 31, 1920. In the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture to Senator NORRIS, given in the Senate hearings, it speaks of the loan made in 1918 and 1919, about $4,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SNELL. In this letter he says $4,200,000 was loaned, and $1,613,000 of the principal has been released under the act approved May 31, 1920, and $1,143,000 was still to be paid.

Mr. TINCHER. That is the old loan—that is, that part that was released was loaned out of the President's contingent fund, and that was where there was a crop failure.

Mr. SNELL. That has nothing to do with the 5-bushel-an-acre proposition?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes; that was the law telling what a crop failure was under the terms of the bank contract.

Mr. BURTNESS. There seems to be an understanding that the bill which the gentleman has reported released the men who did not get 5 bushels per acre last year from the loan passed in February or March, 1921. That is not correct, is it?

Mr. TINCHER. The language of the bill, in view of the other law, is probably subject to criticism, but it was not introduced and never was intended to cover that lien. It was contemplated only with reference to the President's loan, and a subcommittee now is preparing an amendment so that it will be made clear that it does not apply to the loan made by the Government.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I referred to the gentleman's measure the other day. I will say to the gentleman that the impression made upon me by reading the bill which the gentleman reported was that it would indubitably include the loan.

Mr. TINCHER. If you notice the proviso, it is clear we do not intend that. I think the gentleman is right. It is subject to that criticism, and we have a committee amendment to clarify the bill in that respect.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 17, strike out "$5,000,000" and insert "$2,000,000."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if no other gentleman wants recognition, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Strike out "$2,000,000" and insert "$1,000,000."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee to the committee amendment: Strike out "$2,000,000" and insert "$1,000,000."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, that places the matter before the House in the shape in which the House voted the other day upon the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. This says $1,000,000 may be used for the purchase of feed for the relief of live stock.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will say this to the gentleman: If this should prevail, I shall subsequently offer an amendment, unless some one else does so—I am not trying to take this bill away from the gentleman from Iowa—to strike out the feed provisions of the bill, so as to bring it exactly in the shape that the House had it the other day.

Mr. SNELL. As a matter of fact, if we have got to have the bill, is it not good policy to let them feed their stock, so that they can put in this grain when we buy it for them?

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment to the amendment. I shall not limit my remarks strictly to that. However, I want to detail as briefly as possible something about the situation out there, and I believe I can do it in rather an unprejudiced way, for I happen to come from a district in North Dakota which has not used this loan, which did not avail itself of the law which you passed a year ago, and which will not borrow one cent of this money if you pass this appropriation, whether it be passed for $1,000,000 or $2,000,000. The reason for that is simply because I represent the Red River Valley district of the State, which has never had a total crop failure because of drought during the 35 to 45 years it has been settled. I emphasize that to impress upon your minds that the territory that will be affected by and urgently needs this legislation is not the territory that has been settled for 30 or 40 years, but rather the territory that was homesteaded and settled, at the invitation of the Government itself, between 10 and 15 years ago. You remember how you passed your enlarged homestead entry act, and said to the people that if they would come out into semiarid regions and make their homes they would get 320 acres of this semiarid land. The Government was responsible for a great deal of propaganda, and much of it valuable, in favor of the so-called dry farming. Every inducement was held out to people from the East and Middle West to go out there, with the result that young men and women did go, without much money, it is true, but all with the willingness to work and an ardent desire to obtain homes. During the first few years they prospered. The crops raised in the State of Montana beginning with the years 1908 and 1909, until shortly before the war, were in most districts bountiful. This was also true in considerable portions of western North Dakota. The drought years, however, commenced shortly before the World War, the annual crops decreased, and that brought a great deal of sentiment along the lines of diversification of farming.

They had theretofore been successful in wheat and grain farming, but they began to realize if they were to be permanently successful they would have to diversify; they would have to get some cows, some hogs, chickens, and so forth. Suddenly the war came on. You know that as soon as the war came on the cry of this country and of the Allies was for wheat and for more wheat, and that interfered seriously with the program of diversification in that country. They answered their country's demand, did their patriotic duty, thinking perhaps also they could make money incidentally by continuing to seed wheat. But drought conditions became worse and worse year by year. With the first, or at least the second, year's drought, these people had to go to the banks and mortgage their machinery and horses and cattle and get a loan with which to feed themselves and carry on their operations for the next year. They did that, but they had another crop failure. The Democratic leader suggested the other day that these men had not exhausted their credit, but if you consider the drought conditions in recent years in the State of Montana and the western portions of my State you will realize they have exhausted every credit at their disposal. The security held by the banks and others taken several years ago and sufficient then is not to-day worth more than a small percentage of what it was worth when the loan was made to the individual farmers. They have nothing else to pledge or mortgage. Their real estate is encumbered to the limit. In many cases taxes have remained unpaid for two and three years.

Not only that, but in the year 1918 the legislature of my State, for instance, was called into special session for the purpose of passing legislation that would give to these drought-stricken counties an opportunity to raise money through the issue of bonds for the purpose of making loans to farmers for seed and feed. Such legislation was passed. The State of Montana has a similar law. In each one of these counties they have gone the limit. They have sold all the bonds they possibly can, and every public and private opportunity for further credit has been exhausted. The situation has been so serious that a year ago and again this year, in some places, the Red Cross and other charitable organizations have had to help out.

Not only that, but coming along this winter we had splendid weather out there until shortly after the first of the year. Then snowstorms came and severe cold, and some of the cattle and horses out on the ranges, half starved as they were, have died, and these settlers need this help and this credit. They need it badly, and they need at least the two million recommended by the committee.

I went through this territory out to the Montana line last October, and I saw these things with my own eyes. I know what they are. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] stated the other day that this bill, in his opinion, was for the purpose of relieving the followers of the Nonpartisan League.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, may I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTNESS. The occasion of my going out to the Montana line was that I was then doing my best to try to convince the people of my State that they had been honestly but blindly following the leadership of the Nonpartisan League long enough, and I may also refer to the fact that the distinguished Democratic Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] felt that the evils of the Nonpartisan League were so serious that he stumped the State for the election of a Republican candidate for governor last year. With these facts in mind, there need be no fear that this is a measure proposed for the benefit of any political organization whatever.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman refers to a statement that I made. The gentleman will not dispute the fact that the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] who was elected by the Nonpartisan League, appeared in support of this bill in the Senate hearing; and the gentleman will not dispute the fact that of the 29 letters and telegrams inserted in the hearings advocating this legislation every one of them is from the State of North Dakota.

Mr. BURTNESS. That may be so. But while I have not looked at the names of the wires and letters, I am quite sure that more than half of the wires came from people who are not members of the Nonpartisan League, but from people who have been opponents of that organization for years. This is a question bigger than factional politics; it involves the welfare of thousands of people, and in its discussions party and factional lines should be entirely eliminated.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. I shall be glad to yield later. I can not yield just now.

The need is there. What is the answer? Some say we have no authority to extend this aid in this manner, and some assert that we are establishing a dangerous precedent. I am sorry to see that men who make such statements are men who come from agricultural districts of the South. As far back as the year 1867 $50,000 was granted for the relief of drought-stricken districts in the South, and I might mention that since then appropriation after appropriation has been made for flood sufferers. Appropriations aggregating $180,000 were made in 1875 for regions ravaged by grasshoppers.

People who suffered from flood or other causes have done so, perhaps, not to any greater extent than those settlers in the Northwest have who have gone out into that country to make homes. One case was as much the act of God as the other and over which the individual had no control. I regret to see that men who came here last summer and pleaded almost with tears in their eyes and again yesterday afternoon for appropriations to control the boll weevil in the South are opposing this proposition here to-day. What did we do for you last July? We appropriated $200,000. What strings did we attach to it? Did we provide that the $200,000 which we appropriated last July should be used for seed? Did we compel your farmers to put seed or work into the ground and try to produce something? No; not at all. No string whatever was attached to it. It was appropriated purely for the rental value of the land, for land upon which cotton could not be grown in a particular year because of the law of your particular States which prohibited the planting of cotton in the infected areas. We did not even loan the money to you. We gave it to you absolutely. Appropriations were made to reimburse individuals against loss who did not even have to try to use their land for any purpose whatsoever. The only limit was that it should not exceed $5 per acre. The amount proposed in this bill is limited to $300 to an individual. The average size of the farms out there is probably 320 acres, or less than a dollar per acre. Compare the fairness of the two appropriations, if you please. We propose to raise food for the country as well as to pay the amount back; you got the money for land which might lie idle.

I want to remind the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who spoke here this afternoon, that his State in 1919 received from the President's fund $292,000, the State of Kansas received $943,000, and the State of Oklahoma $773,000. From last year's loan North Dakota received $805,768. I feel that the wheat farmers have a special reason to ask you for assistance. You remember how during the war you limited the price of wheat. You commandeered the wheat farmer's profits during the war. Conservatively estimated, the wheat farmers of the country lost $500,000,000 through the setting of a price on wheat. The Government itself, whether you agree with the estimate just made or not, the United States Treasury made a clear profit of $50,000,000 on the small percentage of wheat that it did actually purchase. All that we are asking here now is that we get a little bit of it back, a little bit of an appropriation to help out these wheat farmers who have not been getting a crop, due to no fault of their own, for the last four or five years. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is always unpleasant to oppose a request for funds out of the Treasury based upon the ground that it is necessary to relieve suffering. But I think we should first understand the situation with respect to this matter. In the first place, I know that gentlemen of the House understand that there is no relevancy in the argument last made by the gentleman who has just preceded me [Mr. BURTNESS] with reference to expenditures for scientific research or for the Bureau of Entomology in endeavoring to discover some way of destroying the cotton boll weevil and the pink bollworm affecting the cotton plant. These appropriations are made just as we appropriate for the white-pine blister and the European corn borer and the tuberculosis among cattle and the foot-and-mouth disease and to prevent wheat rust. But there is no comparison between such appropriations and this proposition to have the Government lend money directly to some citizens. The question here is whether or not a condition exists which demands a continuance of the policy established a few years ago by the Congress of playing Santa Claus in the distribution of public funds to people who suffer in their business. Now, let us see what has been done. The State of North Dakota in 1919 had an acreage in spring wheat of 9,098,000 acres, and there were produced on those 9,000,000 acres 62,776,000 bushels of wheat. The average yield for that year throughout the country was 8.2 bushels per acre. They produced in North Dakota only 6.9 bushels, which was less than the average; but the next year, 1920, they planted 8,916,000 acres and they produced 80,244,000 bushels of wheat, which was an average of 9 bushels per acre, when the average for the country was only 10.5 bushels per acre. They came pretty near making the average for the whole country.

Now, in 1921, last year, they reduced their acreage and they planted in spring wheat only 8,827,000 acres, and on that reduced acreage they made 73,264,000 bushels of wheat, or an average per acre of 8.3 bushels, whereas the average for the entire country was only 10.5 bushels, so they were only a little under the average production per acre of the entire country.

In Montana, the other State now seeking aid, they had a terrible condition in 1919. They planted 3,083,000 acres and they produced only 7,091,000 bushels of wheat. The yield in Montana was only 2.3 bushels per acre, whereas the average for the country was 8.2 bushels per acre.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. YOUNG. The gentleman's figures are incorrect. In Montana in that year they produced 9,889,000 bushels, or about 2,000,000 bushels more than the gentleman makes it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I got the figures from the Department of Agriculture within the last hour, and I made Mr. Estabrook check up the figures the second time, and he told me there could be no question about their accuracy. If there is any discrepancy it is because of the fact that the gentleman's figures were not based on the last census, which Mr. Estabrook tells me is completed, and that my figures are the latest and most accurate figures in the possession of the Department of Agriculture.

In 1920 they planted 2,377,000 acres on which there was raised 23,770,000 bushels of wheat, an average of 10 bushels for the State as against an average of 10.5 bushels for the entire country.

Last year, 1921—and I want the House to listen to this—in the year just closed they planted 1,995,000 acres, and with an acreage of 400,000 acres less the yield was more than in 1920, to wit, 23,945,000 bushels, or an average yield per acre of 12 bushels, against an average yield for the entire country of only 10.5 bushels; so that in Montana they made more per acre than did the other States, on an average.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. HERRICK. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late to reserve the right to object. There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; I can not yield. I have not the time. Gentlemen of the House will argue plausibly that even though it be shown that Montana has made 12 bushels per acre as against an average for the whole country of 10.5 bushels, nevertheless that does not help Jim Smith or John Jones, who live in a county that did not make the average. But the answer is this, that if the State of Montana has made an average of 12 bushels per acre, then the State of Montana is in as good financial fix as are the other States of the West, and if it is in as good fix as the others, then the State of Montana ought to take care of its own people, instead of coming here to the Federal Government.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can not yield. I can go to my own district to-day, where, not because of drought but because of rain for 33 days continuously and because of the boll weevil, the farmers last year did not make one-fifth of a crop in many counties. Are they here asking that the United States Government contribute money out of the Treasury for their aid? No; but if you establish this precedent they will be, and with equal justification. I will tell you the history of this thing. In 1918, during the war, when advances were first made, there was a contract that the man who made more than 5 bushels per acre should chip in to help the man who made less than 5 bushels per acre. Then, in 1920, the Agricultural bill went to the Senate—Santa Claus lives at the other end of the Capitol—and there was tacked onto the appropriation bill the proposition that the note of every man who made less than 5 bushels per acre should be canceled. Last year, in 1921, the Agricultural bill went to the Senate, and an appropriation similar to this one was added to the bill. I happened to be one of the conferees and I know what occurred. If it had not been for one Senator from the State of North Dakota, the chairman of the Agricultural Committee, that proposition would never have come into this House, but that gentleman, for whom I had great respect and admiration, was going out of the Senate, and he wanted this item, and he stuck there, and finally the leaders of this House, in the closing days of Congress, yielded to one man, and the House compromised, reducing the amount from $5,000,000 down to $2,000,000. They brought it in here, and men who had heretofore been against it reversed their position, and they put it through. Gentlemen got up on this floor and said it was a terrible condition that never would occur again, and they said, "Vote for us this time and the Lord will bless you," in the language of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. RIDDICK]. I have no doubt the Lord blessed us, but they are back here again, and the figures show that whereas less than 19 per cent was paid back on the loans made out of St. Paul, in 1920, now they show that of the loans made last year only $625,630 has been paid back out of the $2,000,000, and you might as well face it that you are giving them this $2,000,000 now proposed in this bill.

The truth is these people have the habit. They got the State of North Dakota to go into the banking business, and the State went broke. Now they have transferred their affection from the government of North Dakota to the Government of the United States, and if you keep this up you will break the Government of the United States as they have North Dakota. In my district and every other district wherever the people lose a crop they will come to the Treasury to reimburse them. They will have just as much right as have these people.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does not the gentleman remember that in 1916 his State received a part of the appropriation of $540,000 for flood sufferers?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I have no doubt they did; the chances are that in years past flood sufferers in different parts of the country have received relief; but every time you do that you lend an inducement to somebody else to ask for aid. Where will you draw the line? If you are going in the business of insuring crops and against loss by floods and fires without paying premiums let us know and let us put in the bills now; but I want to ask you where will you get the money to pay the bills that come in?

The truth is the only section where there has been a crop failure for the past three years is the dry-farming section, where the department says they can not hope to make a crop but about once in every five or six years. The land is good for grazing only. If you pay them every time they fail to make a crop you will do so four out of every five years.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment close in 22 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto close in 22 minutes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask whether the gentleman is going to accept the amendment reducing the amount from two millions to one million? If so, perhaps they will not need any debate.

Mr. HAUGEN. If I can have two minutes I will explain my position.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If one million was sufficient on last Monday what has happened since to change it?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Further reserving the right to object, I would like to ask if the gentleman moves to close debate on the committee amendment or the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee?

The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman was to close debate upon the committee amendment and all amendments thereto.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture did not make that request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. HAUGEN. My request was that all debate should close in 22 minutes on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will restate the request. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee be closed in 22 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of two millions was authorized by the committee. After conferring with the majority members of the committee and Members from various States in order to expedite the passage of the bill I moved to suspend the rules and cut it to $1,000,000. The $2,000,000 carries out the instructions of the Committee on Agriculture. The amount proposed is $2,000,000. The House can, of course, change it if it sees fit.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If one million was sufficient last Monday what has occurred to change the sum?

Mr. HAUGEN. I stated that after conferring with the majority members of the committee and Members from various States it was suggested that it might expedite its passage if cut down to $1,000,000.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understood the gentleman to say that on Monday last he was carrying out the will of the gentlemen with whom he consulted, and to-day he is trying to carry out the will of this committee.

Mr. HAUGEN. I did it at the suggestion of the committee and Members from States interested.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, the former President asked Congress, if you remember, for an appropriation of $200,000,000 for sufferers in Austria, Poland, and other parts of Europe. That matter was considered, and finally they concluded to give the President $50,000,000, not out of the Treasury of the United States but from the property of the United States Grain Corporation. Let us see where that $50,000,000 was made. The figures show that one-eleventh of all of the grain and wheat handled by the United States Grain Corporation came from the State of North Dakota, and therefore $4,500,000 of the profits made by the United States Grain Corporation was made out of the wheat that was grown in the State of North Dakota. This does not include the profits they made out of wheat grown in the State of Montana. Now, remember that when Congress got liberal with $50,000,000 for relief of these foreign sufferers it was the property of the United States Grain Corporation made out of the farmers by the handling of wheat during the war years. In Canada, where they handled the wheat crop in a similar way, the profits were distributed back to the farmers, pro rata, and if that had been done in the United States there would have been sent back to the farmers of North Dakota $4,500,000. I think it is worth while to take that into account. We are asking here for a total of $2,000,000 for North Dakota, Montana, and all other drought areas because it is absolutely needed. If you cut that amount to $1,000,000, or any other amount, you are going to leave out a large number of settlers who absolutely need it and ought to have it. It will be an arbitrary cut without regard to the requirements of those who absolutely need the seed, and I hope, gentlemen, you will keep that in mind.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. YOUNG. Very briefly.

Mr. LAYTON. Would the gentleman support a proposition for a million-dollar loan this year, if they have a failure of crops in North Dakota and the other States, and next year if they have another failure there?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If it goes that far, we might as well throw all of that country into a forest reserve, and let the Government take it, first-hand.

Mr. YOUNG. Oh, I would state that the gentleman's State, Washington, got some loans out of the appropriation made last year.

Mr. LAYTON. In my State we had a total failure last year by reason of frost, of pretty nearly every crop we make. Is the gentleman willing to vote to give my farmers Government aid?

Mr. YOUNG. I am willing to do the fair thing or whatever seems to be needed for any State where you can show that the farmers are in an extremity equal to that of North Dakota and Montana.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I can not yield further. As to the remark of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] about the average yield in Montana, it must be remembered that in some parts of Montana they have irrigation, and in some portions of the State they had bountiful crops. In the areas where this money is asked they had practically no crops. You can not arbitrarily say because they made an average of 12 bushels to the acre in Montana that those who ask for this got 12 bushels to the acre. As a matter of fact, they got nothing, or practically nothing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, if my memory serves me correctly, if we pass this bill, Congress will then have passed three appropriations of this kind within recent years. The first was the loan out of the emergency fund that Congress appropriated for the President. That was during war times and, of course, no one criticizes it. Last year Congress appropriated $2,000,000 to be spent practically in these same two States, and now we have before us another bill to appropriate a similar amount. Taking these three together, and having in mind that the States of Montana and North Dakota have been sharing most largely in the loans, reminds me of that old song we used to sing at camp meeting—"Each victory will help you some other to win." Our friends from North Dakota and Montana have become so accustomed to this thing, I imagine they are going to be hard to wean away from it.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman tell us how he voted on the question of seed yesterday?

Mr. BLACK. I voted for the appropriation to continue the usual distribution of garden and flower seed because it applied to the country as a whole. It is a distribution which has been long established and which it would probably be well to not discontinue at this time. Replying to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS], and the proposition that there are needy farmers in his State, I do not controvert that statement for a moment. I doubt if there is an agricultural section in the United States where there are not needy farmers. The Congress has recognized the peculiarly difficult situation as to agriculture and has undertaken to give relief to the live-stock and farming interests of the country through the operations of the War Finance Corporation, the wisest and most constructive manner that can be used I think. I have been a warm supporter of that legislation and am very much gratified at the good it has done. In the debate which we had upon this seed bill last Monday, when an effort was made to suspend the rules and pass it without opportunity being given to amend it, I referred to the fact that the people of North Dakota had taken advantage of the facilities of the War Finance Corporation and had borrowed more money—and I do not criticize them for it nor find fault—than any other State in the Union, outside of the State of Iowa, excluding borrowings by cooperative associations.

I gave the figures in the debate. Those figures were for the period up to the 4th day of February, 1922. Since this debate began to-day I have telephoned to the War Finance Corporation to find how much more money has been loaned in the States of Montana and North Dakota since the date of the last figures I had, and here is what I find: Twelve million four hundred and sixty thousand dollars had been loaned to the farmers of North Dakota up to the 4th of February, and to March 4 this total amount has been increased to $17,416,000. That shows that the farmers of North Dakota are not being left without financial assistance, and it means that during the last month the War Finance Corporation has loaned in that State for agricultural and live stock purposes $4,956,000, nearly $5,000,000. Let us take the State of Montana. Montana had borrowed up to February 4, $6,522,000. On March 4 the borrowings from Montana had increased to $9,374,000, which means that the farmers of Montana are not without financial assistance, because during the last month they have borrowed $2,852,000. I am not complaining of these borrowings. I am glad of it. I am glad Congress had the wisdom to afford the facilities of the War Finance Corporation. I do not say these farmers of North Dakota and Montana are not in hard financial shape. I have plenty of farmers in my own district that scarcely made a bale of cotton in 1921 on account of the ravages of the boll weevil. Those farmers are in most urgent need, but they are not asking the Government to furnish them seed. While the cotton crop was very short in Texas, and particularly in the part of it in which I live, still there is plenty of seed so far as I know. While there may have been some short crops last year in certain portions of North Dakota and Montana, still the States as a whole made very good crops, and I can not imagine there is any scarcity of planting seed in any one of them. The State of North Dakota has tried almost every other experiment, and I suggest now that it try for a while the experiment of furnishing seed to its own farmers. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I take it to be a foregone conclusion that this bill will pass, and therefore it is not with the expectation of affecting any vote that I venture to make one or two general observations. I assume, as the gentlemen from the Northwest have told us, that the condition there is deplorable. It may be likewise safely assumed that the condition of the agriculturist in every State is deplorable, and that such is not only the case with respect to the agricultural interests but is the case to a large extent with respect to the industrial occupations. If I cared to localize this matter, as I have no disposition to do, I could take gentlemen to a near-by district across the Potomac and bring them in contact with farmers who have suffered or are suffering great and constant losses. If I chose to localize further, I could bring gentlemen in touch with hundreds of people here in the city of Washington who are unemployed and without any means of support. Recently, for instance, there have been dropped from the rolls of the navy yard employees without means, having large families to take care of, who do not know in what direction to turn. In a time like this, if we are to be swayed by mere sympathy for human needs, we will have to take almost universal action in the way of making appropriations. There is not a day in a time like this when between morning and evening misfortune is not being sustained and hearts breaking. If we are to take the course marked out for us by this relation to a particular situation in the Northwest, how can we decline to respond to similar appeals to our sympathy and take a similar course relative to a multitude of similar situations, following our sympathetic impulses and doing what our intellect and sense of duty can not approve? Gentlemen vouch precedents. It is a very dangerous thing for those conducting government to be guided solely by precedent. I remember in one of his letters Junius says in substance that most of the evils and vices of government are built up on the basis of precedent, a truism which we may now well ponder. We are now accepting bad precedents already made to justify another, and then we are falling into a habit that is indefensible. Mark where we are going and how rapidly we are going. Notice, for one thing, how private property is put in peril by such an action as gentlemen are standing for here to-day. We have the unlimited power of taxation. That is settled. Now, if in addition we exercise the unlimited right of expenditure——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Two minutes more, Mr. Chairman, I ask.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is limited.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent that I may have two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the request, but will state to the gentleman at the same time that the time limit was allotted by the Chair, and if the gentleman gets two additional minutes it comes out of some one else's time.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I will yield two minutes to my colleague.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. What I was saying is this, and it is something that none of us can overlook: Congress has the unlimited power of taxation, and when it goes further and exercises the unlimited power to appropriate, the ownership of private property has no assurance of being maintained and the institutions of the country, which we are sworn to protect, are subjected to danger. Can we afford, because some people in the Northwest are in a bad condition—and I have no doubt of the fact—can we afford to do this thing and add another to a line of dangerous precedents? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I will yield back my time.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I always listen to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] with a great deal of pleasure and profit. I consider him one of the substantial, solid, thinking men of this House, but I am sorry that I can not follow him on this occasion. A great emergency exists in certain portions of North Dakota and Montana, an emergency so great that local political units can not take care of the situation. The proposition to appropriate $2,000,000 to assist the people up in that section of the country is not a new one, it is true. Congress has from time to time been called upon to make appropriations to relieve unusual conditions. The San Francisco earthquake brought $2,500,000 relief from the Government.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. One of the first measures I voted for in becoming a Member of Congress was an appropriation to relieve flood sufferers in South Carolina, Georgia, and several other States along the south Atlantic seaboard. Why did I vote for it? Because I realized that it was an unusual condition that was beyond the power of the local political unit to take care of, and that is the condition we have here. If the amendment by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] to cut this appropriation from $2,000,000 to $1,000,000 is made, it is not going to cover the purpose. Either take care of the situation as it exists or else let us pass it up altogether. Half-way measures will not do in this case, and I want to say to you gentlemen that if this appropriation is not made, there will be several hundred thousand acres of agricultural land in the Northwest that will not be put in a crop this year. I ask you if this is a local matter? Is not the food supply of the country a thing that affects every one of us most vitally?

Mr. SNELL. Has it affected it any in the last five years when they have not raised anything?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee) there were—ayes 60, noes 61.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in view of the close vote, I will ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. HAUGEN and Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee) reported that there were—ayes 91, noes 66.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the committee amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 19, after the word "stock," insert "and not more than $20,000 may be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in the administration of this act."

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment. To insert after the word "used," in line 20, the words "in the District of Columbia or elsewhere."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 20, after the word "used," insert "in the District of Columbia or elsewhere."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is this vote on the whole committee amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. On making $20,000 available.

Mr. SNELL. I ask to be recognized on the proposed amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has the floor.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Does the amendment read "in the District of Columbia or elsewhere," or "in the District of Columbia and elsewhere"?

Mr. HAUGEN. "And elsewhere," it should be.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If it is to be used in the District of Columbia, as the amendment stands they can not use it anywhere else. If it is to be used elsewhere, it can not be used in the District of Columbia; but I think the intention is to use it in the District of Columbia and elsewhere.

Mr. HAUGEN. That is right.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. But as read it was in the District of Columbia or elsewhere.

Mr. HAUGEN. Well, it should be "and elsewhere."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has it "or elsewhere."

The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment by striking out "or" and inserting "and." Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, in regard to this proposition of $20,000 for making these loans and collecting the same, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee why he limits that to $20,000 when the report before the House in regard to the last loan is that they have spent $30,000 on it already, and the Secretary of Agriculture says he will have to have $40,000 more if he ever collects the balance.

Now, I would like to know how we are going to start making a new loan and collecting it for less than one-half of what it cost us for the present one.

Mr. HAUGEN. I desire to say to the gentleman that they expended $16,850. This appropriation has been reduced to $1,000,000, and if that can not be administered for $20,000 we had better get somebody else who can do it. It was the intention of the committee to help these farmers, not to give employment to people. I have here the statement of the Secretary of Agriculture. It reports $16,850 expended in making the loans.

Mr. SNELL. Does that include the collections?

Mr. HAUGEN. No.

Mr. SNELL. You have got to collect this money. This letter to Senator Norris says he has spent $30,000 in collections.

Mr. HAUGEN. The salaries paid in collecting loans were $18,250. Would the gentleman stand for an expenditure of that kind?

Mr. SNELL. I do not want to stand for any part of this appropriation.

Mr. HAUGEN. Has not the time come here to limit these appropriations, so that we may know how the money is to be expended, or shall we leave it for others to spend it to suit their own will?

Mr. SNELL. I do not stand for any part of this, but if we loan this money we ought to see that it is collected.

Mr. HAUGEN. In my opinion it can be collected for that amount, but if the gentleman wants to increase it——

Mr. SNELL. I take the evidence of the man that is doing the work and the experience of last year.

Mr. HAUGEN. I am more interested in furnishing these people with seed than in furnishing a job to some one over in the department.

Mr. SNELL. I am with the gentleman on that.

Mr. PADGETT. Is it really expected to collect it?

Mr. SNELL. I do not understand it is.

Mr. PADGETT. Out of the loan of $2,000,000 they have collected about $650,000, and the gentleman told me that the balance of it has gone, and out of this last loan they will collect nothing.

Mr. HAUGEN. The expenditure was $1,954,939.50. That is the amount loaned. The amount collected was $640,691.11.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, this proposition comes before us purely on the ground of a wheat crop failure in these States during the last year. How any man who listened to the very careful, explicit speech made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], that actually showed from statistics that the wheat crop of the State of Montana exceeded the average wheat crop throughout the whole country by nearly 2 bushels an acre, can vote to give them an appropriation of this kind, I can not understand.

The State of Montana borrowed $1,000,000 last year and paid back only $300,000, or practically that, notwithstanding that fact they had a wheat crop that was nearly 2 bushels per acre larger than the average crop in the country for that year.

Why, I am further opposed to this proposition is the fact that the States themselves as States have not put one single dollar into this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Reserving the right to object. I want to go on with the agricultural bill this afternoon, and I shall object to any further extension.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me that the States themselves should do something to take care of their people before they come to the Federal Government for aid, and the evidence shows they have not done anything. And another proposition that bothers me very much is the evidence from the Secretary of Agriculture, as set forth in the letter to Senator NORRIS, that said the agent found it the quite general opinion among all the people up there that the debt of last year should not be paid back to the Government, but that it was a gratuity. Certainly if we should go on and make another loan to them this year without collecting this last year's loan they will be absolutely sure it is a gratuity of the Federal Government, and that they will be under no obligation to pay it. I think this a pretty bad precedent. The gentleman from North Dakota said his part of the State was in good condition. That shows that the whole State is not in want. But the State of North Dakota has not put one dollar into this proposition, and, of course, it never will as long as they can come to the Federal Treasury and get it by asking. I feel it is a mistake to grant these requests at this time and continue this precedent of lending Federal money to individuals.

And I further think it is a pretty poor excuse that has been offered here that the State can not do anything for these poor people on account of their State constitution, and then these same people want the Federal Government to do what they will not do themselves, for there is certainly no authority in the Federal Constitution to lend this money.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate on the committee amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Chairman, I want to answer briefly the statements of the last speaker. A great emergency exists among the people of my country. They need help in certain sections. It is not the whole State of North Dakota, nor the whole State of Montana, that needs help, but individual portions of each. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] here have referred to the fact that the average wheat production of Montana for last year is above the average of the production throughout the whole country. That may be true, taking the State as a whole, but there are certain sections of Montana and of my own State where no amount of grain was produced at all, and it is these portions that need help and that we propose to help by this bill. It is not answering the question that a great need exists to say that the Red River Valley of North Dakota had an average crop last year and therefore needs no aid, when the facts disclose that many counties in the western part of the State did not raise any crop at all. And the purpose of this bill is to give aid to people in those regions that are in great need. The gentleman also asked the question: "Why does not the State do something?" I wonder if he understands the constitutional limitations of States, counties, and townships in the matter of increasing debts? These political subdivisions have in times past, and even in the past year, done all that they could do in a constitutional way in providing funds for seed and feed aid for their citizens, and have reached the constitutional debt limit. They can legally do no more.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINCLAIR. Now, it would be necessary, if they wish to do any more, to call a constitutional convention, or something of that kind, before bonds could be issued to raise the money. Obviously that procedure could not be brought about in time to do any good in this emergency.

Mr. SNELL. Is there any provision in the Federal Constitution that permits us to go and lend money to farmers of North Dakota? Is it any worse for you to amend your constitution than for us to amend ours?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I believe the Congress has ample powers to do what we are trying to do now, because we have the power to provide for the general welfare of the whole country, and we also have the power to promote the production of the food supply of the country.

Mr. SNELL. Can not the State take care of its own people?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I think I have answered the gentleman's question. What we have to determine is whether we shall force these settlers to abandon their homes for the want of seed to put in another crop and thus increase the great army of unemployed, at the same time cutting down production, or shall we by giving them this help allow them the opportunity to save their homes and get on their feet again? Surely a Nation which has come to the aid of suffering peoples in other countries can do this much for its own.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment. I move to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$40,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON: In line 20, page 2, strike out "$20,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$40,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee: On page 1, line 4, after the word "farmers," strike out "for feed to relieve animals in the crop-failure areas of the United States," and in line 7 strike out the words "of feed," and on page 2, line 9, strike out all after the word "for" down to and including the word "stock" in line 10, and in line 18 strike out all after the word "available" down to and including the word "stock" in line 19.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this amendment or these several amendments together, simply eliminate from the bill the purchase of feed, and if adopted will leave the bill precisely in the shape that it was presented by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] on Monday last under the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, this bill does not require in its present form that any amount of money shall be allotted for feed. It makes it discretionary with the Secretary of Agriculture.

Now, gentlemen, you have already cut down the authorization in this bill from $2,000,000 to $1,000,000. The debate has shown and the reports and hearings of the committee have shown that there is need not only for seed but also for feed. I hope this committee will not further amend this bill and tie the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture when he comes to deal with this situation according to the way he believes it should be dealt with.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. YOUNG and Mr. WILLIAMSON called for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 71, noes 73.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in view of the close vote, I will ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee demands tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. HAUGEN and Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 83, noes 73.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. WALSH] having resumed the chair, Mr. MANN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (S. 2897) to appropriate $5,000,000 for the purchase of seed grain and of feed to be supplied to farmers in the crop-failure areas of the United States, said amount to be expended under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule the previous question is ordered upon the bill and amendments to final passage. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. YOUNG. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Dakota calls for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 99, noes 82.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the title.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the title will be amended to conform to the text.

Mr. MANN. Strike out the word "appropriate" and insert in lieu thereof the words "authorize the appropriation of."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The title will be amended, striking out the word "appropriate" and inserting the words "authorizing the appropriation of," and striking out the figures "$5,000,000" and inserting "$1,000,000." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. And also striking out the words "and of feed."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the title throughout will be amended to conform to the text.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. YOUNG, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 10730).

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10730), making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923 and for other purposes, with Mr. HICKS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose there was an amendment pending. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment.

Amendment offered by Mr. WILSON: Page 43, line 7, after the word "ant," strike out "$150,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$165,000."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, when the committee ceased its labor yesterday I was speaking upon the amendment and had exhausted five minutes. I intended to ask unanimous consent to continue for five minutes, but did not do so then because I knew that my leader was going to request an adjournment. I now ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to address the committee for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to address myself specifically to the chairman of the subcommittee on agriculture [Mr. ANDERSON], with whom I labored in framing this bill. I wish to call his attention to the fact that the hearings before that subcommittee failed to develop the facts concerning the enormous increase of new cotton territory infested by the boll weevil in 1921. The hearings failed to develop the fact that at least 50 per cent more boll weevils were successful in withstanding the cold weather during this winter than ever before in the history of our country. I will read from a little bulletin of the Agricultural Department which says that altogether 66,662 square miles of new territory were invaded by the weevil in 1921, making the grand total of 600,777 square miles of territory now infested by the weevil.

I also call the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee to this fact, that the new machine which has been invented for the use of the new poison for the boll weevil requires knowledge in order to apply it properly. I call his attention to the fact that the hearing before our subcommittee showed that many farmers who attempted to use this machine without a proper understanding of the method made a dismal failure of it, and that wherever it was used under the guidance of an expert of the department it was successful and enormously decreased the damage done by the weevil. In order to meet the demand for the dissemination of knowledge as to the proper method of using this new machine the Department of Agriculture have established 10 stations, including the main station in Louisiana. Now, 10 stations in a cotton-infested area of over 600,000 square miles can not serve the purpose for which this appropriation is made. Therefore, in order to take care of this great surplus of weevils that succeeded in living through the winter, in order to take care of the increased territory that has been invaded and infested by them, comprising practically the whole cotton area of the United States, I ask the chairman to agree to the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILSON] for the increase of $15,000, which will bring it up only to what the Budget allowed.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I want to ask the gentleman whether the Southern States are contributing to this, as well as the general Government?

Mr. BUCHANAN. This is an appropriation for scientific investigation of this pest. Some States appropriate money on their own account, but this is for scientific investigation, just like any other branch of investigation.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. If it is a scientific investigation, I suppose that at the same time they go out into the infested area and do some practical work, do they not, in the interest of the cotton growers?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The scientists have established stations, and at those stations they have demonstrations under the guidance of an expert of the Agricultural Department, and the farmers from the surrounding country visit that experimental farm and station and witness the demonstration.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. In other words, it is in the interest of the proper development of the cotton crop, with which I am in hearty sympathy.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. But I have been very much interested in the vote of the other side of this House in regard to the men who are unable even to plant a crop and whose teams must be fed in order that they may do the planting. I arise simply to say that it is quite soon after a vote like that to ask to increase a specific appropriation in the interest of southern agriculture.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will state to the gentleman that when this appropriation of $2,000,000 last year came up for the very same people I voted for it. Now one vote on your side will balance my vote.

Mr. WILSON. This is my amendment, and every Member from the State of Louisiana voted for that other appropriation.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I am certainly delighted to hear the gentleman make that statement.

Mr. WILSON. This is a much greater proposition. This relates to a $2,000,000,000 crop, and it is the greatest export product produced by America.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I understand that the magnitude of this is much greater than that of the Northwest, but the poor farmers out in those States needing the seed and needing the feed will not reason that way.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Very gladly.

Mr. FESS. At different times when these propositions have been presented the question has been asked whether the States should not match the Federal appropriation dollar for dollar, either to develop the crop or to defeat the enemy of the crop that grows in this or that particular section. When Mr. Lever was chairman of the Committee on Agriculture he said he believed in that policy. Does not the gentleman think it would be a good thing for us to inaugurate the policy that when a State asks for help from the Federal Treasury it ought to stand ready to match what the Federal Treasury gives by its own contribution? Then there would not be so much likelihood of asking unlimitedly.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I think the gentleman is exactly right. This habit of coming to the Federal Treasury is growing by leaps and bounds, both in the North and in the South, in the East and in the West.

Mr. FESS. That is true.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. We can put some restriction upon it if we make a limitation on the appropriation providing that the State which is asking for it shall furnish at least 50 per cent of what is needed for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations of insects affecting forests, $55,000: Provided, That $15,000 shall be used for preventing and combating infestations of insects injurious to forest trees on and near the national forests, independently or in cooperation with other branches of the Federal Government, with States, counties, municipalities, or with private owners.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 43, line 8, strike out the figures "$55,000" and insert "$60,000."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 10 minutes on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes on the amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there are two propositions relating to pine timber in this bill; one is the "white-pine blister," which has been provided for by the committee on page 20 of the bill, and the other is the "pine beetle." The item referred to is involved in this amendment. The Bureau of the Budget recommended $45,000 and $15,000, which made $60,000, and it has been reduced $5,000, the bill carrying only $55,000. The amendment I have offered ought to be larger than it is. Timbermen familiar with the pine beetle say that more timber is being destroyed now by the white-pine beetle than is being destroyed by fire. Splendid work has been done by the department, in cooperation with the States, municipalities, and private individuals, in regard to the prevention by finding out the necessary things to do to curtail or destroy and effectually eradicate the pine beetle from the forests. The local organizations of timber owners have cooperated. This appropriation ought to be larger, but as the Budget has recommended $60,000, the $5,000 added by my amendment will assist materially in bringing about the work that is to be done. So that there may be no misunderstanding, the Congress at the last session passed a provision for the purpose of prevention of loss of timber from insects—white-pine beetle—the sum of $150,000 in a deficiency bill approved December 15, 1921. The provision of this act is as follows:

FOREST SERVICE.

Prevention of loss of timber from insect infestations on public lands in Oregon and California: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to prevent further loss of timber from insect infestations within the national forests and on other lands owned or administered by the United States in Oregon and California, $150,000, to remain available until December 31, 1922, of which sum not exceeding $90,000 shall be expended in cooperation with the Secretary of the Interior to prevent further loss of timber from insect infestations on Indian reservations, on lands title to which was revested in the United States by the act of June 9, 1916, and on unreserved public lands in Oregon and California: Provided, That no part of this appropriation, except necessary expenditures for preliminary investigations, shall be expended unless the States of Oregon and California, or the owners of pine timberland adjacent to or intermingled with lands owned or administered by the United States, shall have satisfied the Secretary of Agriculture that the insect infestations on said adjacent and intermingled lands will be abated, in accordance with State law or voluntarily by the owners of such lands, to the extent necessary in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture to protect the timber on lands owned or administered by the United States from reinfestation.

That was for cooperation work in the forests. This is for scientific work and investigation that is absolutely necessary. The $150,000 has been practically all disbursed, or will be disbursed, and more needed, according to the testimony presented. In the hearings taken before the subcommittee, page 363, appears the following:

INSECTS AFFECTING FORESTS.

Mr. ANDERSON. We will next take up the item on page 146, "For investigations of insects affecting forests."

Dr. HOWARD. There is an increase of $5,000 recommended here.

Mr. ANDERSON. My recollection is there was a small increase in this item last year.

Dr. HOWARD. There was an increase, I think, of $15,000; at all events, the sum appropriated was $55,000, provided, "that $15,000 shall be used for preventing and combating infestations of insects injurious to forest trees on and near the national forests, independently or in cooperation," etc. That work went on very successfully, indeed, especially in Oregon and Washington.

Mr. ANDERSON. My recollection is we have just provided a deficiency of $150,000 for Washington, Oregon, and California.

Dr. HOWARD. Yes, sir; that appropriation was made as a deficiency appropriation last year. In the meantime this $15,000 was spent in reconnaisance work and surveying the forests out there. It appears there is a threatened epidemic of bark-boring beetles which may cause an enormous damage to the forests on the Klamath Indian Reservation, and extending out into Oregon and northern California and also in southern Washington. We have marked the trees that should be felled and have made arrangements for this campaign which will be undertaken beginning next April under this appropriation of $150,000. That $150,000 will not all be used this spring. It will be divided between the Forest Service and the Bureau of Entomology and a portion of it allotted to the Indian Service. It is all appropriated to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, and he is making these allotments at the present time. The camps are being started or arranged for, and work will begin in April, the critical time of the year, but it can only continue for two months at the utmost. At the end of that time all the work that can be done this year will be done. The balance of that $150,000 will be spent at the corresponding time next year.

Mr. ANDERSON. I understand that, and what I am getting at is whether there is any necessity for keeping this $15,000 appropriation in view of the fact that you have this $150,000.

Dr. HOWARD. By all means, and not only that, but we want more. We have not been able to ask for more on account of the condition of the public funds. This set of experienced men are needed all the time for survey work in the forests to spot these threatened outbreaks of this beetle.

Mr. ANDERSON. Then, as I understand it, the distinction is that the $150,000 deficiency is for the actual eradication work.

Dr. HOWARD. That is absolutely so.

Mr. ANDERSON. While this $15,000 covers the preliminary scouting and spotting work, which requires, I take it, the services of experienced men.

Dr. HOWARD. Quite so. You have it exactly, sir.

Mr. ANDERSON. As I understand it, this $5,000 increase is an increase of the item provided for in the proviso.

Dr. HOWARD. No; it is an increase of the total amount of $55,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. But if it is to be used as a part of the work covered by the proviso, the amount named in the proviso ought to be increased.

Dr. HOWARD. It is not for that work at all. It is for forest products work.

Last year I went through the forests of southern Oregon and northern California and observed the work of the Forestry Service in connection with the district forester of San Francisco and others. These white-pine beetles select a tree or a bunch of trees and in a short time they are dead. It spreads to others, and is like a fire in a forest. Private individuals are expending money and finding some means of control of the destruction on their own land. Now, the question is to give the Forestry Service sufficient funds for the purpose named. The department may do the same for the Government lands, not only in the Forestry Service but upon public lands.

Mr. E. G. Scammon, a representative of the Red River Lumber Co., of Westwood, Calif., a gentleman experienced in this matter, under date of August 19, 1921, among other things, writes me as follows:

I am inclosing you copy of letter * * * regarding the seriousness of the pine beetle in northern California and southern Oregon.

Last spring I visited Oregon and, to my surprise, I found that the pine-beetle menace there was a very serious one. It was killing the mature timber faster than I ever saw it killed anywhere by fires, and up to about a month or so ago I had not realized that there was very much infestation in California; but on my last trip through by Bartle, White Horse, and across to Lookout, then down through by Adin and Willow Creek toward Susanville, I found that the whole area is considerably infested. There is much more infestation this year than last, and should it increase at the same rate for a couple of years more the damage done would be immense.

The one feature regarding this bill which I wish to impress upon you is this: When you find that the private timber owners are interested enough to go out and protect the timber from this infestation, as it is being done in and around Klamath Falls and Weed, it is certainly time that the Government should do something to protect its own timber and likewise give the private owners a chance to protect their timberlands without being further infested from the adjoining Government lands.

In the instance of fire protection the Government has taken the lead and has thought the fire menace a serious one, whereas the private owners did not regard it so serious; but in the instance of the pine beetle there is a damage being done which certainly should be looked after by the Government. * * *

That is an indication of the views of the men who are familiar with this question.

Mr. J. F. Kimball, secretary-treasurer of the Klamath-Lake Counties Forest Fire Association, Klamath Falls, Oreg., under date of October 3, 1921, writes me, among other things, as follows:

We who are keenly interested in seeing that a sufficient appropriation is made at this session of Congress to prevent the further devastation of our forests by the pine beetle are delighted to know that you, too, are standing sponsor for a bill which will accomplish what we are after. I have known for some time of your keen interest in this. * * *

Mr. C. Stowewell Smith, secretary-manager of the California White and Sugar Pine Manufacturers' Association, writes as follows:

Some time ago we took up with you the pine-beetle situation existing in southern Oregon and California.

I want to again call your attention to this matter and urge your support for * * * beetle control * * *. This matter is of vital interest to timber owners in California, since the beetle menace may become aggravated and lead to destruction of large areas of virgin timber.

In view of the public interest in the preservation and wise utilization of the remaining forests, this would be a calamity * * *.

Mr. George M. Cornwall, editor of the Timberman, of Portland, Oreg., writes as follows:

You undoubtedly know that there is a serious infestation of bark beetles in the pine timber of southern Oregon and northern California. It has been in progress for several years, and in the last 10 years experts estimate that a billion and a half feet of timber have been killed, valued on the stump at over $4,500,000. There is every reason to expect that these bark beetles will continue their destructive work unless checked by such aggressive control measures as forest entomologists have devised and proven to be effective.

The infested territory is partly in private ownership and partly under Government control. Of the latter some is in the Klamath Indian Reservation, some in the national forests, some on the public domain, and some on the revested Oregon & California Railroad grant lands. More details about this infestation I published in the Timberman for August.

The matter which I wish to bring before you is just this: Because of the intermingled ownership of the infested lands no one owner can do effective control work on his own lands unless the owners of all the adjoining lands act simultaneously. To rid the country of these flying insects the whole infested territory should be worked over at one time. Many of the private owners have signified their willingness to go ahead with bark-beetle control work just as soon as the Government will attend to its lands. But the Government has no funds for such work. Here the matter rests, therefore, while the beetles continue to kill timber until a congressional appropriation is forthcoming.

Mr. D. C. Birch, of the Madera Sugar Pine Co., of Madera, Calif., is of the same view as of the other gentlemen I have quoted.

Mr. H. K. Faye, of the Western Pacific Railroad Co., of San Francisco, Calif., writes as follows:

Our attention has been called to the menace to both privately owned and Government-owned pine timber in southern Oregon and northern California as a result of the wholesale destruction of pine timber by the western pine beetle, which for the past 10 years has destroyed 1,500,000,000 feet of high quality lumber. It is stated that the fire loss during this same period fades into insignificance.

Private owners of pine timber are thoroughly aroused to the necessity of protective measures against the beetle, but their work is more or less defective unless similar work is accomplished on the intermingling Government lands.

This pine-beetle problem is acute in the large yellow-pine sugar forests of Oregon and California, and it is stated that it is very prominent in the Rocky Mountain region in the white-pine timber of Montana and Idaho. * * *

We are taking the liberty of calling your attention to this matter, as the inroads made by this beetle will have a very serious effect upon the lumber industry in this territory, and consequently upon the movement of lumber traffic via the Western Pacific.

I also call attention to the following additional letter from Mr. Scammon:

As a matter of information I inclose a letter just obtained, which ought to be valuable to you in representing the advantages which might be obtained from legislation protecting pines against the pine-beetle infestation. The writer of this letter has in no way been prompted to shade his views one way or the other, nor did I know anything about what his views would be previous to getting this reply. We merely asked for certain information because we had been advised that this man has made a thorough study of insect infestation.

The letter referred to above is from Ivan A. Cuff, forest ranger, and is as follows:

CANBY, CALIF.,
November 6, 1921.

Mr. E. G. SCAMMON,
Westwood, Calif.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of October 17 was received some time ago.

The insect infestation in the western part of Modoc appears to me to be about the same this year as in the two previous years. I do not know the conditions prior to 1919, as that was before I came here. I have not been making any intensive study of the infestation, but from rough estimates made while riding through the timber I would say the number of infested trees would range around 12 or 15 trees per section. In places the number is a good deal less, while there are others where the infestation will probably exceed 20 per section. The infestation appears to be lightest in the area south of the road from Egg Lake to White Horse. This area was mostly all burned over last year, and what effect it has had on the infestation I am not yet able to say. We have laid out a few sample plots near Egg Lake, which will be examined three or four times a year in the next couple of years to see what the effects will be. The next examination will be some time this month, probably toward the latter part. We will let you know in advance of any of these examinations if you should wish to accompany us. Anything I could explain or show you about the habits of the insects I would be very glad to do.

In the summer of 1919 an area of something over a hundred acres, near Happy Camp, was burned over, part of which was on Red River Lumber Co.'s holdings. A good many trees had all the foliage burned off and others were badly scorched. In the following spring I examined some of the blackened trees and found most of them infested. Later in the season several of the scorched trees became infested. This year the dying trees were more noticeable than last year. I do not get any count on the dying trees either this year or last year, and no close examination was made this year. In a couple of other instances I have noticed that the infestation seemed to increase for a couple of years after a fire. This is because the injured or weakened trees are more susceptible to insect attack.

I agree with your statement that there is more timber being killed by insects than by fire. As to what the comparison would be if there were no protection, I hardly feel qualified to judge, as all of my experience in the forests was since they were under protection.

Very truly, yours,

IVAN A. CUFF,
Forest Ranger.

The matter I wish to bring before you is——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am for the preservation of the national forests, but I am even more for the preservation of the peace of America. I said to you on Monday last that the people of Maryland, and, I believed, the whole American people, are behind the President and the work of the Conference on Limitation of Armament and desire the immediate ratification of the treaties. The following day, March 7, 6 senators and 33 members of the House of Delegates of the General Assembly of Maryland, now in session at Annapolis, passed resolutions, which are as follows:

SENATE OF MARYLAND,
Annapolis, Md., March 7, 1922.

Hon. JOHN PHILIP HILL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

At a meeting of all the Republican members of the General Assembly of Maryland the following resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas treaties have been negotiated by representatives of various nations of the earth at the conference called by President Harding, in the city of Washington, looking to the limitation of armaments and the final peace of the world; and

"Whereas the delegates appointed to said conference were men of the highest type of learning and patriotism, and in their efforts to accomplish good were aided by the best brains of the world; and

"Whereas those delegates who represented the United States of America were chosen from the two great political parties of our country to the end that all might be represented; and

"Whereas the treaties resulting from said conference will be of infinite benefit to generations to come, both in money and in lives of our young men, and will forever stand as a living monument to the wisdom, courage, and statesmanship of our President and those working with him; and

"Whereas said treaties have been presented to the Senate of the United States for ratification: Now, therefore, be it unanimously

"Resolved by the Republican members of the General Assembly of Maryland, That the President of the United States be congratulated upon the successful termination and completion of the objects and purposes of said disarmament conference; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Senators from Maryland in the United States Senate be requested to give their support and approval to the ratification of said treaties; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Senators from the State of Maryland, and to the Republican Members of Congress from the State of Maryland.

"CHARLES F. GOODELL,
"J. FRANK PARRAN,
"JOS. W. WOLFNY,
"DAVID A. ROBB,
"RUDOLPH NICKEL,
"Committee Senators and Delegates, General Assembly of Maryland."

[Applause.]

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

After all great wars in which the United States has been engaged it has followed in seeming sequence that the military policy and the inner régime or organization which is responsible for the prevailing system has been subjected to the scathing criticism of a large and substantial element of the citizenry of the Republic. A paradoxical fact in the situation is that the criticism most tinged with denunciation is that which comes from those who have served ofttimes with conspicuous distinction in the ranks of the Nation's defenders, whereas the criticism directed at the Army immediately prior to and during hostilities comes from that element of public opinion commonly referred to as pacifists, slackers, or enemy aliens. For the purpose of my remarks I shall ignore the latter element, which I would call the obstructionist and destructionist classes with which we have had to contend both just before and during all great wars. These after all form a relatively small minority in the matter under consideration. The postwar criticism, however, can not be cast aside by any such broad assertions, first, because it comes from a wing of public opinion of no mean numerical proportions; second, because the protestants and critics are either those who through personal service in the military branches or through family or other sympathetic affiliations refute any classification which would reflect upon their patriotism or sincerity of purpose. While a great deal of this postwar criticism of the Army is more or less incoherent and ofttimes only semi or quasi constructionist, yet on the whole its trend or objective may be said to be constructive, because it looks to orderly reform without undermining or destroying the fundamentals of our system of military defense. It may be said further that it would surprise the Members of the House and the people of the country to know the extent to which this feeling of subdued protest and criticism of the so-called present Army system permeates a large majority of the recent defenders of the Nation's institutions. I am not here voicing any personal criticism or passing on the merits or demerits of the charges made, with which every one of the ex-service men of the House and, no doubt, many others of my colleagues are familiar, but am simply recording a condition which many of us have observed with regret, but which notwithstanding can not be lightly passed over or ignored. I have always held and continue to hold the American Army as an institution in the highest patriotic esteem, for after all its faults has it not great virtues? With all its failures are not its pages still resplendent with glorious achievements, and is it not the child of the bosom of the great Republic who gave it birth, nurtured it in infancy at Valley Forge, and saw it reach the climax of manhood and achievements in the Meuse Argonne, where with gigantic stature of 1,200,000 men it turned the final tide and brought victory to a war-weary world? The blood of the Regular Army has flowed freely with that of the citizen soldiery of the Republic, and to-day both alike receive the homage of a grateful Nation. It would therefore seem to behoove us as Americans to get together and compose our differences of opinion, for who will gainsay that differences do exist? Never before has the numerical proportion of those who have served in the armed forces of the Republic formed such a large percentage of our citizenry. Practically 30 per cent of the present male voting population of the United States saw service with the colors in the World War. It is natural and logical to expect that these men as the years go by, in the very natural sequence of events, will play a large part in directing the affairs and policies of our National Government.

No more potent evidence of the unfortunate misunderstanding to which I have referred could be cited than the present controversy between the War Department and Maj. Wheeler-Nicholson because of certain scathing criticisms which he has directed at the Regular Army by the publication of an open letter to the President in the press and by the circulation of a pamphlet by him entitled "The Regular Army; reform it or abolish it." No doubt the major has exceeded the proprieties and violated the first tenets of military discipline by his actions, but we are not so much interested in him individually as we are in the causes which have impelled him to action and the extent to which this feeling of injured rights and unjust treatment permeates the sane, patriotic-minded body of ex-soldiers throughout the country.

Is there or is there not foundation in fact in the criticism which he directs at the Army? Does he offer a constructive remedy? Have we within the Regular Army those forces at the top necessary to institute and carry out reform where reform is needed? To what extent can civilian elements cooperate with our military authorities in democratizing the service without undermining its essential military efficiency? If one-tenth of the criticisms considered as a whole, or if a one-tenth part of each of the criticisms considered segregately are true, they are entitled to our careful consideration. All progress must be orderly and constructive, all real reform must come from within, but bureaucratic machinery should not move so slowly that public opinion and public patience—dormant but powerful forces in a republic—are outraged with delay or inactivity. I shall include herewith as an exhibit and for the information of the House the pamphlet of Maj. Wheeler-Nicholson, to which I have referred, and whether he rightfully or wrongfully ignored the Regular Army, he represents a viewpoint not to be equaled, to wit, that of a considerable body of citizen soldiers of the World War.

Personally, I have great faith in the ability and patriotism of the present Chief of the Armies of the United States, Gen. John J. Pershing, and of his efficient Chief of Staff, Gen. Harbord, who rose from the ranks, and I feel that it is not too much for us to expect that these gentlemen will carefully analyze the Wheeler-Nicholson criticisms, and that without undue delay the country may see instituted those reforms which are consistent with military efficiency, and at the same time will bring our Regular Army, as an American institution, more in harmony with American ideals and aspirations, and particularly of those of our citizens who were lately the defenders of our institutions, but who at the present moment are the most caustic critics of the branch of the service under whose banners they served.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I append herewith Maj. Wheeler-Nicholson's open letter to the President, with the correspondence attending it:

THE REGULAR ARMY—REFORM IT OR ABOLISH IT—AN ANALYSIS OF ITS EVILS AND THE MEANS TO THEIR REMOVAL, BY A REGULAR ARMY OFFICER.

(Malcolm Wheeler-Nicholson, Major, Cavalry, United States Army.)

OPEN LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

I pray the President to curb the power of the clique of officers in control of the Regular Army. The inefficiency and Prussianism of this clique succeeded in returning several million dissatisfied American soldiers to civil life. By alienating the best elements in the country it has succeeded in losing the support of the Nation for the Army and the national defense. This same clique is to-day ruining the Regular Army. It is a danger to the national defense.

The Army is suffering under a reign of Prussianism. The better type of officers are leaving the service. Protest and criticism are punished by every conceivable form of injustice and illegality. Juniors are openly persecuted. Seniors are not only protected in wrongdoing but are rewarded for oppressing their juniors. The Prussian type of officer is assured of advance, the liberal-minded officer is slighted. Anglo-Saxon ideals of justice and fair play are being rapidly replaced by traditions foreign to the American Nation. The stupid perversions of justice in the American Army to-day are a disgrace to the American Nation. Justice is not only perverted and denied but the laws are openly flouted.

A veritable reign of terror exists among the junior officers of the Army to-day. This is caused by the unhindered power of the clique to have any officer discharged from the service by the operations of what is known as the class B law. The scandals already perpetrated by the abuses of this law will shock the country when they are exposed, as they inevitably will be. Officers dare not protest against the many wrongs perpetrated by this clique for fear of immediate discharge from the Army by the arbitrary use of this law. Unless amended, it will inevitably succeed in driving every liberal-minded and progressive officer from the Army. It will leave only the reactionary elements. A future war will then be followed by an aftermath of scandals and investigations worse than the last war.

Prussianism and inefficiency flourish in the Army because men rise to power by favoritism instead of efficiency. Classmates and friends are appointed to lead instead of the most efficient man for the job. This is inevitable, as there is no system worthy the name of recording the comparative efficiencies of officers. This is the fire of all the smoke of evil in the Regular Army. Blood and treasure were wasted in the last war and will be wasted in any future war for lack of such a system. The hosts of ex-soldiers throughout the country should demand such a system so that they or their children will not be led to slaughter under inefficient Regular Army officers. That men were needlessly sacrificed through the incompetence of the Regular officers in the last war can be proved by an investigation of the reclassification board at Blois and by the testimony of thousands of ex-soldiers and officers. The present lack of any system inevitably leads to the rise of petty bureaucrats to the exclusion of real leaders. The hostility of the country to the Army and the woeful state of the Regular Army to-day are proof of this.

Bitter experience teaches what variety of secret and open attack a professional officer of the Regular Army draws on himself by daring to announce the truth. That such an officer should risk this, as well as loss of profession and means of livelihood for his family by being class B'd out of the Army, should lend weight to his words. I pray the President to investigate and institute reform. He will have the support of the hosts of ex-soldiers and officers in civil life, the National Guard and reserves, and of all patriotic Americans throughout the Nation. Without reform the Regular Army had better be abolished. It is a useless expense to the taxpayer in its present state.

MALCOLM WHEELER-NICHOLSON,
Major, Cavalry, United States Army.

REPLY OF THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 25.

Subject: Explanation of publication in newspaper.
To: Maj. Malcolm Wheeler-Nicholson, Cavalry.
Through: Commanding Officer Walter Reed General Hospital, Takoma Park, D. C.

1. It has come to the attention of the War Department that on or about February 5, 1922, there was published in the New York Times and in other newspapers what purports to be a copy of a letter addressed by you to the President of the United States arraigning the administration of the War Department and the Army.

2. Upon principle and without particular reference to regulations or the customs of the service, the Secretary of War regrets and disapproves of any action on the part of the personnel of the Military Establishment that is designed to present, in the first instance, in the public press or by means of public speeches alleged grievances of any individual or any class of individuals included in the personnel under his authority. Such action would not be tolerated in any well-managed and successful business institution and would not be seriously considered by responsible individuals belonging to such institutions as a means of redressing alleged grievances, unless and until the proper authorities had been afforded opportunity to consider and deal with the situation or condition specifically described and clearly presented.

3. The Secretary of War desires that you report in writing, through military channels, to The Adjutant General of the Army:

(a) Whether or not you are the author of the letter addressed to the President which appeared over your name in the New York Times of February 5, 1922.

(b) Whether, if you are the author of the letter in question, you caused or permitted it to be communicated, either directly or indirectly, to any representative of the New York Times or any other newspaper with a view to its publication.

(c) Whether, if you are the author of the letter in question, you addressed it and forwarded it directly to the President instead of addressing and forwarding it, for consideration and action, through prescribed channels.

4. In connection with the questions raised in the preceding paragraph, the Secretary of War desires that you be advised that you are at liberty to refrain from submitting the desired report in respect of any of the questions raised, if the submission of a report thereon would tend to incriminate you, but in that event the privilege is to be formally claimed in lieu of making the desired report.

By order of the Secretary of War.

(Signed) JOHN B. SHUMAN,
Adjutant General.

ANSWER TO THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

(Second indorsement.)

Maj. MALCOLM WHEELER-NICHOLSON, CAVALRY,
WALTER REED GENERAL HOSPITAL,
Washington, D. C., February 24, 1922.

To the SECRETARY OF WAR (through military channels):

1. The Secretary of War desires report through The Adjutant General as to my responsibility for a letter to the President arraigning the controlling element in the Regular Army, and states, in substance, that such action would not be tolerated in any well-managed and successful business institution unless all other means had failed.

2. It is respectfully requested that the question of the authorship and methods of presentation of the said letter be disregarded in favor of the subject matter. The undersigned wrote, transmitted to the President, and gave to the press the letter which charged, in substance, that the Regular Army was neither well managed nor successful and that its only resemblance to a private business institution was the fact that it was run for the private benefit of the few rather than for the good of the Nation which pays its bills. The charges were not published until after submitting the proofs of them to some of the most able men in the Nation and after making 11 unsuccessful attempts to see Gen. Harbord, the Secretary of War, and the President. To secure action toward the removal of evils in the Regular Army that imperil the national defense was the purpose of that letter and is the purpose of this.

3. That there is some deep-seated evil in the Regular Army is proved by the following facts:

(a) That it was unready at the outbreak of war.

(b) That it did not even have a plan of operations ready.

(c) It failed lamentably during the war in functioning as a military machine. National disaster would have resulted had the German Army been unwearied and had there been no trained leadership from allied general staffs.

(d) A great number of Regular Army officers were relieved in battle when the wasted blood of their men proved their inefficiency.

(e) Vast numbers of Regular Army officers earned the ill will of the citizen soldiers by attempting to cover ignorance with arrogance.

(f) Injustice and inefficiency were disclosed by the Army courts-martial scandals, the "Hard Boiled" Smith and Chelles Farm horrors, the scandals at Brest, and the Watson charges.

(g) Injustice and inefficiency still exist as will be proved by investigation of the class B injustices and more to follow—the end is not yet in sight. Justice for soldiers can not be hoped for when even the officer can not secure it.

(h) The Regular Army is thoroughly demoralized to-day—the better type of officers seeking retirement or resigning, the soldiers making a concerted rush for discharge when opportunity last presented itself, the courts-martial grinding out the preposterous rate of some 700 a month.

4. Further proof of the existence of evil is offered by the fact that the Nation is hostile and suspicious of its Regular Army. Every organized or unorganized element of the Nation necessary in the national defense program has been antagonized by the arrogant selfishness of the Regular Army. This includes the National Guard and Reserves and the vast body of ex-officers and soldiers. The Regular Army is being constantly lobbied against in Congress by representatives of some of these elements. Congress has been made hostile and suspicious of the Regular Army due to this fact, and that constant complaints of injustice are being received from personnel now in the Army, that the General Staff has lost the good will of Congress, and that the Nation as a whole is either indifferent or hostile to the Army. Until the deep-seated evils in the Army that cause these things are removed the Army can expect to be repeatedly reduced, to have its appropriations cut, and to be lowered in effectiveness. It is time that the Regular Army ceased blaming the Nation and Congress. It is time for a searching examination that will lead to the removal of the evils that antagonize the Nation. Evils that antagonize the Nation weaken the national defense.

5. Effort is here made to analyze these evils and their cure. As a basis it must be remembered that an army is no better than its officers. It is no better than its controlling officers, because an army is an oligarchical and strictly controlled unit. The higher officers must be blamed for its inefficiency. But the Regular Army has always been more or less inefficient. It has then always had more or less unsatisfactory types of higher officers. Then the system that produces the same type of officers who perpetuate the same evils continually must be a faulty system.

6. To find the causes of the evil in an army, study the methods of the promotion and assignment to duty of its officers. In the American Army they are promoted by seniority to the grade of colonel. They are assigned to duty by the hazards of personal acquaintanceship. They are promoted to general by the same hazards. This system of promotion and assignment is the root of evil in the Army. It gives rise to those twin curses of an army—favoritism and cliques. These two curses automatically put men in power whose self-interest and desire for position obscure their national interest. As a consequence we have, first, the Army topheavy with some 90 general officers; secondly, about one-tenth of all the officers of the Army on duty in Washington; third, the Army completely demoralized; and, fourth, the Nation and Congress suspicious of the Regular Army. The officers who have wreaked this havoc are to-day the advisers of the Secretary of War. Their advice being tempered strongly with self-interest, they are deliberately concealing the mistakes of the past war in an effort to enhance their own prestige. This means that the lives of good Americans will pay for the same mistakes in a future war that they have in the past. It may mean national disaster. That they lack any sense of obligation to the Nation and to their juniors can be seen by the attitude of the Nation to-day and the woeful state of the Regular Army.

7. Promotion by merit, assignment to duty by special fitness, and elimination of the inefficient would cure all these evils. Each of these things has necessarily to be based upon a record of the comparative efficiencies of the officers of the Army. The present system is worthless and makes reform impossible. It has failed to provide dependable leaders in battle; it has failed to provide a means for picking the best officers for the General Staff; it has failed to provide a means for the selective elimination of officers for inefficiency—the class B legislation. It naturally can not be a basis for a system of promotion.

It is the fire of all the smoke of evil in the Regular Army to-day. The present efficiency records permit the rise of the bureaucrat and keep down the real leader. Two evil symptoms of bureaucratic control can be seen in the Regular Army to-day—the paper work that burdens the service and the excessive number of courts-martial. A record must be installed that will aid the rise of the real leader, the officer who concentrates on the two essentials in an army—war and the handling of men. Such men in power will make an army that can get along with the people who pay its bills. The War Department is the most unpopular branch of the Government to-day. The evils that this implies and the danger to the national defense that it portends are sufficient justification for drawing the attention of the Secretary of War to them in the only manner that can not be blocked by intervening forces in the Military Establishment.

MALCOLM WHEELER-NICHOLSON,
Major, Cavalry, United States Army.

SUMMARY OF ANALYSIS OF THE REGULAR ARMY—ITS EVILS AND THEIR CURE.

Maj. MALCOLM WHEELER-NICHOLSON,
Cavalry, United States Army:

The Regular Army was inefficient before the war. It failed to function efficiently during the war. It is inefficient to-day. The Nation is hostile and suspicious of the Regular Army. The Army will continue to be a useless expense in peace and a broken reed in war unless reforms are instituted. Evils in an army are the fault of its officers. They are the fault of its higher officers. We have always had the same evils in the Regular Army. Therefore the same type of officers always rise to power. The system that permits these types to rise continually is the place to look for evil. The system is a combination of promotion by seniority and assignment to duty by the hazards of personal acquaintanceship. It has failed. The Army must have promotion by merit, elimination of the inefficient, and assignment to duty by special fitness. Without these three things no army can be efficient. Promotion, elimination, and assignment to duty are all based upon the efficiency or inefficiency of the individual officer. The present system of recording the comparative efficiency of officers is worthless for these three purposes. It has failed: (1) To pick the best brains of the Army for the General Staff, which can be proved by the chaotic condition of the War Department, the present demoralizattion of the Army, and the ill will of Congress toward the General Staff. (2) It has failed to provide a basis for the selective elimination of inefficient officers; investigation of the Class B act workings will prove this. (3) It has failed to provide leaders in battle; investigation of the board at Blois, before which Regular officers were "reclassified" after failing as battle leaders, will prove this. This system is the root of all evil in the Reguar Army.

To secure reform it is first necessary to prove the worthlessness of the present system in war by an investigation of the reclassification board at Blois, and its worthlessness in peace by an investigation of the Class B errors and injustices. With the proofs furnished by these investigations the next step is the installation of a modern system of recording the comparative efficiencies of officers based upon war needs instead of on peace-time red tape, as is the present system. This can then be used as a basis for assigning the square peg to the square instead of the round hole, for promoting the most meritorious by competition, and for eliminating the inefficient deadwood. Until this is done we will never have an Army worthy the name.

Analysis of evils in the Regular Army and their cure.

I. PROOFS OF INEFFICIENCY IN THE REGULAR ARMY.

A. AT THE OUTBREAK OF WAR.

The General Staff failed (1) to have a plan of mobilization ready; (2) to coordinate the various elements of the national defense, namely, the National Guard, the Reserves, etc., with the Regular Army; (3) to have a working scheme for the best utilization of railroads, mobilization centers, shipping facilities, etc.; (4) to have any scheme for industrial preparedness; (5) to have a plan for the best utilization of Regular Army personnel; (6) to create an Army administrative system fit for war purposes; (7) to create a supply system fit for war purposes.

The above are illustrations of the failures of the General Staff in the most elemental duties of a general staff.

B. DURING THE WAR.

Months of time and millions of dollars were wasted in building huge, expensive Army cantonments, in many cases remote from population and traffic centers, when existing facilities were available and men could have been allowed to sleep in their own homes or in public buildings.

Valuable time was wasted in teaching men useless parade formations on flat drill grounds, and useless motions in the manual of arms, etc., when the coordination of mind and muscle might more sensibly have been taught in practicing motions that had a direct bearing on the matter in hand—fighting the Germans.

Valuable time was wasted in teaching emergency officers the useless minutiæ of Army red tape and peace-time administration instead of concentrating upon the fundamentals of warfare and the handling of men.

Untrained men were sent into battle in France, with a resulting loss of life, while trained men were kept in camps and cantonments in the United States.

Officer personnel was not used to the best advantage, and much confusion resulted from an attempt to control all officers from a few bureaus in the War Department. The War Department proved the evils of overcentralization in this as well as other matters.

The inefficient functioning of the American General Staff in France made dependence upon the French General Staff necessary in all major operations and most minor operations.

An inordinately large number of Regular Army officers had to be relieved from the front line because of inefficiency as combat officers—said inefficiency proved in the wasted lives of their men.

The failures in artillery, material, the air service, hand grenades, and machine guns are well known.

The failure of the average West Point officer to understand and take advantage of the good qualities of the American soldier, which make him one of the best fighting men in the world, resulted in antagonizing the majority of Americans who served in the war and led to inefficiency.

Brutality and inefficiency were shown by the "Hard Boiled" Smith, Rue St. Anne, Chelles Farm, and Army courts-martial scandals and the Watson charges.

The National Guard was slighted and antagonized as an important factor in the national defense by the attitude of the Regular officers—the Peck case being an illustration.

Efficient emergency officers were slighted in numerous cases, while Regular officers of proved inefficiency were promoted during and after the war.

Vast numbers of Regular officers demonstrated that their only claim to superior knowledge of war was a familiarity with Army red tape, and were supported and credited for work done by emergency officers under them.

The above errors, failures, and commissions did not prove fatal in this case because the enemy was weary with four years of war, and the trained military men of the allied general staffs provided the direction of the American Army which its own leaders were incapable of doing. In a war without such favorable conditions the resulting debacle would have been a horror for our children and our children's children to contemplate. The American Army took a year and a half to mobilize its strength. The best armies in the world can mobilize in 48 hours.

C. AFTER THE ARMISTICE AND TO-DAY.

The Army is suffering under the domination of the same elements that were responsible for its prewar and war-time inefficiency. American participation was too short to eliminate these elements, as battle normally does. As a consequence these officers have returned with enhanced prestige gained through the mere fact of victory. They have covered up individual inefficiencies by recommending each other for medals and decorations. They eulogize each other on every occasion. To enhance their own prestige they gloss over and minimize the failures and mistakes committed. The lessons of the war are consequently not being learned. This means that the Nation may pay in disaster and the American civilian will pay in blood for the same mistakes in a future war.

The strong demand of the returned soldier and officer of the emergency forces for the elimination of the deadwood and the inefficient officers of the Regular Army led to the passage of class B legislation.

It has failed to achieve its purpose. It not only has failed to do so but the law, as applied by the General Staff, is a demoralizing force in the Army. It will inevitably result in the elimination of all progressive elements if not soon stopped. It is too dangerous a weapon to trust to the present rulers of the Army, with their admitted inability to apply any legislation not surrounded with safeguards. It has created a paradoxical condition in which a soldier for some petty offense is surrounded with every legal safeguard while an officer put in class B, in danger of being cashiered from the Army, the most severe punishment after death or imprisonment, is protected by no safegnards worthy of the name. It has resulted and is resulting in almost unbelievable injustice.

The spirit and the letter of the law requiring the selection and promotion of the emergency officers for the Regular Army has been violated.

Every element necessary to the national defense scheme has been antagonized by the war-time inefficiencies and after-war stupidities of the Regular Army. This includes the National Guard and Reserves, the former emergency officers and men, the disabled emergency officers' organization, and many others. The energy and enthusiasm of these elements is lost to the national defense.

Congress has been made hostile and suspicious by the arrogance and selfishness of the General Staff; by the many complaints of injustice coming from personnel within the Army and by the attitude of the great majority of civilians toward the Regular Army.

Legislation suggested by the General Staff has closed the door of opportunity to that organization and made it a self-perpetuating body.

The selfish desire of the controlling clique for more power without consideration of the national defense has led to a ridiculously top-heavy Army, with some 90 general officers and practically no second lieutenants.

The bureaucratic instincts of the controlling element have led them to concentrate nearly one-tenth of all the officers of the Army on duty in Washington.

The Army is so overburdened with paper work and the requirements of red tape that combat officers have no time to train troops properly.

The staffs of troop units are overburdened with officers, who add continually to the line officers' work by issuing floods of impossible orders and reams of useless paper.

The majority of officers in the Army and their families, as well as soldiers, are living under conditions that European peasants would rebel at; they live in tar-paper and board shacks in mud and dust while at the same time there are unoccupied barracks and quarters at permanent posts. This is one example of the lack of any sense of responsibility for their juniors exhibited by the present rulers of the Army.

Courts-martial are working overtime grinding out some 700 cases a month; the guardhouses are full. The old idea that the American soldier should be treated as a convict still obtains in spite of the lessons of the war.

A recent order allowing soldiers to apply for discharge was replied to with such unanimity that it had to be rescinded for fear there would not be any soldiers left.

The best types of emergency officers who remained in the Regular Army after the war soon left in disgust. The younger officers now in the service are seeking opportunity to resign. The older officers are seeking retirement.

The Regular Army is not an army in any sense of the word. It is an expensive and useless drain on the Public Treasury under the present conditions of its management. Many third-class powers have less expensive and more efficient armies.

Criticism from within is punished by every conceivable hardship. One method is the preferring of baseless charges. Another is to exile an officer to the Philippines or some other distant point. The greatest deterrent to constructive criticism is the danger of being railroaded out of the Army by the class B route.

These matters are indicative of some serious evil in the Regular Army. This evil is not very likely to be cured from within. This because the same officers who are responsible for these matters were in control before the war and are in control now. American battle participation was too short to eliminate them as battle normally eliminates the bureaucrats of an army. The desire to enhance their own prestige keeps these officers from even admitting the necessity for reform.

The Secretary of War is surrounded and necessarily dependent upon these people for advice. It is next to impossible for him to steer his way through the maze of self-interest, selfishness, and stupidity with which he is surrounded. The only hope lies in action from without. Criticism directed at the Regular Army has heretofore been entirely destructive in its nature. Constructive criticism has necessarily to be based upon deep study and knowledge of the subject gained by long contact with the American Army and with the best of foreign armies. It needs a professional officer. There can then be hope of reform by action of the organizations of former soldiers and officers and by Congress if such an officer can produce logical ideas, can express them simply, and can reach the people who will take action. Attempt is here made to do this. The measure of its success will be the amount of common sense in it that will appeal to the average civilian unafflicted with the "military mind."

The striking characteristic of the big man in any line is his ability to reduce things to their simplest elements. Judged by this standard the Army is run by extremely mediocre men. If ever there was an institution cluttered up with red tape, foolish notions, useless forms, outworn "traditions," and bleary-eyed and purposeless weavings it is the Regular Army of the United States to-day. The simple and elemental facts—first, that an army is for battle, and, secondly, that a War Department is for war—have been lost sight of by the present rulers. These people have inherited a "system" and are so concerned in worshiping the system that they have forgotten entirely the ends which the system is to serve. They have laboriously fashioned a system called Prussian by many. As a matter of fact, it was discarded by the Prussians after their disastrous defeat at Jena, back a century or so. The discipline that this system demands might be likened to a collar that the Army tried to fit on the American neck. The collar did not fit. The present rulers of the Army tried to secure results by cutting the neck to fit the collar. What is needed in the American Army is the type of officer at the top who will see the necessity of cutting the collar to fit the American neck. What we have at the present time is a group of officers in control of the Army incapable of clear and simple thinking. We have nearly always had such officers at the top. The Army has never "gotten along" with the country in consequence, with the resulting danger to the national defense that this implies. The Army must be rid of the evils that antagonize the Nation.

II. WHERE TO LOOK FOR THE SOURCE OF EVILS IN AN ARMY.

An army is necessarily run from the top. Its leaders influence it to a greater degree than the leaders of an industrial organization. If the army has always been unsatisfactory it follows then that it has always had unsatisfactory leaders. Our concern then is not with the individual leaders, but with a system that continually allows the unsatisfactory type to rise to power. The source of evils in an army must be sought for in the system of promotion and assignment to duty of its officers. An army is no better than its officers. It is no better than the officers who rise to the top. The question is, How do they rise?

III. THE SYSTEM OF PROMOTION AND ASSIGNMENT OF OFFICERS IN THE REGULAR ARMY.

Officers are promoted by seniority in the American Army—in other words, they mark time in each grade waiting for some one to be retired or die off in the grade above. This obtains until they reach the grade of colonel. They are "selected" from that grade to be generals. This is done in the majority of cases by the hazards of personal acquaintanceship. Officers in all grades are selected for assignment to duty by the hazards of personal acquaintanceship, irrespective of their fitness for the duty concerned in the great majority of cases. This explains the Army characteristic of the invariable round peg in the invariable square hole. This results in war time in a fat colonel or general being dragged from his comfortable swivel chair and being placed in command of a division of thousands of men. He succeeds in lasting out many times until he reaches the firing line. Here he stands around in pathetic bewilderment while his men are being slaughtered until the stern necessities of battle result in his being quickly canned. Making the bodies of good American soldiers the experimental material for the testing out of their officers' fitness to command is rather rough on the soldiers.

In peace time the assignment of men to duty by personal acquaintanceship results in good friends getting together—usually in Washington. It results in their standing together for their own private interests, in helping their friends and punishing their enemies. Here we have cliques and favoritism. These are the twin curses of an army. There being no standard of efficiency an officer's success in the American Army is more dependent upon tact than it is upon tactics. This leads to the rise of the self-seeking type, who place self-interest above national interest. It favors the officer who disregards his obligations toward his juniors in favor of his obeisances toward his seniors. Therefore we find the Army top-heavy with rank, the lower grades unhappy, and the Army completely demoralized. This same controlling clique continually propagates the idea that all evils in the Army are due to the defections of Congress. Common sense would show that if the Army got along with the people, Congress would help the Army.

Self-interest is always with us. It is a strong motive. But a system can be devised that will at least promote men to power who have sufficient mentality and vision to understand that their own interests will be best served by serving the Nation first. The present rulers have proven, rather disastrously for the Army, that all the people can not be fooled all the time. If they possessed sufficient ability to think clearly, they would realize that honesty with the Nation and with Congress is the best policy.

The present system having proved itself a miserable failure and being a danger to the Nation in war, what is the solution? Promotion by seniority has demonstrated its failure; we must have promotion by merit. Assignment to duty by the hazards of personal acquaintanceship having proved its worthlessness, we must have selection for duty by especial fitness for the job concerned. The class B law having failed to eliminate the inefficient, we must find some other method of elimination. Promotion by merit, assignment to duty by special fitness, and elimination for inefficiency are absolutely necessary before we have a military force fit to be called an army.

To have promotion by merit there must be some record kept of an officer's work that will show that he is entitled above his fellows to be promoted. To have assignment to duty by special fitness we must have some record kept that will show the superiority of the officer concerned in a special line of work. To have elimination of the inefficient, we must have some system that will show that the officer has failed to perform satisfactorily his basic duties as an officer of his own branch and grade. We must have a record of work performed and the manner of its performance of each officer in the Army. There is no record kept of these important matters under the present system. There is in existence what is known as the officers' compiled efficiency record, which is supposed to fulfill these functions. It needs only an examination of the performances of the Army as a whole to determine that it is a failure. This is the base of any system for reform in the Army.

IV. THE COMPILED EFFICIENCY RECORDS KEPT OF AMERICAN OFFICERS.

This system of recording the comparative efficiencies of officers, in addition to the general evils it has produced, has three specific failures to its discredit. The first is its failure to serve as a basis for selecting the best brains of the Army for the General Staff. This needs no further proof than the study of the work of the General Staff before and during the war and the present chaos in the War Department, coupled with the demoralization of the Army. The second failure is the impossibility of using the present system of record keeping as the basis of any scheme for the elimination of inefficient officers, as badly as such a scheme is needed. Investigation of the injustices and inefficiencies perpetrated by the workings of the class B act will prove this conclusively. The third failure of the system is its complete breakdown as the basis for selecting leaders of men in battle. This is the greatest and most inexcusable failure. The purpose of an army is war. The combat officer, in the final analysis, exists for no other purpose than as a leader of men in battle. A system that fails to provide tested and dependable combat leaders is not fit for war, therefore not fit for an army. Investigation of the records of the reclassification board at Blois in France, before which appeared regular officers who had failed in battle, will prove this.

V. ANALYSIS OF THIS RECORD.

(A) It is founded almost wholly on the personal opinion of seniors. When it is realized, first, that opinion can be colored by so many influences outside of the point at issue, and in the second place that in a system of promotion by seniority and personal acquaintanceship all seniors are not superiors in any sense of the word, the basic fault of the record can be readily seen. (B) The record is a negative record of the failures of an officer, not a positive record of his successes or abilities. We therefore are confronted with the spectacle of the attempt to pick men for doing things upon a record of things undone—which is paradoxical. (C) The record is not a record of important things undone, but stresses minor failures in peace-time administrative red tape. It therefore stresses the rise of the bureaucratic type of officer by hindering the rise of the real leader who concentrates upon the essentials of war and the handling of men. We see the results in three things—the Army burdened with excessive and ridiculous amounts of paper work, an inordinate use of the punitive power (the guardhouse and the court-martial are the inevitable resort of the officer who can not handle men), and the constitutional inability of the Army to "get along" with the country. (D) The records are unscientific, unsystematic, duplicative, full of irrelevancies; they fail to differentiate between characteristics necessary for different branches of the service; they are not records of efficiency but records primarily of deficiencies in handling red tape and in deportment. They illustrate a total lack of war viewpoint. They keep down real leaders and stress the rise of the type of men of whom Roosevelt complained of in the War Department in 1898, "that it considered war an illegitimate interruption of the activities of a War Department." No attention is paid to the main essential in a combat officer—his ability to train troops and lead them in battle. The positive type of officer, who concentrates upon essentials, will inevitably neglect or break through the hampering twistings of red tape. His record as a consequence will be a "poor record," as it will be cluttered up with petty notations of the violations of petty regulations by petty seniors. The office man or the bureaucrat, on the other hand, by a meticulous study and observance of the flood of rules and regulations, by concentrating upon red tape, will have a "good" record, which under the present system means a blank record. These types of officers inevitably drift to Washington; they fill the General Staff; they control the Army. Their lack of touch with reality, their constant insistence upon nonessentials, their worship of the system to the exclusion of the ends which the system is intended to serve, their belief in papers rather than men, make them unfit to deal with that stern reality, war. Their influence upon the American Army can be seen by comparing the library of the average American officer with the library of the average foreign officer of a good Army. The foreign officer has a library full of the best works on the fundamentals of war, and his periodicals are full of discussions of strategy, tactics, and organization. The American officer has a library consisting of several volumes of regulations: Army Regulations, Manual of Courts-Martial, Quartermaster Regulations, compilations of orders, etc., and his service papers are filled with earnest discussions as to the comfort or lack of comfort of the Sam Brown belt, or the shape of the new cap—the only improvements, if they can be so called, that the American Army has gained from the war.

The bureaucratic type of mind being unable to secure discipline, real discipline founded upon respect and intelligence, tries to secure it by means of an undue stressing of the punitive power. This type of mind is responsible for all the scandals of the Army court-martial and the class B legislation; it has a constitutional inability to differentiate between justice, which is a function of the judicial, and discipline, which is a function of the executive. It looks upon discipline as a means rather than an end. It defines discipline as punishment. It does not commit injustice knowingly but through a heavy stupidity and inability to differentiate between right and wrong. It can not see the danger to the national defense in allowing one private soldier to leave the Army with a sense of injustice, to infect the larger or smaller circle of his friends and family against the military service. It has sent thousands to civil life and infected millions of people thereby. The Army and the national defense is now reaping what this type of mind has sown. The lower the state of discipline in an Army the more despotic a form it assumes. Injustice is the most criminal form of inefficiency. We will continue to have this form and many other forms until we devise a system of recording the comparative efficiencies of officers that will lead to the rise of real men.

VI. GENERAL PRINCIPLES UPON WHICH A BETTER SYSTEM SHOULD BE BASED.

A. The system should be positive rather than negative; it should stress what an officer has done, not what he has not done.

B. It should be based upon the axiom that the combat officer is the most important officer—the Infantry, Cavalry, and Artillery are the fighting branches, and an army is for fighting.

C. It should be based primarily upon an officer's work, not upon some senior's opinion.

D. It should be simple and easily referred to—there should be no necessity of wading through the masses of irrelevant paper that now fill the files of the War Department.

E. It should be based upon war-time needs rather than peace-time administration.

F. It should have as its basis the tested abilities of an officer to handle men. The naval officer is tested by that great reality, the sea. We have as great a reality in groups of men from the platoon to the division. Their reactions to the qualities of the officer who commands them will furnish the most conclusive test of the abilities of an officer. The comparison of the results of the reactions of one group to its officer to that of other like groups to their officers will furnish a comparison upon which men can be picked for the studies leading to the General Staff. This will put men in control of the Army who will not only cut down the paper work but who can secure contentment within and support from without the Regular Army. Men and groups of men in the Army are like an 8-cylinder automobile. Fear of the guardhouse and regulations will stimulate only about two of the cylinders to action. The ability of the right type of officer will stimulate and secure power from all eight. Make this ability a matter of record and the basis of advancement and we will eventually have the whole Army hitting upon all eight cylinders.

VII. FACTORS NECESSARY TO AN EFFICIENT ARMY.

A. An army can not be efficient without promotion by merit, assignment to duty by special fitness for the job, and elimination of the inefficient. These things are all based upon the records of the officer concerned. The system of record keeping must be so devised that it will promote the best men, assign the most fit men to the right place, and eliminate the most inefficient men. This is impossible under the present system. A new system must be inaugurated, based upon more scientific principles.

VIII. THE FIRST STEP TO TAKE.

The first step necessary is tangible proof of the inefficiency of the present system in war and peace by congressional investigation of the reclassification board at Blois and the class B proceedings. The proofs furnished by this investigation will make imperative the inauguration of a new system. This new system should then be the basis of promotion by competition. Until this is done the Regular Army is a useless expense in peace and a dangerous broken reed in war.

It is especially necessary to hold an investigation, at least of the class B law and its application, at this time. This because the General Staff has asked for the passage of a law which will permit them to retire several thousand officers. These officers are to be eliminated ostensibly on their records. The passage of this act will drive all progressive elements from the Army and put it back a hundred years. It will mean a wholesale class B'ing of the Army without even the few safeguards of the class B legislation. It will mean that the present General Staff is intrenched thoroughly in complete power. The danger to the national defense that this portends makes immediate action imperative.

The great and crying evil in the Army to-day is a dense and impervious stupidity at the top. This stupidity has led to the infliction of thousands of injustices on soldiers and officers. The same stupidity that fails to realize the harm done by injustice is incapable of ever making an efficient army. The vast sum of some $17,500,000,000 and the lives of some 4,000,000 Americans were intrusted to the War Department. They were intrusted to a War Department and an Army run by a system that would drive any industrial organization to the wall in six months. Why continue to throw money down this bottomless pit, why continue to endanger the military defense of the Nation by this ridiculous broken reed of a Regular Army, why continue to allow a stupid crew of shortsighted men to feed out of the public trough and give worse than nothing in return, why continue to support an Army in peace that can only save the Nation from destruction in war by the grace of Providence and the kindness of allies? Reform it or abolish it and let the National Guard and the reserves carry on unhampered by the Regular Army. The civilian soldier at least can retain what the Regular Army has lost—the ability to think. If any Regular Army is to be retained, let it be reformed and reformed from the bottom. If it is not reformed it will soon be completely de-Americanized. Decent Americans can not remain in it under present conditions and retain their self-respect. With the American stock out of the armed forces of the Nation and their places filled with subservient and servile foreign stock, let the Republic look to her liberties. We have the example of Rome before us to tell what becomes of the Nation's liberties that allows her legions to be filled with foreigners.

MALCOLM WHEELER-NICHOLSON.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations of insects affecting truck crops, including insects affecting the potato, sugar beet, cabbage, onion, tomato, beans, peas, etc., and insects affecting stored products, $110,000.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I note by the report that a reduction of $10,000 has been made in this appropriation. Very important work is being carried on with this money, particularly with respect to sugar-beet problems and the control of the sweet-potato weevil. Valuable work is also being done in the development of a dry spray containing nicotine, which has been successfully used in destroying the melon aphis. The appropriation should have been divided into two parts. The Budget Bureau asks that $90,000 be appropriated for the truck-crop insect work, and $30,000 for an investigation of insects affecting stored products. The Committee on Appropriations combined the two amounts and reduced the total to $110,000. I have engaged in the milling business myself, and I know something about the trouble that all millers have with insects affecting grain in storage. There is a demand at all times upon the Bureau of Entomology for information as to the best way to combat these pests. It seems to me that for a work of such great importance, nation wide in its extent, the full amount approved by the Director of the Budget should be allowed. I should like to have some explanation of why this reduction was made.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that $15,000 of this appropriation was available in the preceding fiscal year, so that, as a matter of fact, the appropriation is increased $5,000 instead of being decreased. In the detailed estimate which was submitted in addition to the Budget, there is no provision for an increase in the appropriation for the stored-products insect work.

Mr. HAYDEN. Where is the reduction made? The report submitted by your committee shows that last year there was appropriated $90,000 for truck-crop work and $30,000 for stored-products insect work, and the Budget asked for exactly that amount. The two sums are combined, and instead of $120,000 but $110,000 is allowed. Where, then, is the cut?

Mr. ANDERSON. The cut does not come at all, because $15,000 of that $100,000 was expended in the preceding fiscal year, so that all they had this year was $105,000 for this work. As a matter of fact, they get $110,000 in the pending bill, as against $105,000 which they expended in the current year.

Mr. HAYDEN. Are we to understand that money which normally would have been expended during the present fiscal year was made immediately available to meet some emergency?

Mr. ANDERSON. It was made immediately available to begin the work in the preceding fiscal year.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is an explanation that does not explain.

Mr. ANDERSON. The assumption is that what they are asking for, or at least what they should ask for, is the same amount of money that they spent this year. They expended this year $105,000. We gave them in the pending bill $110,000. I do not see how the gentleman can object to that.

Mr. HAYDEN. I might have no objection if that is actually the fact; but it appears upon the face of the gentleman's own report that there is a reduction of $10,000 in this appropriation.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is a fact; but $15,000 of that was not expended in the current fiscal year and was expended in the preceding fiscal year; so that all they actually spent this year was $105,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations of insects affecting citrus and other tropical and subtropical plants, and for investigations and control of the Mediterranean and other fruit flies, in cooperation with the Federal Horticultural Board, $64,000, of which sum $5,000 shall be immediately available for investigations of the camphor scale.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DUPRÉ: Page 43, line 23, strike out "$64,000" and insert "$71,500."

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment would be to restore to this bill the amount which was asked for by the Director of the Budget, $71,500. The committee saw fit to reduce that amount by $7,500, and I have asked to have it restored. My principal interest in this item arises from the fact that about a year ago the camphor scale developed in New Orleans in very serious proportions, threatening the destruction of our historic trees there.

It aroused so much interest among the citizens generally that they organized a campaign by which each block was assessed $12, and they raised a sum of money, something like $15,000 to $20,000, in that voluntary way. Subsequently the General Assembly of Louisiana, in extra session, appropriated $18,000 to help combat the ravages of this scale. The city of New Orleans itself, through its municipal authorities, appropriated some $5,000 additional to aid in the work. This work, consisting largely in spraying the trees affected, has been very successful. It has been conducted under the authority of the Bureau of Entomology, and the State entomologist and our people are very much encouraged with the result so far obtained. The effect of this reduction of $7,500 will be to reduce the amount that the Government can expend in cooperation with the State authorities in this work, and I trust very much that under the circumstances the gentleman in charge of the bill will agree to the amendment I have offered.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that I am unable to agree to the amendment. The committee recognizes the fact that there is a rather serious situation affecting the camphor trees in Louisiana, and recognized it by increasing the appropriation $7,500, one-half of the amount which was asked. In this connection I would like to direct the attention of the committee to the fact that we asked for a detailed estimate of all allotments made under these appropriations. The detailed allotment for this particular work shows that the $15,000 was proposed to be expended in this way: $3,800 for salaries, $45 for stationery, $8,000 for traveling expenses, $2,000 for equipment and material, $30 for telegraph and telephone service, and $2,525 for miscellaneous items. I think the merest glance at that enumeration of $8,000 for traveling expenses as against $3,800 for salaries will sufficiently indicate that the amount which the Budget asks for is very much in excess of the amount which they can properly expend on this work; and in view of the character of the expenditure proposed the committee felt fully justified in reducing the amount of increase from $15,000 to $7,500.

Mr. DUPRÉ. If the gentleman will yield. Was not the original amount asked for $30,000 and that was trimmed down by Gen. Dawes to $15,000?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not know what amount was asked for by the department.

Mr. DUPRÉ. The gentleman has not that information?

Mr. ANDERSON. No.

Mr. DUPRÉ. That is my understanding.

Mr. ANDERSON. That may be the case; I do not know.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Well, in spite of the statement that it seems to be an excessive proportion allowed in the item for traveling expenses, the fact remains that where a community has shown such cooperation as has been shown in the city of New Orleans in regard to this work it does seem as if Congress at least ought to show some recognition and allow through its Congress what "Hell and Maria" has said ought to be given that.

Mr. ANDERSON. Well, I do not feel that the committee is bound by the conclusions of the Director of the Budget with respect to some of these items.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

PREVENTING SPREAD OF MOTHS.

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the continued spread of the gypsy and brown-tail moths by conducting such experiments as may be necessary to determine the best methods of controlling these insects; by introducing and establishing the parasites and natural enemiees of these insects and colonizing them within the infested territory; by establishing and maintaining a quarantine against further spread in such manner as is provided by the general nursery stock law, approved August 20, 1912, as amended, entitled "An act to regulate the importation of nursery stock and other plants and plant products, to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain quarantine districts for plant diseases and insect pests, to permit and regulate the movements of fruits, plants, and vegetables therefrom, and for other purposes," in cooperation with the authorities of the different States concerned and with the several State experiment stations, including rent outside of the District of Columbia, the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and all other necessary expenses, $600,000, of which sum $100,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not want to ask an awkward question, but just what is the meaning of the word "emergency"?

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman means in line 10?

Mr. MANN. In line 13, "to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the continued spread of the gypsy and brown-tail moths."

Mr. ANDERSON. I take it it is the continued menace to the forests of the country caused by the existence of these caterpillars.

Mr. MANN. We have been making this appropriation now for 10, 15, or 20 years, and I was wondering whether the emergency will continue and it become a permanent appropriation?

Mr. ANDERSON. It still continues. In fact, the emergency existing at the present time is much greater than it was three or four years ago, owing to the fact there is additional infestation.

Mr. MANN. I suppose on that theory every appropriation we make to every department of the Government is to meet an emergency?

Mr. SNELL. The emergency passed, and we continued that five years in the other bill.

Mr. MANN. No; we do not know that it is at all, because we have not appropriated for five years.

Mr. SNELL. The emergency continued for five years, according to the statement on the floor.

Mr. MANN. That may be correct.

Mr. ANDERSON. It still continues.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York was opposed to that, I presume, and he favors this because it threatens New York State, although we have been making these appropriations. I remember when this thing went in the bill it was an emergency, and we made an emergency appropriation for the gypsy and brown-tail moths. Now, year after year we continue that as an emergency. I make the suggestion to the committee to strike out the word "emergency," because we have got in this bill several places where we make continuing appropriations.

Mr. ANDERSON. It so happens in this particular case there is a new emergency, owing to the fact there is a new infestation, which accounts for the additional appropriation which is carried in this bill.

Mr. MANN. I did not know but they used this appropriation to spread the moth.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what is being done, and with what measure of success, in introducing parasites?

Mr. ANDERSON. Quite a good deal has been done in that direction. A large importation was made during the current year and larger shipments will be made next year, I understand. So far as I recall the testimony, no very satisfactory parasite has been found, but some that are more or less effective are being imported constantly.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. These words have been carried for a long time, and my understanding is that not very much has been done by way of introducing parasites.

Mr. ANDERSON. During the war the work of importing parasites practically stopped altogether. Since the war some men have been sent over to Japan and into Europe to procure the importation of parasites, and, as I say, one importation was made during the current year, and it is expected that a large number will be imported next year. As the gentleman knows, there is a new infestation of these caterpillars in New Jersey which covers an area of about 400 square miles, and there it is hoped they will be able to exterminate the caterpillar altogether. The purpose of the increased appropriation is to carry on the extermination work.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I always hoped that some way of meeting this difficulty might be found by way of introducing parasites, because, so far as I have been able to learn, the work has been done just by the putting forth of the physical labor necessary in cutting trees and cutting brush. That was largely the manner in which this work was done. They found they could not be exterminated except by destroying the trees that were infested. It does not seem to me like a very profitable or even a proper line of work for a highly scientific bureau to carry on—to do nothing but hire a lot of men to cut brush—and if they could do something really along scientific lines by finding the parasites that are enemies of these moths and caterpillars, it ought to be done. I am glad that some progress is being made and that some measure of success rewards the efforts of the scientists along those lines.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. ARENTZ. I would like to ask whether or not Washington itself was a field of experimentation for moths? I think one would look long and far before finding more than there are on the trees of different varieties.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. My understanding is that this work was done first in Massachusetts and near-by sections into which these pests extended. I did not know that they existed in serious numbers in the District of Columbia. They are largely in Massachusetts and in sections of New York, and, as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] says, they are now found in New Jersey. I am glad to see this appropriation made. It is a very large amount. I can not help thinking, however, that the danger threatening these sections is not as great an emergency as occurred to us in the Northwest, where we had a great deal of difficulty indeed to get a little money to take care of the emergency. We found those States coming——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire of the gentleman from Minnesota in regard to the item as to the gypsy and brown-tail moth, as to where most of the work is being done at this time?

Mr. ANDERSON. There are two infestations, one of them covering the larger part of New England and the other covering about 400 square miles in New Jersey. The infestation in New England has existed for many years, and the work is under control or in quarantine. The process is to spray the trees along the border line of the infestation in order to prevent its spread into uninfested territory. In New Jersey it is on an entirely different basis. There the work is simple, and an attempt is being made to stamp out the infestation altogether—that is, to destroy the insects altogether—so that once the expenditure is made it will not be necessary to carry on the appropriation from year to year, as we have had to do in the New England district.

Mr. RAKER. Do I understand there is a motion pending by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] to strike this all out?

Mr. ANDERSON. I understand there is no amendment.

Mr. RAKER. I thought there was. I beg the gentleman's pardon for the suggestion. Of course, I find that the "ox warble," referred to on page 374 of the hearings, and the "screw worm," on page 373, have been well provided for, as has this gypsy and brown-tail moth. Our kind friends forget the "pine beetle," that in the West is destroying ten times the amount of trees that are being destroyed in the East. They appropriate some six hundred thousand and odd dollars, and there was no objection from my friend from New York on that item, when, as a matter of fact, when this legislation was passed some years ago it was demonstrated by the committee that the brown-tail and gypsy moths are imported from France for the purpose of keeping up an organization in the New England States that only had $100,000 invested. They were permitted to run their brown-tail moth and coddling-moth establishment, and the Government has been spending all the way from $600,000 to $1,000,000 a year to the end that that little station might continue, although now, thanks to the splendid work of the department, they have really quarantined those chaps and keep out foreign stock unless it is properly quarantined.

I want to call the attention of my friend from New England to the fact that while he is struggling for reforestation in his great bill, before he gets it passed and gets around to it, unless he helps protect the forests from destruction by fire and by the white-pine beetle, "white-pine rust," and "pine rust," it will be destroyed before he gets his bill through, and I hope he will assist when the matter comes back from the Senate on retaining the appropriation, to the end that the "white-pine beetle" may be properly and thoroughly exterminated.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph close in seven minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph close in seven minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that any gentleman in the House is quite in position to throw stones, particularly the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

As a matter of fact the deficiency bill carried an appropriation of $150,000 for the extermination of the little bug about which he is so solicitous. In addition to that we carry another appropriation in the deficiency bill of $150,000 to control and eradicate the white-pine blister in California and Oregon. As a matter of fact, the appropriations in this bill cover such a wide range, cover every section of the country so thoroughly, that any gentleman who gets up and criticizes on the theory of the sectional relations is going to find that he is only throwing stones through his own glass house.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Did I not appear before your committee, and when you turned me down and refused $40,000 for the white-pine rust I said even if I got turned down I wanted the West to get theirs?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think the gentleman made that statement.

Mr. LUCE. Inasmuch as the gypsy moth scourge started within about 2 miles of my house, and the brown-tail moth within half a mile from my house, perhaps I am qualified to testify somewhat on that subject. Furthermore, as a member of the legislature I shared in the controversy over the method of handling the situation after we had expended a large sum of money. Those who desired to economize succeeded for a time in preventing an appropriation. During that interval these pests spread so rapidly and did so much destruction that in the end we had to expend much more money than we would have had to expend if we had kept continuously at work.

This is merely to record the experience of the locality where the thing started as to the importance of steadily combating these two pests.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gypsy moth and the brown-tail moth do not spread rapidly. In the sense that they do not scatter out very much, they are not widespreading moths.

They are located mostly in Massachusetts, and I judge mostly in the district of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE]. They are not extensive throughout the country, and I wondered, when I saw this appropriation had been increased from $400,000 in the current year to $600,000 for next year, whether some economical New England Member, opposed to appropriations for other parts of the country, would not insist upon reducing the appropriation for his own particular section. But I have not yet heard it. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PREVENTION OF SPREAD OF EUROPEAN CORN BORER.

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the spread of the European corn borer, and to provide means for the control and prevention of spread of this insect throughout the United States, in cooperation with the States concerned, including employment of persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and all other necessary expenses, $200,000.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KETCHAM: Add, on page 45, line 15, after the figures "$200,000," the following: "Provided, That in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture $75,000 of this amount shall be available for expenditure only when an equal amount shall have been appropriated, subscribed, or contributed by States, counties, or local authorities or by individuals or organizations for the accomplishment of such purposes."

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am very happy in the discussion of the European corn borer to say that I have here one pest upon which I think all sections of the country may unite in voting for the amendment that has been proposed. Possibly a brief statement as to what this pest is might be offered in the very beginning. In order to be brief, I will take the statement of one who has given this matter very careful study. He says:

The European corn borer probably is the most injurious plant pest that has yet been introduced into this country. Unless repressed and restricted it may spread throughout the country and cause serious and widespread losses to the corn crop.

The larvæ, or borers, tunnel through all parts of the corn plant and destroy or severely injure the ears and stalks. The pest also attacks celery, Swiss chard, beans, beets, spinach, oats, potatoes, tomatoes, turnips, dahlias, chrysanthemums, gladiolus, geraniums, timothy, and certain weeds and grasses.

There are two generations each year, so that multiplication and spread are rapid, especially as very few of the borers are destroyed by natural enemies. The winter is passed in the larva or borer stage within infested plants.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KETCHAM. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. When was this pest introduced?

Mr. KETCHAM. It came to this country first along about 1917, and was discovered in the territory represented by my distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], and there its ravages developed to a great degree, and there it did great damage. Later on infestations were discovered near Albany, N. Y., involving several counties. Still later on it was found in western New York, on the southern shore of Lake Erie. Later still a general manifestation of this pest was discovered in the Dominion of Canada, and almost directly following that there occurred a great northerly windstorm, and the theory is that the moths were carried across Lake Erie, and now upon all the northern shore of Ohio infestations are found, and they go to a considerable distance inland. It has also progressed farther west until within 60 miles of the State line between Ohio and Indiana manifestations are found.

I need not say to you, gentlemen of the committee, that if ever there should come a time when this pest should sweep across the watershed, the summit of which is but a short way south of Lake Erie, and be carried by the streams, as it is proven that it is carried, into the great Ohio and Mississippi Valleys, and then into the great corn belt, I can scarcely picture to you what will be the loss that will be met by the growers of this, our greatest grain crop.

Much more might be said along this line, but I think I have made a sufficiently lucid statement to bring this great menace to your attention.

The great danger in the spread of the European corn borer has been clearly recognized by both State and National agricultural officials. Only last fall an important conference was called here in Washington to consider ways and means of restricting the spread of the borer and of stamping it out where now found. Sixteen States were represented at the meeting and the interest was exceedingly keen. Last year there was carried $275,000 in the appropriation bill for the purpose of fighting this pest. The Budget Commissioner and the committee have cut this down this year to $200,000, and the purpose of my amendment is simply to make necessary the appropriation by localities of an additional $75,000, so that the Federal Government, while not appropriating more than is called for in the bill reported by our committee, may still have available to fight this pest the full amount of $275,000 that was appropriated last year.

Mr. MANN. One hundred thousand dollars of that was available for the previous fiscal year, however.

Mr. KETCHAM. I am not advised on that point.

Mr. MANN. One hundred thousand dollars of the $275,000 was made immediately available, which meant that it was expended in the preceding fiscal year.

Mr. KETCHAM. I am glad to have that information. Possibly the committee may be interested if I call attention to some of the losses caused by this corn borer.

In some countries of Europe from one-fourth to one-half of the infested crops are destroyed, and the depredations are not limited to corn. It attacks millet, hops, and hemp as well. In this country the pest is of such recent development that figures showing percentages of damage are not generally at hand, but in 1920 and 1921 the averages shown by observations in New York and Massachusetts indicate a marked increase in the injury done by the borer. The average is 12.3 per cent and the maximum 18 per cent. In one badly infested field in Massachusetts 75 corn plants comprising 17 hills were selected, and the count made of all the borers. An average of 46 borers to a plant were found and one plant contained 117. One hill of 4 stalks contained 311 borers.

Mr. RAKER. Is not this another of those cases where the disease was imported, and if we had had proper quarantine and proper attention it would not have gotten into this country?

Mr. KETCHAM. The information I have is that this pest came into the country through importations of products from overseas. It is a very common pest over on the other side, and the losses in several countries over there are very, very significant. I am sure that we ought to take counsel of their experience, and that before this most threatening of all our pests from the standpoint of damage gets under full sway I believe we ought to take heroic measures to stamp it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that his colleague's time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KETCHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BEGG. I wish to ask if this added appropriation that is asked for is at the request or suggestion of the Department of Agriculture that there is likely to be a shortage of funds to carry out these investigations?

Mr. KETCHAM. The very first step I took was to consult with the Department of Agriculture, and this amendment has the approval of that department. The purpose of it is to secure and stimulate the cooperation of local authorities, because it has been found that unless you do have very hearty cooperation on the part of those who own the land where the infested crops are found, unless you can in some way stimulate their interest, your efforts in combating the borer will be unavailing. Therefore this amendment is approved by the department.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman inform the committee as to the nature of the remedy that is being used?

Mr. KETCHAM. The pest has reached our shore so recently and its spread to various sections of the country has also been noted so recently that methods of combating it successfully have not as yet been perfected, but the present practice follows two lines. First, control and eradication where the borer has already infested the crops, and, second, quarantine against the infested areas. The best practice in control and eradication is to burn the stalks, weeds, and crop remnants in infested fields. After the borer has wrought its damage on the corn or other crop it finds a resting place for the winter in any sort of weed or crop stalks which may be at hand. This host, as it is called, must be destroyed before the next spring to prevent a new crop of borers. Burning is the most effective means of destruction, but feeding as ensilage is effective in the case of corn as well as burying the infested plants in compost heaps. Something may be accomplished also in the regulation of the time of planting. The use of poisons has not proved very effective as a means of control. Enforcement of quarantine on plants from infested areas is used to prevent the spread of the borer. When it is stated that 182 different plants have been found infected, the task in maintaining a thorough quarantine is evident. Work in developing parasites is just starting.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KETCHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. In what part of the corn is the damage done? Is it on the ear?

Mr. KETCHAM. The corn borer is not at all particular as to what part of the corn plant it attacks. It enters all parts of it and is found in the cornstalk, in the midrib of the leaves, and of course the damage that attracts our attention particularly is that to the ear itself.

Mr. FESS. If my friend will permit me, I will say that the last planting of corn in my own garden last year was almost entirely destroyed and the damage was all to the ear.

Mr. MANN. That is not the corn borer. That is the corn worm. The danger from the corn borer is to the stalk, when it is young.

Mr. KETCHAM. I may say in reply to the question of the gentleman from Ohio that the difference between the pest which he mentions and the corn borer is that the corn borer comes in through the stalk, through the butt of the ear, so called, and works up the cob, feeds upon the growing kernels of corn and frequently completely destroys the ear. The borer does not come in from the top, but comes in through the butt of the ear.

Mr. FESS. The injury I have in mind is in the milk of the ear.

Mr. KETCHAM. I am informed that that worm is not the European corn borer, although it is a very troublesome pest.

Mr. FESS. It almost entirely destroyed my late planting of corn.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Can the gentleman from Michigan give us any information as to what method Europe has pursued to combat this pest and the results that have been accomplished? I am very much interested in this matter.

Mr. KETCHAM. The time has been so brief that I have only been able to study what we have been doing in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Michigan be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Michigan be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. I think this is one of the most important propositions we have before us. Has this borer done much damage in the gentleman's State?

Mr. KETCHAM. I have a map here which indicates the infested regions as they appear at the present time. In order that my friend from Massachusetts may see that this has a real application to his section of the country and therefore that he will be very vitally interested, I call his attention to this map. By the way, let me say that I have a very fine and encouraging letter from the commissioner of agriculture of Massachusetts urging an increased appropriation for this corn-borer fight.

The black areas on this map indicate the infested regions according to the latest discoveries that have been made. In order to indicate the very rapid spread of this pest I may say that in 1919 only about 420 square miles had been infested, and the record is now that something like 7,696 square miles in the United States are infested.

Mr. HAUGEN. In what States?

Mr. KETCHAM. In Massachusetts, in the southeastern corner of New Hampshire, in the southwestern corner of Maine, in eastern New York, in western New York, in northeastern Pennsylvania, in northern Ohio, in the Dominion of Canada, covering the whole Province of Ontario, and in southwestern Michigan. The infestations have been found within 60 miles of the cornfields of Indiana.

Mr. HAUGEN. The State of Maryland is not included, and I know that it is near Washington.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KETCHAM. Certainly.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman suggests that money be used only in those States which contribute and ask for money, and it will practically be obligatory on the Secretary of Agriculture to use money in that State to an equal amount that the State is ready to expend. Does not the gentleman see a danger in that that each State will make an appropriation and ask for money to cooperate, and the total amount of $200,000 would be divided into such small amounts that it would be too small for the department to carry on its work in the manner in which it ought to be carried out?

Mr. KETCHAM. I will say that I went over that very point with the Department of Agriculture and there is merit in the suggestion; when you consider how stupendous the whole matter is it will be seen that the amount could be very greatly increased, but I realize in these days of economy that it would be useless to ask for it. However, I call my colleague's attention to the fact that only $75,000 is to be matched locally and the remaining $125,000 is left for general work.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. After the eloquent speech the gentleman has made, perhaps the gentleman from Minnesota might consent to increase it above $200,000.

Mr. KETCHAM. I have had many pleasant interviews with the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota, but if you will permit an expression used during war time, when it comes to getting an increased appropriation, I find him somewhat "hard-boiled."

Mr. CHALMERS. If the gentleman will yield, I think the gentleman's suggestion is a good one, and I suggest that the chairman accept the amendment.

Mr. HAUGEN. Does the gentleman consider it economy to expend only $200,000 on a crop where we get 3,000,000,000 bushels? Is it not worth considering making it $1,000,000,000? If you are going to do a thing, do it on the start—making an appropriation of $250,000 or $500,000 would simply encourage the spread. If you are going to stop it, let us make an appropriation sufficient to do it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto close at the end of 10 minutes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I reserve the right to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto close at the end of 10 minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I object to that; this is the most important item in the whole bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Michigan may be extended 5 minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON. I object.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer an amendment. In line 15, page 45, strike out "$200,000" and insert "$275,000."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that amendment is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the purpose of emphasizing the importance of this danger to one of the great crops of this country. I have been assured by the chairman of the subcommittee on appropriations that this appropriation had been increased to protect the corn belt of Ohio, and I know from the report of two experts that the Department of Agriculture sent to the south shore of Lake Erie that there is danger of the spread of this pest up there. Inasmuch as northern Ohio and the south shore of Lake Erie is a very important area in the corn belt and the lands there are very important, I hope in the very beginning of the danger of this pest that enough money will be appropriated, at least as much as last year, to stamp out this pest at this time. I hope some way may be found so that this appropriation may be increased to take care of this evil.

I do not agree with the subcommittee and its chairman, who is in charge of this bill, that $200,000 will be ample to eradicate the European corn borer from the corn belt of this country.

Two hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars were appropriated last year for this department, and I am sure that a reduction of $75,000 would be taking a great risk at the expense of the corn growers that the pest might gain such a foothold here that our American corn crop, valued at billions of dollars, might be at stake. During the past year or two the European corn borer has appeared in the corn belt along the south shore of Lake Erie and in southern Michigan and seems to be drifting westward.

In my own district, in Ottawa and Lucas Counties, are some of the most valuable corn lands in the corn belt. I have the honor to represent some of the most scientific and intelligent farmers in the country.

As far as my vote and influence are concerned, I shall not take a chance of ruining their crop. If this borer is permanently lodged in this country it may depreciate the value of our farm lands running into millions of dollars.

The two inspectors from the Federal Bureau of Entomology who visited the territory along Lake Erie found many evidences of the existence of the European corn borer, and report that the insect has gained a foothold in Lucas and Ottawa Counties, and that it may develop into a serious pest and cause considerable damage to corn in that region if steps were not taken to check it.

In the name of the farmers of the corn States I appeal to the Members of this House to adopt an amendment to this bill that will make provision for the Department of Agriculture to do this work efficiently.

Mr. Chairman, I therefore move that the "$200,000," in line 15 of this paragraph, be changed to read "$275,000."

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I would like to ask some of the experts on this pest what method so far has been provided by the Agricultural Department for the destruction and wiping out of the European corn borer? Is it not altogether dependent on the action of the people themselves where their crop is infested by the corn borer?

Mr. ANDERSON. I can not qualify as an expert, but I know that the department is confined almost entirely to the quarantine as the only method which anybody knows of exterminating the corn borer, and to take up the stalks and tear out the roots and burn them.

Mr. MANN. We have a law under which they can quarantine against these things.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. There is a quarantine against importations from foreign countries.

Mr. MANN. There is a quarantine against transportation from one part of the country to another, and they can put it in force on the corn borer. But what I want to get at is, it is not expected that the Government is going to take up these corn stalks and cut up all the weeds that have hollow stems and all the wild flowers that have hollow stems in order to destroy the corn borer.

It is dependent, in any event, upon the action of the people themselves. All that it is necessary for the Government to do is to give the information as to how they shall proceed, and then endeavor to quarantine against the spread of the corn borer. It will take a great many million dollars if the Government is expected to do all this work itself.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The people of Massachusetts demanded that the Government employ at one time as high as 500 men to do nothing except cut brush.

Mr. MANN. Oh, that was at a time when the Government authorities thought that by cutting the underbrush and hollow-stem plants they could abolish the corn borer.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Oh, no; I refer to the gypsy moth and the brown-tail moth. They cleaned out the highways so that the wagons and automobiles and street cars would not carry the brown-tail moth. That is the way it spreads.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The policy pursued with reference to the corn borer has been for the Government or State inspector to go into the cornfields, and where the presence of the moth is found he recommends, and the farmer usually cooperates with him and with the State, the destruction of the whole crop. It is leveled and the crop is burned, and the stubble is plowed up and that is also burned. You must have these inspectors go out and ascertain where this trouble exists before it goes to such an extent that it would cover all of the area adjacent, and perhaps to some considerable distance on either side.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. May I say that the purpose which the gentleman has in mind is the purpose of the amendment. It particularly requires the locality, the States, the counties, the smaller units, even associations and groups of men who are vitally interested in this proposition, to come in and meet the contribution. That is the purpose of the amendment. I believe that without that cooperation the destruction of this pest will be impossible.

Mr. MANN. These people will have to do as the people out West did with the grasshopper and the chinch bug and the army worm. They practically abolished them through their own efforts. The Government has given them aid, advice, and help; but, after all, the Government can not abolish a widespread pest without the effort of the people. About all that the Government can do is to give the information.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I heartily approve what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said about the advisability of the people spending their own money and doing some of the work to rid themselves of these difficulties. In many cases, however, the people of the various communities rely upon the Federal Government. In many cases no State or local appropriation is made, and the Government is expected not only to make scientific investigations and experiments but actually to do the physical work in carrying these experiments to the people, putting them into force, and overcoming the pests and obstacles and troubles of one kind and another. I am one of those who have always been very much in favor of the Federal Government carrying on experiments and making investigations, and I believe money should be provided without limit for these purposes; that is, just as far as we can afford to make appropriations we should make them to enable the Government to carry on scientific and experimental work. But I have insisted that, when the Government finds the remedy for a trouble and all that remains to be done is the expenditure of physical labor, the people themselves ought to take up that remedy, perform that labor for themselves. However, in many cases they lie back and do nothing, expecting and demanding that the Federal Government do it. Whether it is commendable or not, we find officials and employees of the Federal Government willing and anxious to do that physical work, evidently liking to spend money. Some of them seem to think they are doing the best work when they are spending the most money; think they are doing the most work when they are hiring the most men. It seems to me that the wrong principle has been invoked and the wrong policy has been pursued. I trust that the words of the gentleman from Illinois will be approved by those in authority and that the advice he offers will sink deep into the minds of those who are carrying on this work and who are responsible for the use of appropriations the Congress makes. I would suggest also that it is good advice to the Appropriations Committee of this House.

Mr. SNELL. Why would not that be carrying out the line of the gentleman's argument if we adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KETCHAM]? That would force the localities to spend some money.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I heartily approve the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] opened up another line. We do not always confine ourselves in our discussions to the particular matter before the committee, and I ventured a few suggestions along the line opened up by Mr. MANN.

Mr. SNELL. Is not this a good place to make a start along that line by forcing these people to cooperate and pay a part of the expense?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think it is.

Mr. SNELL. That will double the appropriation.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I may not have made myself clear. I certainly did not intend what I said as in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KETCHAM]. I asked the gentleman if he did not think it would be necessary, if we are going to divide this appropriation into a number of small parts, to have the total increased, so that more money would be available. But the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] says the amount of money carried in the bill is all the department says it can profitably use.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman is talking along the line that I raised the point about a while ago. When we start in with Federal aid the difficulty is that there is no end to it. If the State had to meet the burdens of assistance, I think there would be less waste and greater efficiency in the use of the money. I agree with the gentleman that experimentation and scientific research are proper functions of the Federal Government, but that the application of the remedy and the expenditure of the money to eradicate pests are not Federal functions alone.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I was speaking about pests attacking the forests and the willingness or otherwise of the people to contribute to assist the Federal Government. There was a chestnut blight which struck pretty hard in Pennsylvania a few years ago. The legislature there made a small appropriation; the Federal Government made a large appropriation. Officials of the Government and the State worked together until it was discovered and worked out that the only way to treat the disease was to destroy the trees; that it was a question of physical labor in the expenditure of the money, there was nothing scientific in it. The scientific feature had been removed by the investigation of the department. At that point the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania refused to make further appropriations, but they came to the Department of Agriculture, or to the Committee on Agriculture, and were just as insistent as ever that the Federal Government should appropriate money to carry on that work. The committee very properly, in my judgment, refused to continue the appropriation, and I think ought to continue to refuse some other appropriations unless we find States and local interests willing to do the work and appropriate part of the money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes, the gentleman from Iowa to have three and myself to have two.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me an appropriation of $200,000 is a mistake when you think of the pest attacking the corn belt that produces 3,000,000,000 bushels of corn. Three or four years ago the ravages of the corn borer was confined to a small area in the East, but now it has extended beyond the Mississippi River. To now appropriate $200,000 is simply to nurse it along. If you are going to do away with it the only thing is to make an adequate appropriation, treat it as we treated the citrus canker and the foot-and-mouth disease. The department came to us then and said it wanted $250,000. We said to them take $500,000 and stamp it out at the beginning; get rid of it. With this appropriation of $200,000 we might just as well admit it is simply to give fat salaries to a few people. If you are going to stamp out the pest, then make an adequate appropriation.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman knows we adopted the same policy in making recommendation in reference to the cattle tick?

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman will recall that in a number of instances when they came before the committee and asked for small appropriations our committee said, "No; not $250,000; you should have what you need to complete the work. We will give you $500,000 or $1,000,000 or whatever is needed, we want you to stamp out that pest."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I am approving of what the gentleman says, and as a further instance of giving more money than was asked so that the work could be cleaned up permanently I was calling attention to the appropriation in reference to the cattle tick.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the policy is to spread the corn borer, go on with the $200,000; if you are going to stop it, give an adequate appropriation so as to make it possible to stamp it out. That is all I have to say.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not disagree with the gentleman from Iowa at all. If the policy had been to stamp this disease out when the gentleman from Iowa was appropriating for it——

Mr. HAUGEN. We gave them all the money they asked for.

Mr. ANDERSON. There might have been some chance of stamping it out, and we might as well face the fact now that there is no chance of stamping it out. It has got to the point where it is simply a question of preventing its spread. In this appropriation we are giving the department all the money that they have asked for this purpose. They originally estimated $125,000 and later came along with a supplemental estimate for $75,000, both of which we allowed. So far as the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan is concerned I have no objection to it, because I agree that with the situation as it is the only way to control the insect is through proper cooperation on the part of individuals and the States in which the pest occurs, and I shall be glad to see the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan adopted because I think it contributes to that general result.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, has the time for debate been limited?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. HAUGEN. I desire to offer an amendment to increase the amount to $300,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. I make the point of order there is an amendment pending and that another amendment is not in order at this time.

Mr. HAUGEN. I move to increase the amount to $300,000. To strike out $200,000 in line 15 and insert $300,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted, all pro forma amendments are withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May we have that amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 15, by striking out "$200,000" and inserting "$275,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 45, line 15, strike out the figures "$200,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$275,000."

Mr. ANDERSON. Is debate closed on the paragraph and this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. ANDERSON) there were—ayes 29, noes 22.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers. I withdraw the demand.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks which I made in the committee by adding thereto a resolution adopted by the executive committee of the Baltimore Federation of Churches on the same subject of peace.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, why does he not send them over to the Senate?

Mr. HILL. The reason I am putting them in is so that the Senate can read them to-morrow.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Has the gentleman any promise that they will read them over there?

Mr. HILL. Knowing the respect that they pay to everything from the House, I think they will read them.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following are the resolutions referred to:

Resolution adopted by the executive committee of the Baltimore Federation of Churches at a meeting on Thursday, March 9, 1922.

Whereas the Conference on Limitation of Armament, in which representatives of nine nations participated, agreed upon a number of important international treaties, six of which involved the United States as a party; and

Whereas these six treaties have been submitted by the President to the Senate of the United States for its ratification and approval; and

Whereas these treaties so supplement each other as to make the entire work of the conference of no effect unless all are ratified by the Senate: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Baltimore Federation of Churches, representing 166 churches in 21 denominations, through its executive committee, respectfully urges the Senate of the United States to ratify the treaties agreed upon by the conference; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to Secretary of State Hughes, and to the Members of the Senate and House from the State of Maryland.

Hon. JOHN PHILIP HILL:

The above are resolutions adopted by the Federation of Churches March 9, 1922.

L. M. MCCREARY,
Executive Secretary.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating the food habits of North American birds and other animals in relation to agriculture, horiculture, and forestry; for investigations, experiments, and demonstrations in connection with rearing fur-bearing animals; for experiments, demonstrations, and cooperation in destroying mountain lions, wolves, coyotes, bobcats, prairie dogs, gophers, ground squirrels, jack rabbits, and other animals injurious to agriculture, horticulture, forestry, animal husbandry, and wild game; and for the protection of stock and other domestic animals through the suppression of rabies in predatory wild animals, $466,500.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the figures "$466,500," in line 16, page 47, and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$502,240."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUDSPETH: Page 47, line 16, strike out the figures "$466,500" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$502,240."

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this is the sum recommended by Gen. Dawes, of the Budget, for this work. I want to say to the committee that if I could take it to the western part of this country, to the Northwest, to the States of Kansas and Oklahoma, and to western Texas, and show them to-day range lands that are now upon the tax rolls at $4 and $5 an acre, that before this work was commenced by the Federal Government in 1915 were being rendered at from 50 cents to $1 an acre, I do not believe there would be a vote against the raising of this sum to $37,700 over the amount given the department last year. I do not believe, gentlemen, there would be a vote against it. I want to say that if the conditions as described by my good friend from Kansas on yesterday continue throughout the live-stock country, I hope to be able to take this committee over there and show them that since the Federal Government began the work of exterminating predatory animals and rodents that destroy the grass and that destroy the live stock the lands throughout the range country have enhanced from 200 to 300 per cent. Now, the fact is, gentlemen, when you ask for an appropriation, the first thing to be considered by the committee is whether or not the department is asking for it. I want to state to the gentlemen of the committee that the Department of Agriculture states that without this additional sum the work of eradicating predatory animals and rodents will be seriously crippled. Now, the statement was made a few moments ago in regard to exterminating or controlling the corn borer, by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], in which he said that if you were going to engage in this work in a proper manner we should provide a sufficient sum; and I agree with him and voted with him. The same thing applies in the predatory-animal work. If you gentlemen had read the hearings upon this matter, you would have seen that since this work was commenced there have been 300,000 wolves destroyed, according to the statement of Dr. Nelson. You would also see, gentlemen, that he estimates that in destroying the prairie dog, that sweeps the grasses from the range as clean as this floor on hundreds of thousands of acres of land, causing the live-stock producer to have to feed his live stock at least half the year on those ranges, there has been saved $300,000,000 by the destruction of the prairie dog alone.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUDSPETH. May I have five minutes additional?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. TILSON. Has the State of Texas spent any money for the eradication of these predatory animals?

Mr. HUDSPETH. The State of Texas, I will say to my friend from Connecticut, appropriates and matches dollar for dollar any appropriation of the Federal Government, and I take it that most of these northwestern States do the same thing. And in addition to that I will say to my friend that the ranchmen band together throughout the western part of my State, and they pay as high as $100 a scalp for what they term the outlaw wolf, as was spoken of at Split Rock, Wyo., where they captured one after months of search, and after the Federal Government had put trappers upon his trail. There is a statement here of Dr. Nelson, and I have seen it borne out by letters, that this wolf destroyed $25,000 worth of stock.

Mr. MANN. Is this work done on private land?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Everywhere throughout the western country.

Mr. MANN. It started out on public land.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will state to my friend that there is no public land in the western part of Texas. They have trappers in Oklahoma that have saved thousands of dollars' worth of live stock there. It states there have been saved from killing, of live stock alone, $75,000,000 worth of property, and there has only been expended in this work a little over $1,000,000. A trapper has to return the hide of the animal to the Federal Government, and there have been returned and sold $268,000 in hides. I think every gentleman who comes from the live-stock sections of this great country will testify as to the splendid work that has been done by the Federal Government in the eradication of rodents and predatory animals. It is to my mind the best work engaged in by that splendid Department of Agriculture.

They state here that there is a rat for every person in the United States, and each rat will destroy $2 worth of grain and agricultural products. In the destruction of rats they have saved over $200,000,000. And I want to say to you, gentlemen, as a practical stock raiser, that before the Federal Government took hold of this, although the State of Texas paid over thousands in bounties, when they captured the wolves, under the bounty system, they did not retain their scalps. Now the Government trappers have to show the scalps, and they are paid every month.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman is speaking of predatory animals, such as wolves and rabbits and coyotes, and so on. Does the gentleman think it is incumbent upon the Federal Government to do this work on private lands? It has been done on the public lands of the West. On what theory is it done on the private lands? If it is done on the private lands to clean up rats and coyotes, why not appropriate to clean the rats out of warehouses in the cities?

Mr. LANHAM. I want to ask the gentleman if the wolves out in Texas and in those Western States have been educated to stay on the public lands?

Mr. HUDSPETH. No.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. What public lands have you in Texas?

Mr. HUDSPETH. We have not any. You know these wolves, I will state to my friend from Michigan, will cross a wire fence or a State boundary line—they may be educated up in the State of Michigan to where they will not cross a boundary line into another State—but those poor, benighted, uneducated wolves down in Texas cross a State boundary line whenever they happen to strike it; and that is all that divides the State of Texas from the State of New Mexico and several other States. This amendment should be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I think it is a very good work and ought to be continued. The appropriation in this bill is exactly the same amount that was carried last year, and the amount transferred to the statutory roll.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. According to this report, I will say to the gentleman that you have cut this appropriation $10,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. I have just stated it was the same as last year, less the amount of $10,000, which was transferred to the statutory roll, so that the same amount will be spent during the next year as is being expended in the current year.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Dr. Fisher, who has this matter in charge, stated to me this morning that the $10,000 that was taken out was taken out of the operative work this year.

Mr. ANDERSON. If he made that statement, he made a misstatement.

Mr. HUDSPETH. And we are asking only for an additional $27,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. Let me read a note from the Budget recommendation:

> An apparent increase of $27,000, but as eight employees with salaries aggregating $10,740 have been transferred to the statutory roll, the actual increase is $37,740.

We transferred those employees from the statutory roll and took them off this roll, as we always do under these circumstances, leaving the amount to be expended on field work the same as it was before. So far as the work being crippled is concerned, in consequence of the failure to allow the $27,000 estimated for, the detailed estimates submitted for the current year indicate that this year they have a reserve of $11,000, which is going back into the Treasury under the economy program of the distinguished Director of the Budget.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Then, why did the Director of the Budget estimate for this $504,000?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not know.

Mr. HUDSPETH. That is what he did, and my understanding is that they have not a dollar left.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Is not this a saving under protest?

Mr. ANDERSON. I expect it is. I suspect if you gave them $500,000 they would use it all.

This appropriation has been gradually increased from year to year, notwithstanding the fact that we are supposed to be making some progress in getting rid of these predatory animals. It seems to me we ought some time to arrive at the point where we can decrease the amount. This work is now on a satisfactory basis. There is no pressing requirement for increasing the amount at this time.

Mr. HUDSPETH. But Dr. Nelson says these wolves and other predatory animals have been decreasing to an enormous extent, but he says when you do not perform the work in other parts of the country then they come back.

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; but they have been able to diminish them on the basis of the present appropriation, and I expect they will be able to continue to diminish them.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. One good reason for increasing the amount is the fact that rabies has broken out among the coyotes and wolves. These animals bite the live stock and threaten the lives of our people and bring havoc generally to Adams, Grant, Franklin, Douglas, and Benton Counties, in the eastern part of the State of Washington; and the fact is that for economy's sake we have been compelled to yield up a part of our appropriation, which, nevertheless, was badly needed. Our State has met the Federal appropriation, and yet these infected animals have not been destroyed and are at large.

Mr. ANDERSON. They had rabies when they had less money to spend than they have now and they were doing this work successfully.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The gentleman surely does not think it safe to let predatory animals infected with rabies run about loose among the live stock?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the remarks of my friend from the State of Washington [Mr. SUMMERS] lead me to inquire what has become of the spirit of the people of the country? Coyotes have rabies; hence they send to the Government to kill the coyotes. [Laughter.] This country was covered all over it with wolves at one time, and our people at that time did not depend upon England to kill the wolves in New England. They did not depend upon the Government to kill the wolves in the country. Have our people to-day no enterprise at all to organize a band and go out and kill coyotes that have rabies that threaten to kill the sheep? I do not favor these appropriations if the people have no enterprise at all.

I do not object to this, Mr. Chairman, but this appropriation originally went in as being expressly intended to kill these animals on the public domain, not upon private land. I have a garden. The rabbits come to the garden. The field mice come in. There is a lumber yard not far from the garden. The rats go and propagate in the lumber yard, and they come over to my garden. But I have not received any Government appropriation. I am not so weak yet, so lazy yet, so imbecile yet, that I can not make any effort to destroy these things myself and have to depend upon a man from Washington to come to do it. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. These are public lands. These coyotes belong to the gentleman from Illinois as much as they do to me. In the days to which the gentleman refers, 150 years ago——

Mr. MANN. I am willing to have them killed on the public lands, but when they destroy the property of private individuals, let the private individuals go and hunt them. It is an absolute lack of enterprise. People are being taught in parts of the West, I regret to say, that everything must come out of Uncle Sam. The Representatives from that part of the country would do better if they would tell their constituents to be alive, and wake up and do something for themselves. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, a complete answer to the argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is that over five times as much is being contributed by the States in the West for this very important work as Congress is appropriating. We, of the West, insist that the share of the United States should be increased, in view of the fact that there are large areas of untaxed public lands and Federal reservations embraced within our States which are the breeding grounds for predatory animals and destructive rodents.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman's State is a public-land State, is it not?

Mr. HAYDEN. It certainly is. The State of Arizona formerly appropriated money for bounties to those who killed wolves and coyotes and mountain lions. The Biological Survey demonstrated a better way of destroying these predatory animals. The legislatures repealed all the bounty laws and made a direct appropriation of $50,000 to be used in cooperation with the Biological Survey. But when the time came to actually secure this cooperation the congressional appropriation was so small that only $20,000 was available for allotment to Arizona.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is one way to get more money.

Mr. HAYDEN. More money is needed. The amount appropriated was not large enough last year, and it should be increased this year at least to the amount recommended by the Budget Bureau. Much money has been advanced by stockgrowers' associations, by the various counties, and by the States. They are all doing their full share. In a State like Arizona where over half of its area is untaxed because the title is in the United States, where there is no way of raising revenue from the public land, where it is absolutely necessary that these predatory animals and rodents be eradicated, it is the duty of the Federal Government to contribute to this expense. The people of Arizona are doing their share and much more than their share. They are alive and are enterprising, but they have a right to ask that the Federal Government shall do its part of this work.

The Biological Survey has developed a campaign against animal pests which is extraordinarily successful in reducing heavy losses to stockmen and farmers. The success of the work has brought such public appreciation that the bureau is besieged by urgent requests for increased activities, involving cooperation of State officials, stock growers, and farmers on a great scale. It is impossible for the bureau to meet such demands under existing conditions, and this small increase of $37,740 is intended to provide means to meet the most urgent of these requests for assistance.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. If I may have the attention of the gentlemen from Illinois [Mr. MANN] I wish to say that I lived for several years in that splendid old State, and without any disrespect to my old Illinois neighbors, they are not to be compared with my new neighbors out in the State of Washington in energy and good works. We are combating this menace out there in every way possible. The State legislature has appropriated thousands and thousands of dollars for this purpose. They are doing it independently and they are doing it by matching the Federal fund dollar for dollar; but we have a large area of public lands that is overrun with infected animals, coyotes that have rabies, and they are biting the stock, and it is dangerous for children to go to school. The dogs are being bitten and the disease is being carried everywhere. The coyotes do not belong to the State of Washington, nor to her citizens. They belong to the United States. They do not belong to me any more than they belong to the gentleman from Illinois or anybody else, and if we are going to meet this menace in one part of the country, we certainly ought to meet it at a place like this, where the diseased animals are spreading and are a menace to live stock and to human beings.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from Nevada.

Mr. ARENTZ. I may say that when the rabies menace first began in Nevada the same number of men were engaged in hunting predatory animals that are required in Nevada now. The same number of men are necessary for this purpose that were required five years ago. That does not prevent a rabid coyote from going over into the State of Washington or into Oregon. For that reason, in addition to the men who have been required for the past five years in my State, other men are now required in Oregon and Washington to eliminate the rabid coyotes from those particular States.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I have a letter here from the State department of agriculture of the State of Washington which says that the predatory animal inspector has called in every Federal and State hunter with the exception of one and put them at work in the rabies district, and even with that he still needs more men. This is a real menace, and I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I was delighted with the energy of my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN], but the same remark that he made might be repeated relative to the Eastern States, regarding the very items which we have passed to-day in regard to the gypsy moth and the brown-tail moth. Why do not those people get busy and drive them out? A few minutes ago we passed an item in regard to the corn borer. Why do not these people get after the corn borer and drive him out? The same is true with regard to hog cholera and with regard to ticks and with regard to the boll weevil. Everybody knows that rabies is a disease that may be spread a hundred miles by a wolf or coyote. A wolf may travel 100 miles. That has been demonstrated by the Biological Survey.

One coyote afflicted with rabies can destroy in one day $10,000 worth of property for a man by fighting and biting this man's dog, and the dog in return fights and bites another one. In the State of California there has been as high as 40 beef cattle bitten in one night, worth $110 apiece. That is the situation.

These people are entitled to protection from rabid coyotes and wolves that run in your own public forests, and all we ask is that you cooperate with the State. We tax our people and make the land responsible for this tax, and we sell their land if they do not pay their part of the tax. All we ask is that eastern people get as energetic in taking care of their interests as we are. We all ask their cooperation in this item as we have had in other items placed on the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to throw stones at any of my colleagues from the West, but I am going to make a plea for sanity in passing this bill. An able subcommittee have worked on the bill for a long time. They have had adequate hearings, which are worth anybody's reading, and I hope the Members have read them. They have questioned the representatives of the Department of Agriculture as to what amount they can use profitably. The members of the subcommittee were evidently in full sympathy with the agricultural interests and disposed to do everything possible for those interests. The subcommittee has constructed and brought into the House a bill which is worthy of the support of everybody in the House. Now, if the corn borer interest increases one item and the prairie dog and coyote interest increases another item, we are going to have the bill all out of joint.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Then what is the use of reading the bill?

Mr. TILSON. I say, take the bill as it is, unless we can show that the committee has failed in some particular to do its work well. If it has considered every item carefully, as it apparently has done, then we should at least pay some attention to the recommendations of the committee.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I have noticed that in all appropriation bills the estimates of the Budget Bureau are taken as a reducible maximum. There is not a single bill thus far considered that does not show that practically all of the estimates of the Bureau of the Budget have been reduced.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman object to that?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If it is done properly, after investigation, I do not object, but if done arbitrarily, without inquiring upon what facts the bureau based its estimates, it might be most improper.

Mr. TILSON. I would rather rely upon the investigation of a subcommittee like this on a particular matter than the estimates of the Budget, as much as I respect the work of that bureau. I have no objection where the committee, after thoroughly investigating a matter, has come to the conclusion that even the Budget estimates can be cut, and unless I am shown sufficient evidence to the contrary, I shall follow the subcommittee.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. What is the use of a Budget Bureau if uniformly the estimates of the Budget Bureau are reduced, and reduced on the assumption that the bureau must be wrong without any investigation of the reasons that actuated the Budget Bureau?

Mr. TILSON. I think the Budget Bureau is doing a great work; but the subcommittee does even more, and follows it up still further into greater detail than can the Budget Bureau.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman wants to stand by the subcommittee. I admit that they have brought in a pretty fair bill, but their work is not infallible. How did the gentleman vote on the amendment to raise the amount to eradicate the corn borer?

Mr. TILSON. I voted with the committee. I do not know of anything in the bill or any question that has come up under it that I have not voted with the committee, because I believe the committee has brought out a good bill. Not that they are infallible, but I think there ought to be very substantial reasons before we enter upon a program of adding to the bill item after item. I think that this item as it stands in the bill has been sufficiently explained by the gentleman from Minnesota, who assures us that it gives all the money that the department can satisfactorily use. Therefore we ought to stick by it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ANDERSON) there were 27 ayes and 25 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For biological investigations, including the relations, habits, geographic distribution, and migrations of animals and plants, and the preparation of maps of the life zones, $24,400.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want the attention of the committee a moment. I received amongst many letters one from a gentleman who criticizes the House for paying no attention to the Director of the Budget. The charge was made that the Budget Director was working his head off to reduce expenses and that the House of Representatives overrides his recommendations. Up to that time I was able to write him and state that so far as it was in my memory there had not been but one item that had been increased by the House over the recommendation of the Director of the Budget. But I could give him a number of items which had been reduced, dozens upon dozens of cases, and if he cared—he seemed to think he knew what he was writing about—if he cared, I would confirm what I stated by a statement from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

I directed a communication to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, because I received a letter from this man asking that I give him these facts. He said that, "We in the country have no such conception as that, because we are under the impression that the Director of the Budget makes his recommendations to the House and that the House pays no attention to them." I quoted in my letter to him the item of $500,000 for the archives building, and stated to my correspondent that I was very much interested in that item and anxious to have it agreed to; that it was recommended by the Director of the Budget, but was voted down by an overwhelming vote of the committee; that that was only one of the very many occasions where the director's recommendations had been reduced, but I stated that we were not making any increases. I fear that rule has been somewhat violated to-day.

Mr. HAYDEN. Oh, no; no appropriation has been increased to-day.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It just restores the appropriation to the recommendation of the Budget.

Mr. FESS. I am very glad to be corrected in that respect. However, the item of increase of appropriation for treatment of the corn borer is an increase above what was recommended.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I am as anxious to see economy practiced as is the gentleman from Ohio, but in line with the question that I put to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] a moment ago, I would ask my friend upon what theory the estimates of the Budget are invariably reduced? If he will look at the appropriation bills that we have already considered, he will find that is the almost inflexible rule. The estimates of the Bureau of the Budget are systematically reduced, and they are reduced without calling the Director of the Budget as a witness, and without calling any of his subordinates to explain on what basis the estimates were made up.

Mr. FESS. Is that statement exactly accurate? Is it a fact that there are no persons called before the subcommittee when these items are reduced?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Officials of the departments are called but the Budget officials are not called. I kept up very closely with the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia, as to which that was the fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman with a great deal of confidence—and I appeal to members of the Committee on Appropriations to bear out the accuracy of the statement—that almost without exception the Committee on Appropriations reduces the estimates of the Bureau of the Budget, and without any explanation being asked of the bureau as to the basis on which the estimates were made. That is something that I have not been able to understand in connection with our new procedure.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I am in entire sympathy with the foundation of the gentleman's query about whether there are additional data upon which these reductions are made. I agree with him that to make them arbitrarily just in order to cut below what is recommended is not, as I think, justified; but I would assume that they never have been made arbitrarily, that they are made after an investigation of additional data, and by the committee that has finally to make its recommendations to the House.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. What is the gentleman's contention? Does he contend that Congress should be governed entirely by the Budget, that Congress should accept the findings of the Budget?

Mr. FESS. No; I do not believe that we should go to the extent of the British system which says that you can not change or increase an item above the recommendation of the Budget. That would not be allowing an amendment from the floor, and we never would agree to anything like that.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the Budget is to be of any value whatever its findings ought to be accepted, and when accepted Congress is simply surrendering its power.

Mr. FESS. I do not agree with the statement that if the Budget is of any value at all its recommendations must be accepted, because if that be true then there is nothing for us to do except to read the bill and vote upon it.

Mr. HAUGEN. They must be accepted to bring the expenditures within the revenue. That is the purpose of the Budget.

Mr. PADGETT. So far as that is concerned, there should be a connection between the amount of income that we receive and the amount of outgo. That is the basis on which the Budget is made, and we ought to respect that in that degree.

Mr. HAUGEN. The President can not be held responsible for any deficit unless his suggestions are carried out, and they are carried out through the Budget system. There has been a great deal of controversy about this, and I would like to have the gentleman's opinion upon it.

Mr. FESS. My opinion is that we can not accept the Director of the Budget's judgment without question and without permitting the House to revise it. I would not think about giving any bureau of the Government the power to make a final statement that could not be revised by the House. I think that would be entirely un-American.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the House should revise it and increase the appropriation within the revenues, then the Executive could not be held responsible.

Mr. ANDERSON. I desire to ask whether this discussion relates to wolves, coyotes, bobcats, prairie dogs, gophers, ground squirrels, horticulture, forestry, or what?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It means this, that the House, in Committee of the Whole, has raised the figure of the Appropriations Committee for this item and put it back to the Budget figure, and for that we are being scolded.

Mr. FESS. I think probably I am allowing this thing to go afield. I arose simply to call attention to the misconception in the country that the Director of the Budget is working his head off to secure economy for the Government and Congress is daily overriding its recommendation and increasing the amount.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Now, that statement is in error—that assumption is in error—and, on the other hand, the real budget agency of the Government is this House right here. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in opposition. Mr. Chairman, I think I can explain the matter to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], at least in part, as to why the Congress has been brought under criticism and the Bureau of the Budget has been boosted in the public eye. It is because the Budget has been able to advertise better than the Congress. Day after day, I said here not long ago, in the public press it looked like some of the papers kept headlines standing about "Dawes's saving," and I called attention to what there was about it at that time. The fact is these departments send their estimates over to the Budget. The Bureau of the Budget takes and works them out the best they can. They cut down a lot of these estimates like the Congress has always done in the past. Then the publicity department passes out to the newspapers that Gen. Dawes has saved $25,000,000 here and $50,000,000 there. Of course, I suppose he learned that from the Republican leaders here in the last Congress when they talked so much about saving money because they cut the estimates of the departments; and that is the explanation why the country does not know what is going on; and the belief that Dawes is saving and that the Congress is overriding him is due to the fact that somehow, some way, it has better avenues for publicity than the Congress has been able to find.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I assume that the Director of the Budget is an able and earnest official, and I think he is entitled to a great deal of consideration, and I can not see why such consideration is not given him by the Committee on Appropriations. As the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] has said, he works his head off. Then, having worked his head off, the Committee on Appropriations takes his estimates and almost always cuts them down materially. There are not many exceptions to that performance, and it is done without any investigation of the steps that led him to his conclusion.

Mr. ANDERSON. That statement is not quite accurate.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Then I will try to make it accurate. At the time that my friend, whom I admire as a man of unusual ability and experience, came to conduct the proceedings of the subcommittee, of which he is chairman, and which is responsible for the bill now under consideration, the subcommittee looked at the estimates of the bureau and passed upon them without summoning the director or any of his subordinates who participated in compiling the bureau estimates.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I will.

Mr. ANDERSON. The committee had before it when it considered this bill not only the proposed Budget but also the estimates proposed by the bureaus, and in addition to that this very large volume which I have in my hand, which is an itemized statement of every allotment of every lump-sum appropriation in this bill and an itemization of each of these allotments, showing how much money was expended and how it was spent for the current fiscal year and the preceding fiscal year, and the proposed allotment for the next fiscal year.

As a matter of fact, the subcommittee had before it a great deal more information than the Budget Director had before him when he made up the Budget.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I think my statement stands. The subcommittee, of course, had the statistics and it had the benefit of explanations given by the department officials. But the gentleman does not know to this good moment, I venture to believe, what actuated Gen. Dawes or his subordinates in reaching the conclusions at which they arrived and which were represented by estimates that the subcommittee declined to accept.

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes, I do, and I will explain what actuated him. He made up his mind that he would cut off so much of this appropriation, and he cut it off wherever he could find a place to cut.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Exactly. He cuts off wherever he can find a place to cut and arrives at the amounts stated in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The subcommittee regards the bureau estimates as the maximum and then always reduces that maximum. You will find this to be the rule if you look into all the appropriation bills with which we have been dealing. Why should Gen. Dawes, a man held in high esteem, an official who is at the front in estimating the needs of the Government—why should he and his bureau be subjected to that sort of treatment?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am a little surprised at the view of the Budget estimates expressed by the gentleman from Missouri—I should have said from Virginia [Mr. MOORE]. The Budget policy is working splendidly. Gen. Dawes has performed a very splendid work in connection with the Budget, but I think the gentleman from Virginia, when he comes to think about it, would scarcely wish to subscribe to the proposition that we must accept the judgment of the Budget commissioner at all times as the minimum of appropriations. The gentleman will certainly not take that view, I hope, when he reaches the defense bills.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I interrupt the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Perhaps the gentleman thought of me for a moment as from Missouri instead of Virginia because he appreciated my anxiety "to be shown." That is really my desire. I do not say for a minute that we should ordinarily regard the estimates of the Bureau of the Budget as a minimum. That would be very far from my thought to suggest. What I am simply trying to ascertain is why it is that when the bureau has worked so diligently in making up its estimates the Committee on Appropriations should work so diligently to cut down those estimates, and do it without consulting the director or his subordinates.

Mr. MONDELL. I have a high regard for the State of Virginia and its distinguished Representative; also of the great State of Missouri, where I was born; so it is a compliment to have for a moment placed the gentleman in Missouri rather than in Virginia.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CANNON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 490) to consolidate national-forest lands.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 43) to grant authority to continue the use of the temporary buildings of the American Red Cross headquarters in the city of Washington, D. C., had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FERNALD, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, and Mr. ASHURST as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10559) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. SPENCER, and Mr. HARRIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Sixty-seven gentlemen are present, not a quorum.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. WALSH having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HICKS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10730, the Agricultural appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ALASKAN FISHERIES.

Mr. CHINDBLOM rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. To ask permission, on behalf of the minority members of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to file minority views on the bill H. R. 10427, relating to Alaskan fisheries, within five days. I ask unanimous consent that they may have five days in which to file minority views.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the minority members of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries may have five days in which to file minority views on the bill H. R. 10427, relating to Alaskan fisheries. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the remarks I made before the Committee on Military Affairs last Wednesday on the offers for the Government nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals, in the usual RECORD type, 8-point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing in 8-point type the remarks he made on Wednesday last before the Committee on Military Affairs in reference to the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in usual RECORD type, 8-point, I am inserting in the RECORD a speech I made before the Military Affairs Committee of the House on March 8, 1922, as follows:

SPEECH OF HON. ED. B. ALMON BEFORE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, during the recent World War the Government constructed at Muscle Shoals on the Tennessee River, in northern Alabama, two nitrate plants, known as Nos. 1 and 2, for the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen to be used for the manufacture of explosives for war purposes and fertilizer in peace times. The wartime cost of these plants amounted to a total of $85,423,078.73, including the Gorgas steam plant and the Waco rock quarry, which is about twice the amount of cost of construction in normal peace times. In addition to this about $17,000,000 has been expended on the Dam No. 2 at Muscle Shoals, known as the Wilson Dam. It was about 30 per cent complete when work was suspended last May, the appropriation of $10,000,000 to continue work on the dam having been defeated by 11 votes in the House on February 25, 1921.

At the small nitrate plant No. 1 the synthetic process of the General Chemical Co., which had not been developed on a commercial basis, was used. The Haber process was not available in this country at that time, but is now, and is being used successfully, I am informed, in a small plant at Syracuse, N. Y.

Plant No. 1 was an experimental plant. Certain parts of it were not a success. The War Department has decided not to ask Congress for the large amount of money that would be necessary to make it a success, but has recommended that it be salvaged.

The large plant, No. 2, at Muscle Shoals uses the cyanamid process of the American Cyanamide Co. The cyanamid process for the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen is one of the oldest and best. It is being used extensively and successfully in the European countries and was during and before the World War. Plant No. 2 was built in about eight months, being completed just as the war ended. It is 100 per cent in quantity and quality of production contracted for, viz, 110,000 tons ammonium nitrate annually, as has been demonstrated by a number of Government tests. Both plants are now being kept in a standby condition.

The development at Muscle Shoals is not local; it is a great national project and is nation-wide in the uses for which it was intended. This development, as planned in the Ford offer, will be of great benefit to the entire country. Muscle Shoals was selected for this development on account of its natural advantages, namely, within the safety zone prescribed by the military authorities; the greatest water power east of the Mississippi River; in close proximity to the phosphate beds, coal, coke, limestone rock, and all other raw materials in inexhaustible quantities needed in the manufacture of munitions and fertilizer; climatic conditions ideal; central point for the distribution of fertilizer; transportation facilities good both by rail and water.

PLANTS BUILT TO MAKE FERTILIZER AND MUNITIONS.

This committee in 1916 originated the law which resulted in this development. At the earnest solicitation of those who were interested in the question of national defense and agriculture provision was made in section 124 of the national defense act, approved June 6, 1916, for the construction of one or more nitrogen plants to be used for the manufacture of explosives in times of war and fertilizer in peace times, to be operated by steam or water power; one or both. As a result of that legislation the Government, through its authorized representatives, made these improvements at Muscle Shoals. In the consideration of this question it is most important that you bear in mind that these nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals and the water-power development which has been commenced was just as much intended for the production of cheaper and better fertilizer for the farmers in times of peace as for the manufacture of explosives in times of war. This was clearly the expressed intention of Congress when their construction was authorized.

After our experiences during the World War everybody agrees that this country should never again be dependent upon a foreign market for a supply of nitrogen in times of emergency, and all agree that nitrate plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals should be preserved and maintained as a part of our national defense.

Soon after the beginning of the present administration, Secretary of War Weeks announced that he would not recommend to Congress the appropriation of funds with which to complete Muscle Shoals Dam No. 2, known as the Wilson Dam, unless he was first assured that there would be a market for the power developed by its completion that would justify the additional expenditure. In order to secure this information the Secretary of War requested the Chief of Engineers of the War Department to ascertain from water-power companies and others who might be interested in using a large amount of water power if they would be interested in taking the power if the dam was finished.

As a result, the Chief of Engineers received several replies—one from the Southern Power Co., in which it was not only stated that they would not be interested in taking the power but strongly condemned the project, declaring that it was impracticable and worthless, and recommended and advised against the completion of the development. Muscle Shoals has become very valuable in the estimation of the Southern Power Co. and other water-power and fertilizer interests since Mr. Ford made his offer. Why this sudden change of heart?

As a further result of the policy of Secretary of War Weeks, an offer was made by Henry Ford which made provision not only for the completion of the Wilson Dam but for the construction of the other dam, No. 3, thereby developing all the water power at Muscle Shoals and removing all obstruction to navigation, and also providing for the operation of the large nitrate plant, No. 2, for the manufacture of fertilizer.

The Ford offer was made on the 8th day of July, 1921. Negotiations were conducted between Mr. Ford and the Secretary of War for several months, and no other offers were made until after the Ford offer was sent to Congress, February 2, 1922.

While negotiations were pending between Mr. Ford and the Secretary of War the president of the Alabama Power Co. announced, through the press and otherwise, that the Alabama Power Co. would not submit an offer for the Muscle Shoals property, but after the hearings by this committee on the Ford offer had commenced, and when it became apparent that the Ford offer would, in all probability, be accepted by Congress, the Alabama Power Co. submitted an offer on the 15th of February, 1922.

The Secretary of War announced that he was without authority to dispose of this property and sent both of the offers to Congress with his comments, but without recommendations, and they were referred to the Agricultural Committee of the Senate and this, the Military Affairs Committee of the House.

Extensive hearings have been held before this committee during the past three weeks, and have attracted nation-wide attention. The hearings are now about completed. Both committees are planning to make a trip of inspection to Muscle Shoals at an early date. You have been very patient. You have given all a hearing who desired to be heard. I have attended all of the hearings and have made a careful study and analysis of all of the offers for Muscle Shoals. My purpose in addressing you is to show you, if I can, that it will be to the interest of the Government and the public to recommend the acceptance of the offer of Henry Ford and reject that of the Alabama Power Co. I shall first discuss the offer of Henry Ford and then the offer of the Alabama Power Co.

FORD'S OFFER FOR MUSCLE SHOALS.

Mr. Ford's offer of July 8, 1921, as modified on January 11, 1922, was put in contract form by the Judge Advocate General and is made Exhibit C on page 14 of House Document 167.

Three modifications, as I remember, have since been agreed to by Mr. Ford to clarify some parts of the agreement, namely: First, that his company, provided for in the first section of the agreement, is to begin with at least $10,000,00 paid-in capital stock; second, that section 14 be modified so as to make it clear that nitrate plant No. 2 is to be operated to its full capacity during the entire period of the lease for the manufacture of fertilizer; third, that the board, nominated by the farmers' organizations and appointed by the President, as provided for in section 15 of the agreement, shall control the sale and distribution of the fertilizer manufactured at plant No. 2 so that it will be sold direct to the farmers at not more than 8 per cent over and above the actual cost of production.

FORD OFFER FOR MUSCLE SHOALS.

Mr. Ford's proposal consists of two parts—one, to lease the dams, and, two, to purchase the nitrate plants and accessories.

PART 1.—OFFER TO LEASE THE DAMS.

PROVISIONS OF OFFER.

1. Mr. Ford agrees to pay $55,000 annually for the maintenance of dams, locks, etc., making a total payment in 100 years of	$5,500,000
2. He agrees to pay interest at 4 per cent on whatever the cost may be for completing both dams. If this amounts to $42,000,000 (the estimate of Mr. Ford's engineers), the total in 100 years under Mr. Ford's plan of payments will amount to	161,040,000
3. He agrees to a plan of amortization sufficient to retire $49,000,000 in 100 years	49,000,000
Total payments to the Government under Ford offer during 100 year lease period	215,540,000

Cost of dams (expended and proposed).

There has been expended to date in building Dam No. 2		$17,000,000
Cost of completing Dam No. 2	$23,000,000
Cost of building Dam No. 3	17,000,000
		40,000,000
Total Government investment in Muscle Shoals dams and hydroelectric plants will amount to a total of		57,000,000

Charges to navigation: Deducting the $49,000,000 which Mr. Ford repays from the $57,000,000 total cost leaves $8,000,000 unrefunded, which is less than the amount stated by the United States engineers as chargeable to navigation, their prewar estimates being $8,575,000. (See R. and H. Com. (H. R.), Doc. 20, 63d Cong., 2d sess., p. 4, par. 6.)

The United States engineers have more than once recommended that $8,575,000 should be charged to the navigation improvement of the Muscle Shoals stretch of the Tennessee River under the very plans for joint navigation and power improvement now proposed.

Earnings from Government peace-time investments compared with Ford offer: To meet the terms of the Ford offer and produce a proportionate return to the Government, the Reclamation Service, representing a Government net investment of $125,870,830, would have to show an annual gross income of $10,180,132, instead of $4,191,844, which it now shows. The Panama Canal, representing an investment of $380,554,949, would have had to earn $32,450,886 gross revenue, whereas last year's total revenues were only $12,040,117. (Based on 1921 report.)

PART 2.—OFFER TO PURCHASE NITRATE PLANTS AND ACCESSORIES.

Provisions of offer: Mr. Ford offers to purchase nitrate plants Nos. 1 and 2, Waco Quarry, and the Gorgas steam plant and its transmission line for $5,000,000. He has offered to maintain nitrate plant No. 2 in a state of readiness to be promptly operated in the manufacture of materials necessary in time of war for the production of explosives; thus securing the benefit of its use for the purpose for which the plant was originally planned. The Government, therefore, retains every advantage of the nitrate plant in time of war, but pays nothing for the maintenance of the nitrate property in times of peace.

Salvage to Government from war-time investments compared with Ford offer.

Government property sold.	Cost of property.	Salvage received.	Per cent of cost salvaged.
Muscle Shoals nitrate plants	$85,423,078.73	$5,000,000	5.85
Old Hickory Powder Plant	80,000,000.00	3,500,000	4.28
Wooden ships, U. S. S. B., each	800,000.00	5,000	0.63

On the basis of the price received for the wooden ships that were sold Mr. Ford would have offered only $567,000, instead of $5,000,000, for the nitrate plants.

Annual cash saving to Government by acceptance of Ford offer: The Ford offer, when accepted, will stop the following annual cash expenditures:

1. Guarding and maintaining nitrate plants and accessories (fiscal year ended June 30, 1921), depreciation omitted	$310,042.44
2. Guarding and maintaining uncompleted work at Dam No. 2, representing a yearly expenditure of	384,000.00
3. Maintaining Muscle Shoals Canal, average annual cost	53,079.00
Total annual cash saving	747,121.44

This is interest at 4 per cent on $18,678,000.

Cost to Government of the delay in accepting Ford offer.

Average annual cash return to the Government under Ford offer	$2,155,400
Annual cash expenditures saved at Muscle Shoals by Ford offer	747,121
Total annual loss to Government by delay	2,902,521
Average monthly loss	241,877
Loss since Ford offer was made, 8 months ago	1,935,016

The cost of the delay in accepting Mr. Ford's offer, as shown above, has already amounted to $1,935,016, and on the cost basis of the last fiscal year the cost is piling up at the rate of $8,062.50 per day.

As shown from the foregoing table of salvage to the Government from war-time investments, the Ford offer for the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals will give the Government the highest rate of salvage it will have obtained from either of the war-time expenditures included in that list. The military cantonments, constructed during the war, which have thus far been salvaged have brought practically nothing. Many of them have been completely abandoned and their buildings are going to waste, for the reason that they are not even worth the cost of "scrapping."

When the fact is taken into consideration that Mr. Ford's offer for the nitrate plants imposes upon him the obligation to keep the plants in reserve, at his expense, for the use of the Government in time of war for the production of explosives, his bid looms large in comparison with the prices obtained for the other war-time investments, from which no further returns will be secured. So there has not been and can not be any just criticism of the amount offered by Mr. Ford for the nitrate plants.

Mr. Ford not only offers a very fair price for the nitrate plants, but agrees to keep nitrate plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals in an up-to-date running condition and available to the Government without cost if it should ever be needed for military purposes and the manufacture of munitions. It is now in a stand-by condition, expensive to guard and maintain. The older it grows the more expensive the maintenance charges will be. With the very best care it would rust out and greatly deteriorate in value. The fixation of atmospheric nitrogen is a comparatively new art, and it will be improved from time to time; and in order for this plant to keep pace with the progress of the art and be an up-to-date, going concern in the event of a military emergency it must be operated in peace times.

Besides, the act of Congress making provision for its construction provided that it should be operated in peace times for the manufacture of fertilizer. So the acceptance of the Ford offer preserves this plant as a military plant and at the same time makes provision for its operation by private capital in peace times for the manufacture of fertilizer. The maintenance of the plant by the Ford Co., relieving the Government of all expense and keeping it in an up-to-date running condition, is of inestimable value and would save the Government many millions of dollars, besides the advantages to agriculture, the basic industry on which the success and prosperity of every other business depends.

Mr. Ford further agrees to operate nitrate plant No. 2 during the entire period of the lease to its full capacity in the manufacture of commercial fertilizer and sell direct to the farmers at a price not to exceed 8 per cent over the actual cost of production, through a board nominated by the farmers' organizations and appointed by the President.

The present capacity of the plant would produce about 2,000,0000 tons of fertilizer, which is about 30 per cent of the amount of fertilizer consumed in normal times. It has been clearly shown that with cheap water power the Ford company can make fertilizer at about one-half of the present price. The Nation's fertilizer bill is now nearly $250,000,000 annually. Suppose, for the sake of argument, that the operation of the Muscle Shoals plant should only result in a 20 per cent reduction in prices. That would amount to $50,000,000 a year saving to the farmers, and this amount for 100 years, out on compound interest—as the opponents of the Ford offer have undertaken to do in claiming what Mr. Ford would make from the Government in compounding interest—would be over $5,000,000,000 saved to the farmers of the country.

FORD'S OFFER TO LEASE THE DAMS.

Mr. Ford's agreement requires his company to be responsible for the upkeep and repair of the power houses and equipment at his own expense; to pay the Government $55,000 annually for the upkeep of the dams and locks, which will save the Government the expense of maintaining the present imperfect facilities for navigation at Muscle Shoals, amounting to from $35,000 to $85,000 per annum; also to pay as an annual rental 4 per cent on the actual cost of the completion of the dams; and, in addition to all this, create a sinking fund by paying to the Government $46,746 annually, which, if invested by the Government at 4 per cent interest, would amount to $49,071,935 at the end of the lease; if invested at 4½ per cent would amount to $58,570,003.

The Secretary of War, in his report to Congress discussing this part of the Ford offer (House Document 167, p. 7), made the following statement:

> Should the dams be constructed at a cost of not to exceed $42,000,000, as estimated by Mr. Ford's engineers, there would be left to apply on the investment of the Government heretofore made whatever the amortization payments would produce in excess of the $42,000,000. If the amortization fund should be invested continuously at 4 per cent there would be at least $7,000,000 to be thus applied, but should it be invested at a greater rate of interest, the amount would be increased as shown by the following table:

Amount retired by Mr. Ford's sinking fund at various rates of interest, compounded semiannually.

Account of—	Semi-annual pay-ments.	Life of fund (years).	Amount retired at following interest rates.
			4 per cent.	4¼ per cent.	4½ per cent.	5 per cent.	6 per cent.
Dam No. 2	$19,868	94	$40,919,798	$48,783,949	$58,319,359	$83,718,097	$176,030,810
Dam No. 3	3,505	97	8,152,137	9,786,054	11,780,690	17,150,545	37,103,880
Total			49,071,935	58,570,003	70,100,049	100,868,642	213,134,690

NOTE.—Payments are to be made into sinking fund semiannually at the beginning of each semiannual interest period. This sinking (or retirement) fund has nothing to do with Mr. Ford's interest payments, but represents a separate fund to be invested at the highest interest rate obtainable for the purpose of returning to the Government within the lease period the largest amount possible, with the above semiannual payments, consistent with safe investment.

The Secretary of War found no fault with this part of the Ford offer, nor do I remember to have heard of any criticism of it by any member of this committee.

A group of powerful interests is flooding Congress and the country with all kinds of propaganda filled with false and misleading statements about Mr. Ford's plans and purposes. One very elaborate publication was issued purporting to tell "The Truth About Muscle Shoals" and a large part of it was an attempt to show that Mr. Ford would devote the Muscle Shoals plant to the manufacture of sulphate of ammonia, and this product would have but little effect upon the cost of fertilizer. Mr. Ford does not intend to produce sulphate of ammonia as a nitrogen fertilizer compound. He will, of course, produce ammonia by the air nitrogen fixation process and mix ammonia with phosphoric acid, produced electrically from phosphate rock obtained nearby, thus making ammonia phosphate.

The same publication states the cost of completing Dam No. 2 would be $33,000,000, and of Dam No. 3, $24,000,000, or $57,000,000, for the completion of the dams. The facts are that experienced and responsible contractors have offered to complete Dam No. 2 for $23,000,000, and build Dam No. 3 for $17,000,000, making a total of $40,000,000 for both. The estimate of Mr. Ford's engineers is $42,000,000. The outside estimates of the engineers of the War Department is about $48,000,000, and they admit that it may be considerably less.

Mr. Ford, according to his offer, is to construct the dams under the direction of the Chief of Engineers of the War Department. It will be to his interest to do it as cheaply as he can as he is to pay an annual rental of 4 per cent on what it costs.

Some of those who are opposing the Ford offer have criticized the 4 per cent on what it costs to complete the dams as annual rental for the water power. To show that there is no cause for such criticism I submit the following table of Government loans now outstanding in the shape of bond issues:

		Per cent.
Consuls, 1930	$500,724,050	2
Panamas, 1916–36	48,954,180	2
Panamas, 1918–38	25,947,400	2
Panamas, 1961	50,000,000	3
Postal Savings	11,774,020	2½
Conversion, 1946–47	28,894,500	3
WAR ISSUES.
Liberty, 1932–47	1,410,074,050	3½
Liberty, 1932–47	15,130,900	4
Liberty, 1927–47	66,362,800	4
Victory, 1923	497,915,100	3¾

From the above table it will be seen that bond issues prior to the recent war issues were on a basis of from 2 to 3 per cent, and the average was under 2½ per cent. It also shows that a number of war issues were at 4 per cent and less. It was only toward the end of the war and in the most serious stress of the war that some bonds were issued at a rate of 4¼ to 4¾ per cent.

In normal times our Government bonds have been issued for much less than 4 per cent, so it is fair to assume that the 4 per cent which Mr. Ford is to pay as annual rental for a 100-year period will be above the average rate that will prevail during that time.

When the Ford offer is accepted, Congress, instead of appropriating money from time to time to complete the dams, could provide for the issuance of 4 per cent bonds, which would be easily negotiated. The interest paid by the Ford Co. as rental for the power would pay the interest on the bonds and the amortization plan would liquidate the bonds, and in this way the completion of the dams would not cost the Government anything.

100-YEAR LEASES.

There has been some criticism of that part of the Ford offer which provides for a lease of the water power for 100 years. Practically all of the water-power developments up to this time provide for a 99-year lease period. The criticism of this feature of the offer seems to be due to a provision in the general water power law, approved June 10, 1920, which provides for 50-year leases with rights of renewal.

There should be no objection to the Ford offer on account of the 100-year-lease period; first, for the reason that the dams at Muscle Shoals were approved by the War Department and work commenced on the construction of one of them before the enactment of the general water power law; second, because the development at Muscle Shoals is in a class to itself. There is nothing else like it. Besides, the dams are being built by the Government and will be the property of the Government, and not a lessee.

There is a fall of 134 feet in 36½ miles. The flow of the river is 72,000 second-feet at low water and 499,000 second-feet at high water. The Wilson Dam is to be 100 feet high and 4,425 feet long; Dam No. 3, 14 miles up the river, is to be 40 feet high and 6,725 feet in length; the two together developing about 800,000 horsepower, more than has ever been developed at any one place in the world.

There is a present market for only a small part of this power. It will require a number of years to secure a market for it all. Mr. Ford is not willing to take over this water power under a lease for less than 100 years. He claims that on account of the heavy expenses and the time required to provide a use and market for this power that a lease for less than that length of time would be unreasonable.

Gen. Beach, Chief of Engineers of the War Department, told you that he thought a 100-year lease in this case was proper and reasonable, and gave his reasons. Many others are of the same opinion. The Government and taxpayers are fully protected during the entire period of the lease, so there is no valid objection to the 100-year lease.

The chairman of this committee, after hearing this feature of the lease discussed by a number of witnesses, announced in an open meeting of the committee that he saw no objection to the 100-year lease period of the Ford offer. The fact that the general water power law provides for a 50-year lease, with rights of renewal, is no reason why this lease should not be for 100 years for the reasons I have stated.

The general water-power law, as we all know, was a compromise measure in many respects, and has been very disappointing in results, as there has been but little water-power development since that time. There were great differences of opinion among the Members of both Houses of Congress as to what the lease period should be. A great many favored a 100-year lease period.

RIGHTS OF FORD CO. AT THE END OF 100 YEARS.

Some one has suggested that section 17 of the Ford offer might have the effect of giving the Ford Co., its successors or assigns, a perpetual right to at least a part of the power from these dams. To show that such is not the case I refer you to that section which is as follows:

17. In order that said company may be supplied with electric power and the farmers with fertilizers after the termination of the said 100-year leases, should the United States elect not to operate said power plants but determine to lease or dispose of same, the company shall have the preferred right to negotiate with the United States for such lease or purchase and upon such terms as may then be agreed upon. If the said leases are not renewed or the property covered thereby is not sold to said company, its successors or assigns, any operation or disposal thereof shall not deprive the company, its successors or assigns, of the right to be supplied with electric power at reasonable rates and in amount equal to its needs, but not in excess of the average amount used by it annually during the previous 10 years.

Secretary of War Weeks made no objection to this section and does not construe it as has been suggested. Secretary Weeks has this to say about that section (H. Doc. 167, p. 8):

This paragraph does not bind the United States to a renewal of the lease and is in no way an attempt to control the policy of Congress beyond the 100-year period of the present lease, except to preserve to Mr. Ford's company "the preferred right to negotiate with the United States for such lease or purchase and upon such terms as may then be agreed upon." It also attempts to preserve for the company a right to be supplied with electric power, for a period not stated, "at reasonable rates" in the event the power plants are operated or disposed of to some one other than the company.

If the plants of the Ford Co., or its successors or its assigns, depending upon this power, should be denied the necessary power for operation at the end of the lease it would amount to a confiscation of their plants. The provision is reasonable and proper.

GREAT POSSIBILITIES FOR WATER TRANSPORTATION.

The building of these dams as provided in the Ford offer will not only develop this great water power which has been going to waste for all time but will open up cheap water transportation on the upper Tennessee River, which runs through a vast area rich in great deposits of coal, iron ore, marble, slate, phosphate rock, zinc, and immense forests of hardwood timber, all of which is needed in other parts of the country. With this cheap water transportation all these materials which are now locked up for want of transportation facilities can be transported in the Ohio River, thence into the Mississippi River, and to all the markets, both domestic and foreign.

OPTIONS TO PURCHASE PLANTS CLAIMED.

The Air Nitrates Corporation, a subsidiary of the American Cyanamide Co., with a capital stock of $1,000, constructed nitrate plant No. 2 at a cost of nearly $70,000,000 on a cost-plus percentage contract, and collected a fee of $1,500,000 in addition. This company claims that it has a right to purchase nitrate plant No. 2 under its contract with the Government. There was no authority for the execution of a contract by the Secretary of War or any other official at the time of the execution of the contract, December 1, 1917, obligating the Government to sell this plant to the Air Nitrates Corporation, and that part of the contract is null and void. No one has furnished the committee with any authority to support such a contention. A representative of this company did appear before this committee and claim that his company had a moral, if not a legal, right to purchase plant No. 2. The nature of the contract and amount which has been paid by the Government to this company clearly shows that there is not even a moral obligation on the part of the Government. This representative also stated that his company did not care to buy the plant, and in addition was not financially able to purchase it. So this so-called "option to purchase" in no way interferes with the acceptance of the Ford offer.

The Judge Advocate General of the War Department, after a careful consideration of this question, rendered an opinion declaring this option void and that in his opinion there was not even a moral obligation on the part of the Government to sell the plant to the Air Nitrates Corporation.

The Alabama Power Co. also claims an option to purchase the Gorgas plant and transmission line from Gorgas, Ala., to Muscle Shoals. The Judge Advocate General has also decided that this is void. Attorneys for the Alabama Power Co. and my colleague [Mr. OLIVER] have discussed at length every feature of the contract and transactions between the Government and the Alabama Power Co. in connection with the Gorgas plant and transmission line from Gorgas to Muscle Shoals, and I deem it unnecessary to undertake to add anything to what has been said. I take for granted that you will act upon the opinion of the Judge Advocate General.

GOVERNMENT RECLAMATION SERVICE.

I hope that I have shown that the acceptance of the Ford offer will not cost the Government anything in the end. But even if it should lose some interest during the construction period in making provision for the manufacture of a cheaper and high-grade concentrated fertilizer for the farmers in those sections of the country where fertilizer is absolutely necessary, it would not compare with the amounts which have been appropriated by Congress for the reclamation of arid lands in our Western States.

The Government reclamation of the arid West is both a paternal and an internal improvement which is essentially a cooperative arrangement between the Government and private parties. The summary of appropriations made by Congress for western land irrigation to 1915 amounts to $116,824,894.82, and of that amount there was an authorized Government bond issue of $20,000,000, and none of these appropriations in aid of irrigation improvements in the West return any interest payment to the Government.

One of the most prominent examples of the reclamation projects of the West is the case of the Roosevelt Dam, 79 miles northwest of Phoenix, Ariz., this dam being 284 feet high and 235 feet long, originally estimated to cost $5,000,000; but the total cost of this reservoir, dam, power system, diversion works, canals, drilling, and so forth, to July 1, 1913, was $11,193,687. The money was loaned to them to aid in irrigating their lands without interest for at least 20 years, and in some places it goes on into a revolving fund year after year without any interest to the Government.

The Government has very properly assisted and encouraged the western farmers to water their arid lands. For the same reason the Government should at least give Mr. Ford an opportunity to aid the farmers who need fertilizer.

Other countries are using their air nitrogen plants successfully for the manufacture of fertilizer and are making most valuable contributions to agriculture in this way. Our country is making progress along all other lines; why not this?

CHILEAN NITRATE AND FERTILIZER TRUSTS AND OTHER SELFISH INTERESTS OPPOSE THE FORD OFFER.

What is the cause of this opposition? It has been conclusively shown during this hearing that the Ford Co. would produce fertilizer by reason of the cheap water power and the Ford Co.'s business methods at from one-third to one-half cheaper than the present prices of fertilizer.

I believe that every one who has studied the question will agree that Dr. Milton Whitney, Chief of the Bureau of Soils, and an export on matters pertaining to fertilizer, was right when he said that the present policy pertaining to the manufacture and distribution of fertilizer was wrong and should be remedied.

I have no doubt but that this committee has concluded by this time that the manufacture of fertilizer by the Ford Co. at Muscle Shoals would revolutionize the fertilizer business in this country by reason of the quality and price of the fertilizer produced.

When the war ended it was costing the Government $1,000,000 an hour. One reason was that those who sold us nitrates and explosives of different kinds charged any price they pleased while our boys were fighting and dying in the trenches in France. We were helpless; had to get our nitrates from Chile.

We are dependent upon Chilean nitrate for nitrogen for war and fertilizer purposes. We have paid out for Chilean nitrate since 1867 the enormous sum of $821,183,624.12. In addition to this large sum the people of the United States, principally the farmers, have paid to Chile an export duty of $11.87 per ton on Chilean nitrates, which has amounted to $163,647,780.63 since 1867.

Why should the farmers of the United States continue to pay tribute to a foreign country to secure nitrogen for fertilizer purposes when there is over 21,000,000 tons of nitrogen in the air over every square mile, when we have one of the largest and best nitrogen plants in the world, equipped and planned to take the nitrogen from the air and convert it into a solid substance by means of the patented process for the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen, and thereby lower the prices and keep our money at home? We not only pay a high price for the Chilean nitrate and an export tax, but high ocean freight rates for four or five thousand miles to the nearest American port, and then high railroad freight rates to the station nearest to the farmer, then usually a long-distance haul over muddy roads to the farm where it is to be used. After all of this expense, it contains only about 16 per cent of nitrogen; the balance is of no value as a plant food and is what is usually called filler. Mr. Ford proposes to make a concentrated fertilizer and sell it to the farmer and let him do the mixing if he desires and save all this expense.

The American representative of the Chilean Nitrate Corporation testified before the Graham Committee on War Expenditures that the price of Chilean nitrate, or nitrate of soda, as it is commonly called, was fixed by the Chilean Nitrate Commission in London. He also stated that the by-product coke-oven companies in the United States placed the same price on their ammonium sulphate in proportion to nitrogen contents. He further stated that, in his opinion, if the Muscle Shoals plant should be operated for the manufacture of fertilizer that the Chilean Nitrate Corporation would have to sell Chilean nitrate at the same price that it would be sold for at Muscle Shoals. So it is easy to understand why the Chilean Nitrate Corporation should oppose the Ford offer. It has no competition at this time and is interested in keeping down competition.

The acceptance of the Ford offer will make us independent of this foreign power both for fertilizer and war purposes. The quality of fertilizer we are now using is inferior, and the prices prohibitive in proportion to the present prices of farm products. We have been diligent in our effort to enact legislation in the interest of the farmers; we have secured large amounts of national aid to rural roads; we have provided a system of farm loan banks for the purpose of enabling the farmers to secure long-time loans at a low rate of interest; we have revived the activities of the War Finance Corporation in order to assist the farmers in marketing their crops; we have recently enacted a cooperative marketing bill. We now have an opportunity to do something further by accepting the Ford offer and protecting the American farmer from further imposition by these foreign and domestic monopolies who fix and manipulate the prices of fertilizer at their will without any regard to the price of farm products or the financial ability of the American farmer.

The American Cyanamide Co. and the Virginia Chemical Co., the biggest of the fertilizer companies, Alabama Power Co., J. B. Duke, of the American Tobacco Co. and the owner of the Southern Power Co., with its vast operations in the Carolinas, are all opposed to the Ford offer and favor the offer of the Alabama Power Co. They are all intertwined through stock ownership, as has been shown by congressional investigations. If the Alabama Power Co. should secure Muscle Shoals, there would be formed a combination of interests of water-power and fertilizer with power for evil without limit.

There is always great danger to the public in any one group of interests securing control over any industry. It is but natural that these interests should object to Henry Ford getting Muscle Shoals. They, like the Chilean Nitrate Corporation, do not want any competition, either in the fertilizer or water-power business. They believe in monopoly. They profit by monopoly. It is our duty to try to protect the people in their rights.

There are 6,500,000 farmers in the United States. Thirty-eight per cent of our population live on farms. The annual value of crops and live stock amount to from eleven to twenty-five billion dollars. Agriculture has an investment of $80,000,000,000, the largest investment by far of any other business. The next largest business is railroads, with an investment of $20,000,000,000.

The shrinkage in value of the crops of 1920 amounted to $8,000,000,000, from which the farmers have not yet recovered. In the face of this condition of the American farmer the price of Chilean nitrate has advanced $17 per ton within the last 30 days, with further increases threatened. The fertilizer, known as 8-3-3, has advanced from $26 a ton to $31 a ton, and the indications are that it will go to $36 in a short time.

The National Fertilizer Association opposes the Ford offer. It has flooded Members of Congress with literature in which it is contended, first, that the Ford Co. can not make fertilizer at Muscle Shoals, and second, that it can not make it cheaper than it is now being sold. The president of this association appeared before this committee and made the same claim. If this be true, why should they be so concerned about the Ford offer? It is very apparent that they believe that Ford can make fertilizer cheaper, and that it will materially affect their business. This same representative of the National Fertilizer Association contended before this committee that a monopoly of water-power interests was in the interest of the people.

SECRETARY OF WAR URGES EARLY ACTION IN ORDER TO GIVE EMPLOYMENT TO LABOR ON LARGE SCALE.

The Secretary of War, in his report to Congress on the Ford offer, made this very significant and pertinent statement:

> In this time when there is a large amount of unemployment it is not without importance to consider the advantages to the Nation of the employment of the large amount of labor required in undertaking this development. I therefore urge that Congress give early consideration to this matter, not only to settle a controverted question but to furnish employment on a large scale.

Mr. Ford intends, if his offer is accepted, to begin work immediately and give employment to thousands of people who are now unable to secure employment. Mr. Ford's personal representative, Mr. W. B. Mayo, said to you one day last week that Mr. Ford wanted to get in on the work at Muscle Shoals this summer while the weather is good and the river is low and before there is further damage to the unfinished dam and machinery and equipment at the dam. He claims that the development of his company will eventually result in giving employment to 1,000,000 people. This, with an average of five to the family, would mean 5,000,000 people employed and supported as a direct result of this development.

Can anyone doubt for a moment that Mr. Ford, with his immense capital, organization, and wonderful record of efficiency, will not make a success of this undertaking? Would not the American people regard it as a national crime to reject the Ford offer and prevent this development, which would be nation-wide in its beneficial effects?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. ALMON, do you want to leave in the RECORD your deliberate suggestion that the rejection of the Ford offer would be regarded as a national crime?

Mr. ALMON. Well, if it is thought that expression is too strong, I will say, "Would not the American people regard it as a national calamity?"

The acceptance of the Ford offer would not only result in giving employment to labor on a large scale, provide for better and cheaper fertilizer, and improvement to navigation, but that part of the country within a radius of 200 miles, and probably more, and all intervening points would be supplied with cheap power for all purposes.

It also means the investment by the Ford Co. of forty or fifty million dollars in equipping the nitrate plant for the manufacture of fertilizer and the establishment of other industrial plants.

THOMAS A. EDISON SAYS THE DETROIT MANUFACTURER WOULD MAKE A GREAT SUCCESS WITH HIS PLANS AT MUSCLE SHOALS.

It is claimed by some that Mr. Ford can not make a success of the fertilizer business at Muscle Shoals. Mr. Thomas A. Edison, after visiting Muscle Shoals and making full investigation, said he considered that it was a practical thing to make fertilizer at Muscle Shoals; that there is nothing complex about it. Is not his opinion worth something?

Many said that Mr. Ford could not make cheap automobiles, trucks, and tractors in competition with those engaged in the business when he commenced, but in this they were mistaken. Last year the Ford Co. turned out 1,013,958 passenger automobiles and trucks, and is now selling an automobile, a tractor, and a truck for $1,150, and claims that he will be able to reduce it to $1,000 if his offer for Muscle Shoals is accepted.

The success of Henry Ford is the marvel of the century when we realize what he has accomplished was in spite of the powerful opposition, fighting a single-handed battle. The great masses of the people of the Nation not only indorse his offer but have implicit faith in his ability to carry out the big plans he has in view if he gets Muscle Shoals.

One of the chief causes of his success is because he is willing to help his fellow man. No one ever hears of friction between capital and labor in the great manufacturing plants of the Ford Motor Co.

Henry Ford believes in high wages and low price of product. On that basis he has been a wonderful success. In this respect he is very different to many of the leaders of financial power in this country.

FORD OFFER INDORSED BY ALL FARM ORGANIZATIONS AND FARM PAPERS.

The Ford offer has the hearty and unanimous indorsement of every farm organization and farm newspaper in this country, and their representatives have appeared before this committee and earnestly urged its acceptance. They are equally as unanimous and united in their opposition to the offer of the Alabama Power Co. This is but natural as it makes no provision for the manufacture of fertilizer at Muscle Shoals. The representatives of these farm organizations have visited Muscle Shoals several times and made a thorough investigation of its possibilities from a fertilizer standpoint, and have been unanimous in their report and recommendations in favor of the completion of the development and the operation of the plants. They regard the acceptance of the Ford offer as the only hope of relief from the Chilean nitrate and fertilizer monopolies and trusts. The farmers of this country are watching closely the action of Congress in the matter of the Ford offer and will not be satisfied unless this is done. They are intelligent and fully understand the Ford offer, and are confident that if it is accepted that the Ford company will revolutionize the fertilizer industry, destroy the monopoly, and give them cheaper and better fertilizer.

The Ford offer has the unqualified indorsement of the Mississippi Valley Association, an organization composed of strong and successful business men, representing 55 per cent of the population of the United States.

INDORSED BY WASHINGTON FARMERS' CONFERENCE.

The Ford offer was unanimously indorsed by the great farmers' conference, which was called by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, at the request of President Harding, which was in session in the city of Washington for five days the latter part of January of this year. During the discussion of the Ford offer in that conference only one voice was raised against it, and that was by an official of the American Fertilizer Association.

President Harding, in addressing the Washington Conference of Farmers, among other things, made the following significant statement:

> Waterways have been too long neglected in America. We need a practical development of water resources, both for transportation and power. A large share of the railroad tonnage is coal for railway fuel. The experiences of railway electrification demonstrates the possibility of reducing this vast and increasing efficiency. We may begin very soon to consider plans to electrify our railroads.

Soon after this address was delivered by President Harding, Mr. Mapothier, president of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, one of the great railway systems of the country, announced in a speech in Birmingham, Ala., that he was in favor of the Ford offer for Muscle Shoals, and if it was accepted by Congress his company would like to make a trial of electricity in railroad operation on its branch line from Muscle Shoals to Nashville, Tenn., a distance of about 150 miles.

The 800,000 horsepower developed at Muscle Shoals would conserve 6,500,000 tons of coal annually; that is, the water power would be equal to the power generated by the use of that much coal.

So when the water power is developed in accordance with the Ford offer, it will also mean a conservation of coal on a big scale.

The Alabama delegation in Congress is as a unit in favor of the Ford offer, and will continue to work together very earnestly to have it accepted by Congress. The delegation is equally as strong and united in its opposition to the offer of the Alabama Power Co. and its efforts to defeat the Ford offer.

The delegations from a number of other States have also indorsed the Ford offer. Business, civic, and commercial organizations in all parts of the country have passed resolutions urging Congress to accept the Ford offer. I do not recall anything that has ever heretofore attracted such a nation-wide interest and favorable indorsement. Not only farmers, but merchants, bankers, and professional men have made known to Members of Congress their approval of the Ford offer and their desire that it be accepted. It would seem that 99 per cent of the people in many parts of the country favor the Ford offer. I feel sure this is true in the State of Alabama, which I in part have the honor to represent in the House. I am also sure that the opposition in that State is just as strong against the offer of the Alabama Power Co. and its eleventh-hour effort to defeat the Ford offer and perpetuate its monopoly of the water power of Alabama. This sentiment for the Ford offer and against that of the Alabama Power Co. has been demonstrated by the people of Alabama and other parts of the country by means of petitions, resolutions of mass meetings, women's clubs, leagues of women voters, posts of the American Legion, labor organizations, and civic organizations of all kinds urging Congress to adopt the Ford offer and reject that of the Alabama Power Co.

These expressions of the people have been filed with this committee with the request that they be carefully considered. There have been mailed to me petitions signed by practically every State, county, and municipal officer in Alabama, the immediate and direct representatives of the people, urging the acceptance of the Ford offer and strongly protesting against that of the Alabama Power Co. I will not ask to incumber the printed hearings with all of these petitions, but I do ask that one be inserted in the RECORD, that of Jefferson County, in which the city of Birmingham is situated, the headquarters of the Alabama Power Co. You will notice that it is even signed by all the judges of the court in the city of Birmingham. I will only ask permission that a few of the resolutions referred to be inserted in the RECORD.

As a further expression of the people of the Birmingham district, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD a copy of the resolution passed by a mass meeting held in the city of Birmingham on the 19th of last month, attended by 2,000 persons—1,000 more were turned away for lack of room—indorsing the Ford offer and expressing their unalterable opposition to the offer of the Alabama Power Co.

The sentiment of all the people of Alabama was well and very forcefully expressed in a memorial addressed to the President and Congress and committees in Congress adopted by a Statewide mass meeting, 5,000 strong, at Montgomery, Ala., on Wednesday, March 1, 1922, which it is agreed shall be inserted in the RECORD.

OFFER OF THE ALABAMA POWER CO.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I will now give very briefly my views and somewhat of an analysis of the Alabama Power Co.'s offer, and then I will have concluded.

The acceptance by Congress of the bid of the Alabama Power Co. would mean practically a donation by the Government of the large steam-power plant at Muscle Shoals, nitrate plant No. 2, which cost $12,326,392, the Gorgas plant and transmission lines, which cost $4,676,000, and the $17,000,000 which has been expended on the construction of the Wilson Dam, making a total of $34,002,392.

The offer is deceptive in that it begins by offering $5,000,000 for the two steam plants and transmission lines, but later provides that the cost of the lock at the Wilson Dam is to be deducted from this amount. One or more of the engineers claim that the lock would cost approximately $4,500,000. Under the offer of the Alabama Power Co. it would build the lock and would have its own methods of bookkeeping, and it could easily make it cost the full amount of $5,000,000.

The 1,000,000 secondary horsepower offered for the operation of nitrate plant No. 2 would not be used by the Government, and the Government would not be able to lease it to anyone who would, for the reason that it would require from ten to fifteen millions of dollars working capital and expenditure to convert it into a fertilizer plant. Besides no one could depend upon this secondary power available for 8 or 10 months in the year with which to operate the plant. The steam plants having been conveyed to the Alabama Power Co., neither the Government nor anyone it might designate to operate the plant would have any available power from two to four months when the secondary power was not available. This secondary power would be of value if there were auxiliary steam plants or primary water power available. It would be of value if both of the dams were built and if storage dams were built in the upper Tennessee River and its tributaries, as Mr. Ford proposes to do at his own expense, so as to store the flood waters and let them down during the low stages of the river and thereby convert secondary into primary power at the Muscle Shoals Dam.

It is provided in section 2 of the offer of the Alabama Power Co. that if this secondary power is discontinued by the Government, due to change in the art in the production of fertilizer and munitions at plant No. 2, and for no other reason as the offer is written, that the Alabama Power Co. is to purchase and pay for the same in accordance with a schedule to be set forth in the license. It will be noted that this is to be done in the event the Government discontinues its power for the reasons stated above, which might never occur for the reason that the Government might, and in all probability would, never begin to use it. It will also be noted that the amount to be paid the Government for it in such an event is to be fixed in accordance with the schedule set forth in the license. This license would be issued by the Federal Power Commission, and the schedule of rates fixed thereby would be a matter of agreement between the commission and the Alabama Power Co., so the Government would be at the mercy of the Alabama Power Co., and it would result in the Government receiving practically nothing for this secondary power. For these reasons I feel that I was justified in saying at the outset that the acceptance of the offer of the Alabama Power Co. means practically a donation by the Government to that company of the two steam plants, transmission lines, and the Wilson Dam, upon which $17,000,000 has been expended, altogether representing a total investment of $34,002,392 by the Government.

If the offer of Henry Ford was not in existence, I do not believe the committee or Congress would consider for a moment the acceptance of the offer of the Alabama Power Co. In the absence of the Ford offer the committee would evidently recommend the completion of the Wilson Dam by the Government rather than make this donation to the Alabama Power Co.

The Secretary of War has recommended that the Dam No. 2, known as the Wilson Dam, be completed by the Government in the event the Ford offer is not accepted. He stated that the revenue from the sale of the water power from the Wilson Dam would amply justify Congress in appropriating a sufficient amount with which to complete it. The committee and Congress would certainly conclude that it would be better to spend twenty or twenty-two million dollars more to complete this dam and own it for all time rather than make the donation of $34,000,000 worth of property to the Alabama Power Co. in order to induce it to spend enough money to complete it and then own it, and if the Government acquired it at the end of 50 years would have to pay for it a fair value in accordance with the water-power law. If finished in accordance with the Ford offer, it would be the property of the Government for all time. If the offer of the Alabama Power Co. was accepted there is no way by which anyone could know when, if ever, the work upon this dam would begin. When the permit was issued by the Federal Power Commission, the Alabama Power Co. would have two years under the water-power law to begin construction work, and might have it extended an additional two years. So the statement in the offer that work would commence within a reasonable time does not mean anything. In fact, there is no certainty whether a permit would ever be issued to the Alabama Power Co. by the Federal Power Commission if its offer should be accepted by Congress. If a permit was issued the company might never be able to borrow the money with which to complete the Wilson Dam. In fact, it might never make any effort to raise the money, but its real purpose in making its offer would have been accomplished—that is, it would have been the means of defeating the Ford offer. Your time and that of Congress would all have been in vain, and the Alabama Power Co. would continue to enjoy a monopoly of the water powers of Alabama, which its president claims and insists would be in the interest of the people. I deny this; the people deny it, as is shown by resolutions, petitions, and mass meetings opposing the offer of the Alabama Power Co. and its methods.

The development at Muscle Shoals is a most important part of our national defense. There is located our great munitions plant. Would it not be a great piece of military strategy to turn it over to a lot of foreigners or place it or its principal parts under their control? A majority of the stock of the Alabama Power Co. that can be voted is owned by foreigners. They own a large part of its securities. If the Alabama Power Co. completes the Wilson Dam it would have to borrow the money with which to do it. It is natural to presume that it would do as heretofore and borrow it from foreigners.

The Alabama Power Co. published and furnished the Alabama Legislature in 1918–19 a statement as to its business and how it secured its capital, in which appears the following statement:

> The capital to construct the work was obtained in England, Germany, France, Belgium, Canada, and a part in the United States.

It will be remembered that the Alabama Power Co. is owned by the Alabama Traction, Light & Power Co. (Ltd.), which is a corporation of the Dominion of Canada, and that it is very largely the property of citizens of Great Britain.

It is bad enough for this corporation under foreign influence to have a monopoly of practically all of the water-power sites in Alabama, much less to get its clutches on all of the water and steam power connected with the Government munitions plant at Muscle Shoals and strip the plant of all of its ability to function in the event of a military emergency.

If the Ford offer is accepted it will be controlled by Americans and American money, and under no obligations to any great financial interests, trusts, or monopolies, domestic or foreign.

The offer of the Alabama Power Co. can not be regarded in competition with the Ford offer. It is entirely in a different class. It makes no provision for the building of Dam No. 3, no improvement to navigation, nor the operation of the nitrate plant for the manufacture of fertilizer, all of which is provided for in the Ford offer. I do not believe that the committee will consider for a moment favorable action on the offer of the Alabama Power Co.

IF THE FORD OFFER IS NOT APPROVED, WHAT WILL THE COMMITTEE RECOMMEND?

It would seem that there is but one of four courses for this committee to follow, viz:

1. That of scrapping the development which has cost over $100,000,000, as has been suggested by the big interests opposing the Ford offer; or

2. For the Government to complete the water-power development and go into the business of selling power and manufacturing and selling fertilizer; or

3. Accept the offer of the Alabama Power Co. and donate to it the steam-power plants and unfinished dam, representing an investment of $34,000,000 by the Government, and make no improvement to navigation and no provision for the manufacture of fertilizer; or

4. Accept the Ford offer and convert a large war-time expenditure into an investment which will result in a great benefit to the entire country.

It would be almost unthinkable to consider the first; the second would be very objectionable to the great majority of people; the third would mean the defeat of all of the purposes and objects of the Government in what has been done at Muscle Shoals; the fourth is the only safe and sensible course to pursue and would meet with the approval of the country at large.

In conclusion, I most earnestly ask that when you have completed your hearings and have visited Muscle Shoals that you will come to the conclusion that the offer of Henry Ford should be accepted, and that you will not only recommend its acceptance in your report but that you will also prepare and introduce in the House such a bill as may be necessary to provide for its acceptance by Congress.

I thank you, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, for your attention and your courtesy in permitting me to be heard.

The resolutions, referred to by Mr. ALMON, follow:

RINGING MEMORIAL TO CONGRESS BY STATE-WIDE MASS MEETING AT MONTGOMERY, ALA., MARCH 1, 1922.

At the state-wide mass meeting held in Montgomery yesterday afternoon the following ringing memorial to Congress was presented by the resolutions committee, of which Mr. J. L. Andrews, of Sheffield, was chairman, and was unanimously adopted:

We, the citizens of Alabama, 5,000 strong, representing county governments, municipal authorities, women's clubs, labor bodies, chambers of commerce, and farmers' organizations from every quarter of the State, in mass meeting assembled at Montgomery, with full confidence in both justice and wisdom of the President and Congress, do hereby declare:

That while the entire Muscle Shoals stretch of the Tennessee River lies within the borders of this State, the right to control and regulate the river in the interest of the Nation's commerce has been ceded by the State of Alabama to the Federal Government. We recognize the fact that Muscle Shoals is the property of the Nation, belonging alike to the people of all of the States, and, while we claim no greater right than any other State to say what shall be done with Muscle Shoals, we believe that we but exercise the guaranties of the Federal Constitution when we petition Congress that this great national asset be not employed by the Government as an instrumentality for fastening upon us and upon our children and our children's children the yoke of an oppressive and burdensome monopoly.

NOW HAS MANY POWER SITES.

We affirm that the Alabama Power Co. now owns and controls a number of splendid power sites on the Coosa River in this State; that it owns and controls all of the available power sites on Little River in Alabama; and that it owns the wonderful power site at Cherokee Bluffs on the Tallapoosa River in this State; that in the 14 years since its incorporation it has built one power dam in this State and commenced work on one other dam; that at the present rate of development of the power potentialities already under the control of this corporation more than 100 years will go by before all of these dormant water powers are harnessed; that it has been the policy of that corporation to develop only such power as can be sold in small units and at high prices; that controlling as it does all of the great water-power sites in a State blessed by God Almighty with wonderful power possibilities, it, a foreign-controlled corporation, is in position to litigate with any American-owned organization which may seek to develop any one of Alabama's wasting water powers, just as it now threatens to litigate with Henry Ford, or with the Government, if either seeks to build Dam No. 3 at Muscle Shoals, or to control the Government-built steam plant and transmission line at Gorgas; that in spite of the fact that this foreign-owned corporation has long enjoyed exemption from taxation in this State, it has been busy ever since its entrance into Alabama in preempting every great power site within our borders, and in so copper riveting its hold on all of Alabama's great hydroelectric potentialities as to prevent for all time their development by any possible competitor; that it has been its policy to buy these power sites at farm-land prices and to hold them in perpetuity as power sites; that it already controls the utilities in our principal cities, and is year by year securing the control of the utilities in our towns and villages; and that if it secures Muscle Shoals it will have perfected its control of all of our great water powers and will hold in its selfish grasp all of these instrumentalities placed within our borders by a beneficent Providence for the promotion of the commercial and industrial welfare of all the people.

LEGISLATIVE TRAVESTY.

We hold that it would be a travesty on legislation if after many years of congressional consideration of how best to conserve the power in our navigable streams for the benefit of all the people, and how most surely to preserve them from being used as instruments of monopoly, the Nation's greater water power should be handed over to the Alabama Power Co. under the national water power act.

And we further hold that it would be the quintessence of legislative folly for the Government, after 10 years of investigation as to how best to free the United States from its dependence upon a foreign power for its supply of nitrogen for explosives in the event of war, and after spending millions of dollars in the construction of the greatest nitrogen fixation plant in the world, to turn over the only power capable of successfully operating the nitrate plant to a corporation owned and controlled by foreigners.

RETURNS EVIL FOR GOOD.

We remind Congress that just as the Alabama Power Co. has returned evil for good to the people of Alabama, so it is the one corporation whose dealings with our country in the grim emergency of war was so shameless, selfish, and conscienceless that when its conduct was investigated by a select committee of Congress the minority members of this committee joined with the majority in denouncing its brazen and sordid betrayal of its duty to a war-beset Nation.

Again affirming our utmost confidence in the ability and the desire of the President and the Congress of the United States and the committees of Congress to reach the soundest solution of the pending questions relating to the disposition of Muscle Shoals, we wish to express ourselves with regard to Mr. Henry Ford's proffered contract with the Government. The subject is of such vital interest to the people of Alabama that with greatest enthusiasm they have assembled in this meeting for the purpose of making this memorial:

Upon mature deliberation we, as citizens, do express our firm conviction that it is to the interest of the United States and to the interest of the people of Alabama that the offer of Henry Ford be accepted and concluded as a binding contract, and for the following, among other, reasons:

The acceptance of the Ford offer would insure the operation in Alabama of at least two great organizations engaged in the development and sale of hydroelectric energy, in the distribution and sale of power throughout the territory which can be reached by transmission lines from the several power sites on the Tennessee River whose development is within the contemplation of the Ford offer.

The Ford offer insures the operation of United States nitrate plant No. 2 for a period of 100 years for the production of fertilizers in time of peace and for the production of nitrates for explosives in the event of war.

It insures to the millions of farmers throughout the United States, whose organizations have with unanimity indorsed the offer of Henry Ford, the continuous operation of this Government-built plant for the production of nitrate fertilizers in competition with the present producers of nitrates by a company whose profits will be limited to 8 per cent, and in sufficient volume to have a controlling influence in fixing the price of nitrates and nitrate fertilizers for agricultural uses.

OPERATION OF NITRATE PLANTS.

The Ford offer insures to the people of the United States the operation of nitrate plant No. 2 and its maintenance in such a constant state of readiness, with a trained force of operatives, as to guarantee to the Government and its citizens an independent internal supply of nitrates in exact accord with the announced intention of Congress as expressed in section 124 of the national defense act of 1916.

The Ford offer guarantees the construction of Dam No. 3 and makes provision for use by the people of the United States for purposes of navigation of one of the country's largest and most important rivers, which is an integral part of the great Mississippi River waterway system.

In consideration given to the various offers for Muscle Shoals much has been said about the profit and loss that would accrue to the Government of the United States and to its people from the acceptance or the rejection of the various offers. We respectfully urge that a plan which looks to a constant supply of cheap fertilizers for the farmers of the Nation through a period of 100 years, which insures to American industry during that period the use of nearly 1,000,000 horsepower of electric energy, which provides for the security of the Nation in the event of war, and which guarantees the navigability of one of the country's greatest rivers for all time—these continuing additions to the resources of the Nation, if it were possible to express them in terms of dollars, with interest at 4 per cent, will in the course of 100 years add so vastly to the wealth of the Nation and the prosperity of its people that any difference in the price of the nitrate plant as fixed in the several offers, and any difference between the purchase price offered and the estimated possible scrap value of the property, is dwarfed into insignificance.

GALLING AND OPPRESSIVE.

With these considerations in view, and having in mind the freedom of our own people from a galling and oppressive water power monopoly, the freedom of the American farmer from a burdensome and grinding fertilizer monopoly, the opening of a great river to navigation, and the security of the country in the event of war, we urge the President and the Congress of the United States to accept the offer of Henry Ford, whom we verily believe seeks through his offer to dedicate to the American people, and especially to the farmers of America, his genius and his fortune.

We indorse the sentiment, "America first," and Muscle Shoals first for Americans, and above all for American farmers. Henry Ford is a typical American, who by his genius has done more for country people and country life than any other man of his time. A man who has the trust and confidence of the great masses of the common people, as evidenced by the resolutions adopted by every plain, ordinary American, including the representatives of 4,000,000 farmers, who have given voice to their sentiments in regard to his proposal for the development of Muscle Shoals.

We believe the issue in Congress is clearly drawn. It is a contest between the people and the interests which control the people's fertilizer and power resources.

On behalf of the army of the unemployed, in the interest of the great body of plain American citizens, in the name of millions of perplexed and burdened farmers, we beg our President and the Congress of the United States and its committees to promptly accept the offer of Henry Ford.

PETITION OF OFFICIALS OF JEFFERSON COUNTY, ALA.

THE STATE OF ALABAMA, Jefferson County.

To the Hon. E. B. ALMON,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.:

We urge the Government to accept the offer of Henry Ford for Muscle Shoals, because we believe that it will be developed by him for the benefit of the American people. We protest against the acceptance of the offer of the Alabama Power Co., because it would insure to it the control of every large water-power site in Alabama, and thereby fasten upon our people for all time a water-power monopoly.

J. P. Stiles, judge of probate, Jefferson County, Ala.; M. V. Henry, county treasurer; William E. Fort, judge, criminal division, circuit court, tenth circuit; H. P. Heflin, judge, criminal division, circuit court, tenth circuit; Joseph N. Tate, solicitor, tenth judicial circuit of Alabama; C. B. Smith, judge, civil division, circuit court; J. O. Sims, judge, civil division, circuit court; J. B. Aird, judge, civil division, circuit court; Hugh A. Locke, judge, civil division, circuit court; William J. Waldrop, clerk of circuit court; Richard T. Evans, circuit judge; Romaine Boyd, circuit judge; D. C. Ball, president board of revenue; Lacey Edmundson, board of revenue; T. E. Huey, board of revenue; J. W. Givin, board of revenue; W. B. Copeland, board of revenue; James F. Hawkins, tax collector; J. C. Hartsfield, sheriff; L. R. Dillon, tax assessor, Jefferson County; M. E. Morris, chairman board of registrars; Conrad H. Ohme, engineer, Jefferson County.

Resolution.

Resolved by the citizens of Huntsville and Madison County in mass meeting assembled, That we note with pleasure and approval of the action taken by the Montgomery Chamber of Commerce in declaring to Chairman KAHN, of the Military Committee of the House, that the Alabama Power Co.'s offer for Muscle Shoals is a move to complete what is already their practical monopoly of all water-power sites in Alabama; that they already control the power sites on the Coosa, Tallapoosa, and Little Rivers and are undoubtedly associated with power companies in Georgia, controlling adjacent Georgia sites. The Alabama Power Co. lacks only Dam 2 at Muscle Shoals to complete their monopoly, for, as they advised the Secretary of War in their offer, they already own the power site at Dam 3. To permit them to secure Muscle Shoals will repudiate the most important principles which Congress embodied in the last Federal water power act, passed after an effort of 10 years.

Their eleventh-hour offer for Muscle Shoals, made to prevent the acceptance of Henry Ford's offer, defies the rights, happiness, and opportunity of the people of the State. The company has built dams and availed themselves of the resources in the rivers of Alabama under special privilege granted by the legislature, and that same legislature can repeal its exemption from taxation or regulate, if necessary, its rates by legislative action. As the governor of Tennessee courageously told the Military Affairs Committee, no individual or corporation is welcome in Alabama or Tennessee which opposes the Ford offer for Muscle Shoals. The Alabama Power Co., in its selfish defiance of the people's interest, has forfeited its right to the confidence, respect, and protection of the people of Alabama.

Your chamber of commerce being at the capitol, we appeal to you to lead in calling a mass meeting at Montgomery next Friday, February 24, calling representatives from all chambers of commerce throughout the State, together with representatives of the farmers of the State, labor organizations, and editors of the newspapers, to assemble at the capitol and assert the rights and wishes of the people of Alabama in this matter.

We further request that you enlist the assistance of your Montgomery newspapers in order that due publicity may be given to the proposed meeting, and that a full representative attendance may be counted on; be it further

Resolved, That the citizens of Huntsville and Madison County stand ready and willing to join with you and cooperate in every possible manner to the end that this meeting may be full and representative, and to this end we pledge you our active, moral, and financial support.

Resolutions adopted by Florence Post No. 11, of American Legion, Alabama Department, February 11, 1922.

To the Senators and Representatives in Congress:

These resolutions, made and adopted on this day by Florence Post No. 11, of the American Legion, Alabama Department, in body regularly assembled, witness that—

"Whereas, it has come to the attention of this body that the Ford Motor Co. and Henry Ford have offered to lease or purchase the Muscle Shoals Government property and all rights appertaining thereto from the United States Government for a sum which will be to the interest of the United States Government and the citizens thereof, and

"Whereas the completion of this stupendous project, including the construction of dams and operation of plants will be of manifold benefit to the entire country and will be the only project which will be instrumental in relieving the pitiful unemployment situation in this country to-day, and

"Whereas there has been submitted no other proposition which is of equal magnitude with the Ford project, and there is no known business which can furnish work to the vast army of the unemployed, and

"Whereas there exists at present in this great body of unemployed citizens of the United States a large percentage of ex-service men and by effective legislation awarding the prospective bidder for the Muscle Shoals properties, this distressful situation can be largely relieved, and

"Whereas the construction and operation of the Muscle Shoals project will furnish great opportunity for steady employment for a steady people and will increase as the work progresses, and

"Whereas it is the firm conviction of all lay citizens of the United States that Mr. Ford can and will manufacture nitrate and thereby furnish cheap fertilizer at Muscle Shoals to the farmers of this Nation and by this meet a most pressing demand and long-felt want of the agricultural industry, and

"Whereas it is doubted by only a few of the most skeptical that Mr. Ford will be unable to perfect his proposed plans, and on the other hand it is believed by the vast majority of the conscientious people of America that the practical energy and ability of Henry Ford will make this project a tremendous success: Be it therefore

"Resolved, That the Florence Post of the American Legion go on record as not only indorsing the acceptance by congressional action of this proposition offered, but also request immediate effective and conscientious legislation authorizing the acceptance by the Government of the offer of Henry Ford and finally:

"That a copy of these resolutions be published in the Florence Daily News and a copy be sent to the Hon. LAMAR JEFFERS, M. C., for proper presentation."

Hon. ED B. ALMON,
Washington, D. C.:

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Huntsville, Ala., believes that the greatest benefit will come to the largest number of citizens of United States through the operation of Muscle Shoals by Henry Ford. We therefore urge the immediate acceptance of his bid for this property of the people.

Hon. EDWARD B. ALMON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The Progressive Culture Club of 25 members, of Albany and Decatur, Ala., heartily indorse the acceptance of Mr. Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals. Your cooperation is desired.

MRS. J. W. CUNNINGHAM.

A resolution adopted by a mass meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, the Junior Chamber of Commerce, the civic organizations of the city of Huntsville, Ala., and the Farmers Bureau of Madison County, Ala., on February 16, 1922.

1. Resolved, That we, in mass meeting, believing that the Henry Ford offer to the Government for the acquisition of the Muscle Shoals and the accessory plants is the best offer, not only for the Government of the United States and the development of Muscle Shoals, but for the agricultural districts of the United States, and for the immediate relief of the unemployment situation throughout this country; that we as such organizations memorialize Congress to hasten favorable action for the consummation of the Ford offer;

2. Resolved, That we condemn the action of the Alabama Power Co. in threatening law suits against the Government and against Henry Ford in the event the Ford offer is accepted by Congress, and further bringing in at the last moment a proposition that apparently means an effort to defeat the Ford proposition with the sole purpose of perpetuating the Alabama Power Co.'s monopolistic control of the electrical power of the State of Alabama, all in violation of their promise to us that if they were allowed to use the power of the nitrate plant it would not in any way interfere with or affect Henry Ford's proposition, and the further promise to us that upon favorable action by Congress of the Henry Ford offer that the said Alabama Power Co. would turn over the above property within 30 days;

3. Resolved further, That it is the sense of this meeting, knowing the policies of the Alabama Power Co. as we do, that we do not believe said company will develop Muscle Shoals to the best interest of the country as contemplated by the engineers of the United States Government.

4. Resolved further, That recognizing the great importance and absolute necessity of nitrates in times of peace as well as in times of war, that we vigorously protest against our Government turning its only manufacturing plant of nitrates over to a corporation that is largely financed by foreign capitalists; and

5. Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States, the honorable Secretary of War, the Department of Agriculture, Senators O. W. UNDERWOOD and J. THOMAS HEFLIN, Representative E. B. ALMON, the governor of Alabama, and the National Farm Bureau.

Resolution of Athens Commercial Club, Athens, Ala., February 20, 1922.

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress of the United States various offers for the Muscle Shoals property at Muscle Shoals, Ala.; and

Whereas Henry Ford was invited by the Government to investigate the Shoals property and make an offer for the same; and

Whereas the offer of Henry Ford for said property is, in our opinion, one of immense value to the people of the United States and of vital importance to the Government thereof; and

Whereas Henry Ford has shown himself to be a man of broad ideals, of quick acumen, and thoroughly imbued with humanitarian thoughts; and

Whereas the offer of the Alabama Power Co. comes from a company composed largely of aliens, and is, in our opinion, submitted for selfish purposes, the acceptance of which would tend largely to retard the economical manufacture of fertilizer; and

Whereas it is the conviction of our entire organization that the best interest of the country will be served by the Government leasing the property to Henry Ford, this promising to the farmer the relief he has so long needed and will no doubt furnish power to the country at a cheaper rate, and will create a stimulus to the business interests of the country during this period of inactivity: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Athens Commercial Club, That the Congress of the United States be petitioned to reject immediately the offer of the Alabama Power Co., and that the offer of that great builder and friend of mankind, Henry Ford, be accepted immediately, to the end that the Muscle Shoals property be developed for all America. Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the chairman of the Military Committee of the House of Representatives, to the chairman of the Agricultural Committee of the Senate, to Senators UNDERWOOD and HEFLIN and Representative ALMON, of Alabama, and that copies be furnished to the daily press.

ALBANY CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Albany, Ala.

Be is resolved by the citizens of Albany and Decatur in mass convention assembled:

First. That we most heartily approve the proposition of Henry Ford for the lease of Muscle Shoals.

Second. That we protest against any disposition to delay consideration in order to give the Alabama Power Co. opportunity to further befog the issue by any counterproposition.

Third. That we request the immediate acceptance of Mr. Ford's offer as presented to Congress by Secretary Weeks.

Fourth. That we urge our Senators and the entire Alabama delegation in Congress to use their utmost endeavor to procure speedy approval and acceptance of Mr. Ford's offer as presented.

Fifth. That we request Hon. Thomas E. Kilby, Governor of Alabama, to go to Washington at the head of a delegation of representative citizens, to be appointed by him, for the purpose of urging immediate action in this momentous matter.

Sixth. That copies of these resolutions be sent to Governor Kilby, Senators UNDERWOOD and HEFLIN, and to each of the 10 Congressmen from Alabama with the urgent request that they be presented to the proper committees of the House and Senate at once.

Respectfully submitted.

EDWARD B. ALMON, M. C.,

The Culture Club, of Huntsville, Ala., earnestly petitions that Alabama's Representatives will do their utmost to have the Ford contract for Muscle Shoals accepted.

Mrs. W. L. WALL, Secretary.

Resolutions of Birmingham mass meeting, attended by 2,000 persons and 1,000 turned away for lack of room.

Whereas the great question before the American people to-day and the Congress of the United States is the proper utilization, for the benefit of all the people, of the great natural resources that have remained dormant for 100 years or more at Muscle Shoals, Ala.; and

Whereas Henry Ford, the mechanical wizard of the age, has made a proposal to the Government that meets with almost unanimous approval of the people of the entire Nation, and apparently a large number of Representatives in Congress and the Senate; and

Whereas Henry Ford's offer for the operation of the Muscle Shoals properties was made in good faith to the proper person as spokesman for the Government, Secretary of War Weeks, and after due consideration by the Secretary of War was submitted to Congress for its approval or rejection, and was apparently about to be ratified; and

Whereas selfish interests, such as the Fertilizer Trust, power monopolies, and others, supported by the gigantic monied powers of Wall Street, are opposed to the Government disposing of these resources in a way that would be of benefit to the people as a whole; and

Whereas a sequel to this great opposition is shown by the submission of a bid by the Alabama Power Co., a foreign corporation, that has never been of any material benefit to anyone other than the stockholders, who are citizens principally of foreign countries: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the citizens of the Birmingham district, in mass meeting assembled this the 19th day of February, 1922, go on record as being unalterably opposed to the Government of the United States considering the bid of the Alabama Power Co. And be it further

Resolved, That we, the citizens of this district, heartily indorse and unqualifiedly recommend that the proposal of Henry Ford be accepted and entered into by the Government for the operation of the Muscle Shoals properties. And be it further

Resolved, That these resolutions be given the widest publicity by furnishing same to the press, and that a committee of five be appointed by the chairman of this meeting to forward copies of these resolutions to our two Senators and our Representatives in Congress and the Committees of Congress before whom the proposals are now pending.

Resolutions introduced by Hon. C. W. Ashcraft and unanimously adopted by the Florence Chamber of Commerce, Florence Rotary Club, and Florence Exchange Club in joint meeting assembled Monday, February 20, 1922.

Citizens of Florence in mass meeting assembled take note of the following facts:

1. That the Alabama Power Co., doing business in this State, is owned principally by a foreign corporation with its official domicile in Canada (see official report of Graham investigting committee), that the majority of its stock is owned in Canada and England, and the policy of the company is therefore necessarily alien.

2. The only streams of Alabama offering opportunity for power developments of considerable proportions are the Coosa, Tallapoosa, and Little Rivers, and the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals.

3. That the Alabama Power Co. has bought up and preempted the entire water power sites and rights in perpetuity on the first three of these rivers, namely, the Coosa, Tallapoosa, and Little Rivers, and has entered upon a program of development by themselves and the prevention of all development by others, generally estimated to cover a period of 100 years. Although they have now been operating in Alabama almost 20 years they have completed only one unit in this program, and activities already displayed give no promise of completing within the 100 years the developments already preempted by them. It is therefore evident that their purpose in bidding for Muscle Shoals can not be based upon a desire either for opportunity for expansion or to faithfully serve the public, but their purpose must be found in their desire to entrench themselves and fasten upon the people of Alabama and surrounding States for all time the blight of their complete and oppressive monopoly. By inference they plead loudly against a 100-year lease to Henry Ford, but they propose to yield nothing of the strangle hold which they have acquired in perpetuity on every important power site in Alabama except Muscle Shoals.

4. In their activities, instead of developing navigation conjointly with power, their development prevents navigation in any continuous form. Their entire interest is to retard development of power and navigation, as in so doing they can maintain highest possible rates for power and delay responsibility for navigation. Their record is that they have procured municipal franchises for light and power wherever possible and retail current at exorbitant retail rates. They have not fostered or developed industry at any point they serve, and their reputation in the State is in line with the findings of the Graham congressional investigating committee in reference to their unpatriotic dealings with the Government during and following the war.

5. For the foregoing reasons we conclude that should Congress accept any proposal from Alabama Power Co. that would give them control over Muscle Shoals, it could only result in delaying developments in all other streams in Alabama over which they have already obtained control in perpetuity, or delaying development of Muscle Shoals.

6. Alabama Power Co. has no experience in nor plans for any activity outside of development and transmission of power, and therefore could not be expected to finance or develop power faster than development of industry by others would create demand for power.

7. Being a corporation owned by aliens, the citizens of the United States could not intrust their security and preparedness as a nation to the mercies of its policy makers, who are men whose allegiance is sworn to other countries.

8. On the other hand, Mr. Henry Ford has formulated a mammoth plan of industrial development that grips the imagination and thrills the enthusiasm of every American citizen, and seeks power for its operation. He is to the manner born; he has proven himself capable; he is regarded as fair in all his dealings. American citizens, wherever located, have confidence that he can and will succeed in the construction and operation of a great industrial section in such manner as to not only give employment to thousands now unemployed but also to awaken new and inspiring ideals in industrial life. He came promptly upon invitation of his Government, and not at the last hour, and made a reasonable proposal to immediately develop all the power at Muscle Shoals, not part of it, and to immediately employ the whole power developed in needed industry and to immediately make navigable the river for the benefit of up-river cities, as Decatur, Guntersville, Chattanooga, and Knoxville. He also proposes to ever hold the plants, processes, and personnel subject to the immediate call of the Government in case of war and to operate to full capacity for the benefit of the farmers in times of peace.

9. While legislation and court rulings in every quarter have conceded to railroads, banks—in fact, all forms of business and to organized labor—the right to a reasonable profit or to a reasonable wage, only Mr. Ford in his proposal for Muscle Shoals has offered one ameliorating item to the sad condition of the American farmer, to whom we must all look for both food and raiment.

10. The foregoing facts considered, we as citizens of Alabama and of the United States do solemnly resolve:

First. That the Alabama Power Co., whose owners are citizens of foreign countries, propose to buy the power plant at nitrate plant No. 2, and this nitrate plant is the only such plant within our borders and therefore constitutes the sole item of preparedness against war, so far as nitrates are concerned, and no matter what price the Alabama Power Co. might offer for this steam-power plant to separate it from the nitrate plant, the citizens of these United States would be worse than foolish to regard the offer otherwise than as coming from "Greeks bearing gifts."

Second. In view of their large holdings of other power sites in Alabama, which they neither develop nor allow others to develop, we denounce the bid of the Alabama Power Co. for Muscle Shoals as both unpatriotic and contrary to the best public interest.

Third. Henry Ford, a citizen of the United States in whom his fellow citizens believe without reservation, has in response to the call of his Government made to Congress a proposal which, if accepted, will immediately procure the full development of all the water power at Muscle Shoals, the complete navigation of the river, and the building, within our day and generation, of an industrial empire that taxes the imagination to comprehend.

Fourth. Therefore, all these things carefully considered, we urgently appeal to Congress to promptly accept the Ford proposal, and with the least possible delay put it into active effect.

Fifth. That copies of these resolutions be given to the press and sent to all Alabama Senators and Representatives in Congress.

FLORENCE, ALA., February 14, 1922.

Congressman ALMON,
Washington, D. C.:

It is the earnest desire of all Alabama club women that Mr. Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals be accepted. Your efforts for this cause will be greatly appreciated by us all.

TWENTIETH CENTURY CLUB OF FLORENCE, ALA.

HUNTSVILLE, ALA., February 2, 1922.

Hon. E. B. ALMON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The Kiwanis Club of Huntsville unanimously urge the ratification by Congress of the contract with Henry Ford for the Muscle Shoals nitrate plants and dams, and ask that you present their request to the House.

KIWANIS CLUB OF HUNTSVILLE.

DECATUR, ALA., February 18, 1922.

Hon. E. B. ALMON,
Member Congress, Washington, D. C.:

We believe the Muscle Shoals development, through acceptance of Ford's proposition, is of supreme importance to the entire country. We are expecting you and every Member Alabama delegation to put forth every possible effort and overcome all obstructing propositions. We stand unitedly for immediate and unqualified acceptance of Ford's offer.

MORGAN KIWANIS CLUB.

ALBANY, ALA., February 16, 1922.

Congressman ED. B. ALMON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We strongly urge acceptance Ford offer for Muscle Shoals. We oppose all other offers now being considered, believing they are actuated by selfish and monopolistic power interests. We recommend that the Government develop properly in the interest of all the people in the event the Ford offer is declined.

ALBANY CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

ALBANY-DECATUR TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION No. 803,
Albany, Ala.

At a called meeting of Albany-Decatur Typographical Union No. 803, February 27, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted indorsing the offer of Henry Ford for the leasing and operation of Muscle Shoals, Ala., and opposing the bid of the Alabama Power Co.:

"Whereas believing as we do that the offer of Henry Ford to take over and operate Muscle Shoals, Ala., for the United States Government offers a great opportunity for public service and having faith in his ability and good intentions, we, the members of Albany-Decatur Typographical Union No. 803, do hereby indorse the bid of Henry Ford: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, Albany-Decatur Typographical Union No. 803, go on record as favoring congressional acceptance of the offer of Mr. Ford: And be it further

"Resolved, That Albany-Decatur Typographical Union No. 803 go on record as opposing congressional acceptance of the offer for Muscle Shoals made by the Alabama Power Co., believing as we do that their offer does not have the same possibilities for development of our natural resources; for providing employment for the unemployed, or for the farmer, or for the benefit of the public generally; we further believing that their offer is actuated by selfish motives, while that of Mr. Ford is actuated by a desire to serve a great class of our people: And be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the State-wide mass meeting to be held at Montgomery, Ala., March 1, 1922, with a request that they be read, and that copies be mailed to the Alabama delegation in Congress."

Signed in behalf of Albany-Decatur Typographical Union No. 803, this the 27th day of February, 1922.

[SEAL.]

H. M. LAFLEY, President.
J. W. GROWDEN,
Secretary Treasurer.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., January 26, 1922.

Hon. E. V. ALMON,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

The following resolution was adopted at the executive board meeting of the Alabama Federation of Women's Clubs, January 25, Montgomery, Ala.:

"Whereas it is the belief of the executive board of the Alabama Federation of Women's Clubs that acceptance of the Ford offer for Muscle Shoals would result in greater productiveness for our farms, decrease of unemployment for our cities, and utilization of great natural resources that are at present going to waste: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we express to the Secretary of War and to our Representatives and Senators in Congress our earnest wish that his offer should be accepted."

Mrs. JOSEPH BREVARD JONES,
President Alabama Federation of Women's Clubs.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the subject discussed by me this afternoon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject discussed by him this afternoon. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, March 11, 1922.

(Legislative day of Thursday, March 9, 1922.)

The Senate met in open executive session at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

FOUR-POWER TREATY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole and in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty submitted by the President of the United States between the United States, the British Empire, France, and Japan, relating to their insular possessions and insular dominions in the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. UNDERWOOD obtained the floor.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. In view of the importance of the subject to be discussed by the Senator from Alabama, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator from South Carolina withhold that request, in order that I may report a bridge bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator from New York desires to report a bill, I will yield. If it is in order, I will withdraw my request until the bill referred to by him may be reported, but I suggest to the Senator that after the roll call he may make a request for unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gooding	McNary	Sheppard
Borah	Hale	Nelson	Shields
Brandegee	Harris	Newberry	Shortridge
Broussard	Harrison	Nicholson	Smith

Fletcher	Lodge	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
France	McCormick	Rawson	Watson, Ga.
Gerry	McKellar	Reed	Willis
Glass	McKinley	Robinson

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] are absent on business of the Senate in attendance upon the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] on account of a death in his family.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. TRAMMELL] is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from Alabama is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for a moment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will yield to the Senator if what he desires will not take any time.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE AT MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

Mr. CALDER. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] is very anxious to have considered the bill which I now desire to report as in legislative session.

From the Committee on Commerce I report favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3209) granting to the Northern Pacific Railway Co. the right to construct and maintain a bridge across the Mississippi River at Minneapolis, in the State of Minnesota, and I submit a report (No. 546) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Northern Pacific Railway Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Wisconsin, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation in the southwest quarter of section 24, township 29 north, range 24 west of the fourth principal meridian, at Minneapolis, in Hennepin County, State of Minnesota, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

As in legislative session,

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2897) to appropriate $5,000,000 for the purchase of seed grain and of feed to be supplied to farmers in the crop-failure areas of the United States, said amount to be expended under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the bill (H. R. 9597) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the President to provide housing for war needs," approved May 16, 1918, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. JONES of Washington presented a petition of sundry citizens of Riverside, Spokane, and Synarep, all in the State of Washington, praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the Government Grain Corporation so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Parent-Teacher Association of the Interlake Public School, of Seattle, Wash., praying for the enactment of legislation suppressing the traffic in narcotics, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAPPER presented telegrams in the nature of petitions from the Kiwanis Clubs of Dodge City, Fort Scott, Parsons, and Lawrence, all in the State of Kansas, praying for prompt ratification of the treaties prepared by the Conference on Limitation of Armament, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE presented resolutions adopted by the Merchants' Exchange of Oakland, Calif., favoring the proposed extension by the San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Railways of the "Key" system to Goat Island by a causeway bridge, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the California Forest Protective Association at its annual meeting, held in San Francisco, Calif., January 20, 1922, favoring the enactment of legislation for Federal and State cooperation for the protection and perpetuation of the forests of the United States, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Merced County (Calif.) Farm Bureau, favoring the enactment of legislation to foster the needs and requirements of agriculture and allied industries, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of St. Helena, Calif., favoring the enactment of legislation permitting the manufacture and sale of light wines and beers, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted by chapters of Daughters of the American Revolution, of Long Beach, Cabrillo, and Oakland, and of the United Christian Brotherhood of Protestant Churches, of Palo Alto, all in the State of California, favoring the enactment of legislation creating a department of education with a secretary in the President's Cabinet, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented petitions of sundry members of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of Stockton, Calif., praying for the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Whittier (Calif.) Quarterly Meeting of the Friends Church, favoring prompt ratification of the treaties prepared by the Conference on Limitation of Armament, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from W. U. Scott, of Eagleville, Calif., praying for inclusion in the pending tariff bill of adequate protective duties on cattle, hides, meat, and wool for making money available with low interest rates and long-time payments, and low freight rates on the railroads, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 250) authorizing the Crow Tribe of Indians residing in the State of Montana to submit claims to the Court of Claims (Rept. No. 547); and

A bill (S. 2563) to provide for the completion of the bridge across the Little Colorado River, near Leupp, Ariz. (Rept. No. 548).

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 249) for the relief of certain tribes and nations of Indians in the State of Montana (Rept. No. 549); and

A bill (S. 514) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, consider, and adjudicate claims which the Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 550).

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10193) extending time for allotments on the Crow Reservation; protecting certain members of the Five Civilized Tribes; relief of Indians occupying certain lands in Arizona, New Mexico, and California; issuing patents in certain cases; establishing a revolving fund on the Rosebud Reservation; memorial to Indians of the Rosebud Reservation killed in the World War; conferring authority on the Secretary of the Interior as to alienation in certain Indian allotments, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 551) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ODDIE:

A bill (S. 3272) granting an increase of pension to Carl Z. Work; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 3273) to authorize the acquisition of a site and the erection of a Federal building at Elko, Nev.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. WARREN:

A bill (S. 3274) to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain," approved February 25, 1920; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

AMENDMENT OF DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McNARY submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 to enable the United States Geographic Board to begin the preparation of a gazetteer or dictionary of place names in the United States and Alaska, to comprise the names of mountains, rivers, valleys, canyons, and other natural topographic and relief features, and also the names of all towns, cities, counties, and political divisions, intended to be proposed by him to the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

SERVICES FOR SOLDIER DEAD AT BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Mr. CALDER submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 20), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Whereas the United States transport Cambrai is expected to arrive in New York on or about March 30 bearing the last of the bodies of American soldiers from the fields of the World War: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a committee of five Senators, to be designated by the President of the Senate, and five Members of the House of Representatives, to be designated by the Speaker, is authorized to represent the Congress at such services and ceremonies as may be determined upon as proper and appropriate. One-half of the expenses of such committee shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half out of the contingent fund of the House.

ANGLO-JAPANESE TREATIES (S. DOC. NO. 163).

Mr. McCORMICK. I send to the desk copies of the three Anglo-Japanese treaties of alliance, and ask unanimous consent that they may be printed as a Senate document for the convenience of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RELIEF OF FARMERS IN CROP-FAILURE AREAS.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 2897.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2897) entitled "An act to appropriate $5,000,000 for the purchase of seed grain and of feed to be supplied to farmers in the crop-failure areas of the United States, said amount to be expended under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture," which were, on page 1, line 4, to strike out all after "farmers" down to and including "States" in line 6; on page 1, line 7, to strike out "of feed and"; on page 2, line 5, to strike out all after "for" where it occurs the first time, down to and including "stock" in line 6; on page 2, line 11, after "hereby" to insert: "authorized to be"; on page 2, line 13, strike out "$5,000,000" and to insert "$1,000,000"; on page 2, line 13, to strike out all after "available," down to and including "stock" in line 15, and insert: "and not more than $20,000 may be used, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, by the Secretary of Agriculture in the administration of this act"; and to amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize the appropriation of $1,000,000 for the purchase of seed grain to be supplied to farmers in the crop-failure areas of the United States, said amount to be expended under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. NORRIS. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. LADD, Mr. NORBECK, and Mr. KENDRICK conferees on the part of the Senate.

FOUR-POWER TREATY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole and in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty submitted by the President of the United States between the United States, the British Empire, France, and Japan, relating to their insular possessions and insular dominions in the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, when the Great War closed I gave my unconditional support to the treaty of Versailles, including the League of Nations. This was not because I believed that the treaty of Versailles was a perfect agreement or that the League of Nations would accomplish the impossible and carry us at this day and time into the millennium. I recognized, of course, that 27 nations only a few months removed from the battle fields of the world's greatest conflict, with all the passions and prejudices that must engulf human nature under these circumstances, could not rise to the high ideal of such a compact for the future peace of the world, and supported the treaty of Versailles because it was a step, in my judgment a long step, in the right direction; because it proposed other means of settling international disputes rather than the arbitrament of the sword. But my efforts did not succeed. The peace of Versailles was rejected by the Senate of the United States and the compact went into history without our concurrence or consent.

You may regard what I have just stated as not pertinent to the treaty now pending before the Senate. I say it though as an evidence of the frame of mind under which I approached the work of the recent Conference on the Limitation of Armament. My mind and heart led me to welcome every effort that was made to establish the peace of the world by international understanding and national agreements, rather than to fall back on the methods of the past and use the power of force to determine right and justice between the peoples of the world. Our national policy has been for peace since the beginning of our Government.

"Peace be to this house" is a salutation that came out of the desert centuries ago and has rung around the world because it carried with it the grace of kindness, safety, and protection to the dwellers within.

"Peace be to this Nation" may be substituted as an expression of the true sentiment of the men and women of America in regard to the determination of all international disputes that arise from time to time. In other words, it is safe to say that the American people in their international relations cherish in their hearts only the desire for friendly intercourse with the peoples of the world, and their great desire is that the future peace of the world may remain unbroken.

Let us look at the pages of history for the last hundred years; what international questions of momentous import have confronted us; what spectacular demonstrations have been made; what intemperate words have been spoken—and yet, except where we have been compelled to draw the sword in defense, as in the late war with Germany, we have been willing to adjust our differences by mutual understanding without a resort to arms. Recall what some of these questions are: The Oregon boundary, the Canadian fisheries, the Mexican border troubles, Venezuela, and many others. Any of them would have brought other nations into open conflict on the battle field, and were composed by us through discussion and mutual understanding.

The pending treaty, known as the four-power pact, represents a political settlement which undoubtedly was necessary before the treaty providing for the limitation of armaments was signed—that is, if the agreement to limit armaments was intended to mean more than a mere saving of money to the nations who had engaged in the wild race of building battleships.

As originally written, the four-power pact included the home islands of Japan, but the powers that signed the treaty subsequently yielded to the request of Japan and amended the original agreement so that the home islands of Japan were left out of the compact. Thus amended, the four-power pact provides for peace in the Pacific, guaranteed by mutual pledge of all the signatory powers to respect the integrity of the territory of each, and, in case of difference between the signatory nations, to confer. In case of difficulty between a signatory power and a nonsignatory nation, the four powers are to exchange notes as among the four, explaining the situation and looking to a common policy.

The terms of the treaty clearly call for a conference to consider difficulties that may arise, just as the Conference on the Limitation of Armament was called in Washington some months ago. It is a conference in which all of the four powers must agree and none of the powers will be bound in advance in any way. In other words, the agreements that are reached must be by the unanimous consent of all.

The governing clause of this treaty reads as follows:

> The high contracting parties agree, as between themselves, to respect their rights in relation to their insular possessions and insular dominions in the region of the Pacific Ocean.

The other clauses of the treaty are ancillary to the one that I have just read.

The opponents of the ratification of this treaty in the main appear to base their objections on two grounds, expressing positions that are opposed one to the other. It is asserted that the treaty in effect is an alliance between the four great powers for offensive and defensive purposes, or, at least, it is contended we will be drawn into that position in the end, and that we may be forced into war without our consent. I maintain that there is nothing in the treaty itself that justifies such an interpretation being placed upon it; that an agreement by a man or a nation to respect the rights of his neighbors is an obligation that relates to his own conduct and does not bind him to aggressive action because the other party to the contract, whose rights he has agreed to respect, becomes involved in difficulties.

But the question is not left here. The Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate have moved a reservation to the treaty, which will probably be accepted by the Senate, which reads as follows:

> The United States understands that under the statement in the preamble, or under the terms of this treaty, there is no commitment to armed force, no alliance, no obligation to join in any defense.

When the treaty is ratified with this understanding on the part of our Government, what ground is left to those who contend the treaty is an offensive and defensive alliance to stand upon? None that I can see.

On the other hand, it is asserted that as the treaty does not bind the high contracting parties to use force in carrying out its terms, and because they can not in the future be bound to any action until their free consent is first obtained, that it means nothing; that it is worse than useless to sign it, and therefore it should be defeated. To my mind, this argument is the last stand of the men of the old school, the school of thought that has been dominant in the government of this world for the last 4,000 years; the philosophy that believes that the world can and must be governed only by force, and that agreements to be binding must have the power of force behind them. If this were true it would destroy all the faith of the Christian nations of the world in their efforts to obtain peace by mutual understanding. For my part, I believe the world is moving forward, not drifting backward, and that the moral forces of the world can join together in bonds of mutual understanding, where respect for each other, love of justice, and the determination to do what is right will be the governing forces that will bind men and nations in the future. If this be true, then it means a great deal for four great nations to meet together and agree to respect each other's rights, and, in case of dispute, to counsel together in order to reach a common understanding, rather than to follow the backward paths of selfish diplomacy backed up by armies and navies in determining the future rights of the people of the world.

You may call the Versailles treaty an alliance. I voted for it because I believed that it was a sincere effort to secure the peace of the world by mutual understanding. The present treaty is not an alliance, but if it were an alliance intended to keep the peace through arbitration rather than through force I should support it. The dangers of past alliances have not been due to the fact that they were binding agreements between the powers that signed them, but because they contemplated the use of force for the benefit of the signatory powers. An alliance based on right and justice between nations, intended to aid in securing the peace of the world, would not be offensive to me. The first step in any effort to keep the peace among nations must be based upon a mutual agreement to respect the rights of others. The four-power pact does that. Its defeat, in my opinion, would be a backward step in the life of this Nation.

If the Senate of the United States ratifies this pending treaty, I am fully satisfied that there will disappear not only any real cause for war but there will no longer exist the opportunity for war that has threatened us in the past two decades, and peace will be established between the four great sea powers that now control the destinies of the Pacific Ocean.

There has been some criticism of this treaty because it has been limited in its terms to include only the United States of America, the British Empire, France, and Japan. The primary purpose of the compact is to maintain the peace, and for the next 10 years one would have a very vivid imagination to picture the peace being disturbed in the Orient by any other power. Germany is down and out at least for the next half century to come. All semblance of government is destroyed in Russia. Transportation facilities have almost perished with stable government; manufacture is dead, and only feeble efforts of agricultural production sustain the lives of a great people. This will not continue to exist forever. The day will come in the future when a stable government—recognizing human liberty, protection of property, the safety of the person, and national freedom—will again be established in Russia. And if it comes with the republican form of Government, I predict that there will be the rebirth of a great life in the history of nations. But nobody can dream that such a happening can occur in the next 10 years, the life of this treaty.

It may be said that no danger may threaten the powers to the compact because it has not been extended to the other powers, but that an injustice has been done to the smaller nations in the questions involved in far eastern possessions. The answer to that criticism is already at hand. Arrangements have been made by separate agreements between the signatory powers and Holland to extend to the Dutch East Indies possessions that same guaranty of possession and recognition of integrity which the four-power treaty bestows upon the four signatory nations. This is only an act of justice to Holland, whose interests on the material side in the regions of the Far East are as great as those of any of the powers who signed the pact, and what has been granted to Holland undoubtedly would be freely granted to any other power that desired it, having possessions in the region of the Pacific.

We therefore have, as a result of the four-power treaty and the extension of this treaty to the Dutch East Indies, a solid basis for peace between the United States, the British Empire, France, Japan, and the Netherlands. I do not see how anyone can conceive, during the life of this treaty, that any difference of opinion or conflict of interests between the signatory powers thereto can arise. It is not an agreement that leads to war. It is not an alliance for cooperation in time of war. It is not an alliance that draws the sword. But it is an agreement intended to lay aside the sword, to abandon force that all differences may be determined by national understanding and arbitration. This treaty is a regional agreement that has been made on honorable terms and satisfactory to all concerned; entered into, not with the compelling force exercised by the victor over the vanquished, but in the full tide of peace. It represents no infringement of the national rights of others, nor is it purchased by the alienation of any territory of any of the powers who have signed it. In my judgment it stands as a model regional agreement intended to secure peace by mutual understanding.

It must be borne in mind that the treaty does not relate to the mainland of Asia, but only relates to certain islands, defined in its terms, in the region of the Pacific Ocean. These include the Philippine Islands, which, in the event of war, have been a danger since we first possessed them. I agree that it is entirely possible, with a very large expenditure of money and the maintenance of a very large Navy, to so fortify and protect the Philippine Islands that they would be safe against the attack of another nation. But our Government, in the quarter of a century we have controlled them, has never built adequate fortifications on them for defense, nor has it fortified the approaches to the islands to the east of Hawaii, and it is undoubtedly the fixed determination of the American Congress to reduce the size of the Navy of the United States rather than to build one that would be adequate in time of war to defend our possessions in the Far East. I do not criticize this position of our countrymen, as I believe, and shall continue to maintain, that it is far better to secure the safety of our island possessions by agreements to keep the peace between nations rather than by the upbuilding of great armies and navies. Nevertheless, as long as conditions were allowed to remain in the Far East as they have existed for the past two decades, danger lurked behind every dispute, and the war clouds gathered when every national issue was raised. These conditions threatened our national security, for as long as our flag floats over the distant islands of the Pacific, national honor requires that we shall defend the people of these islands from attacks by other nations. I have yet to find the man informed on naval matters who does not admit that if we became involved in war with a first-class naval power, in the beginning it would be impossible for us to protect the Philippine Islands from successful attack by such a foe. You say in the end we would win them back. Yes; if I know my country and my countrymen, we would face destruction or in the end we would win them back. But after the end, when the battle flags were furled and the cannon ceased to roar, the page of blood we would find in American history would tell of the loss of many, many thousands of American boys and the American taxpayer would have to face a payment of many billions of dollars, the price of a war that is unnecessary, a war that should not come, a war that is a crime to dream about; when a mutual understanding and agreement to keep the peace, when the wish that arbitration may determine disputed issues rather than an appeal to the sword, can save all this and more.

This is the real issue involved in the four-power treaty: The issue of peace in the Orient, the issue of safety to our country, the issue of the lives of our young men, who should be saved from this danger for the upbuilding of a greater America.

We have signed agreements with many nations to arbitrate our differences, as is evidenced by the general peace treaties signed in 1914. When we have signed with one nation a treaty looking to the peaceful settlement of disputes, why should we hesitate to sign a similar agreement to maintain the peace with four?

A number of treaties were negotiated at the conference in Washington on the limitation of armaments, but this four-power treaty is the real treaty of peace. The naval treaty is remarkable, in that for the first time in the history of the world nations have really agreed to limit their armaments, but, nevertheless, their relative strength remains the same. The Chinese treaties establish a magna charta to protect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of China in the future. This one treaty stands for peace by mutual understanding and all that peace means.

When the Great War was on our young men were giving their lives daily to the maw of battle on the fields of France, when the Nation was strained to its utmost to produce war supplies and raise the revenue necessary to keep our forces in the field, when every man gave and every woman sacrificed, there was no issue but one, the winning of the war; yet, even then, deep in the heart, the great American heart, the call of peace remained. The mothers and fathers of the boys at the front, the producers in the fields and the factories, all said, we give and we give willingly for national safety and national life, but when this Great War is over there must be peace, the peace of understanding. That sentiment still lives in the heart of the American people. That sentiment will continue to live until the nations of the world are able to enter into an understanding that will solve all the differences that bring on wars, by an intellectual determination of what is right and what is just, rather than by the barbaric methods of the past, the power of force.

That sentiment, in my judgment, demands the ratification of this treaty.

Mr. President, I can not close without addressing myself to some of the problems which have been presented to the Senate, which I myself do not regard as the main issue. In fact, I do not regard them as an issue at all; but this matter is too grave, it is too momentous in the life of our country, to leave any question unanswered where an adequate answer is at hand.

Some of my able and eloquent colleagues have challenged this treaty on the ground of its origin. They have asked, Who made it; who was the real author of the four-power treaty? In my mind, that has nothing to do with the problem. It may be a side issue, one to divert attention from the main facts; but I take it that no Senator of the United States, realizing the grave duty which confronts him, would be prejudiced against doing what was right because some authorship which might be distasteful to him had written the treaty, nor would he vote for what he conceived to be wrong because he approved of the authorship. So I say the question as to whether this treaty came from the hands of the American delegates, came from the head of the British delegation, or was fostered by Japan, may, in the moment of criticism, attract our attention, but it is not a foundation on which the determination as to whether a Senator should accept or reject this treaty can be based.

As I stated the other day, in answer to a question of one of my colleagues, unfortunately for myself, at the critical hour of the making of this four-power treaty, I was called away from Washington on account of a death in my family, and therefore personally I did not have the same information in regard to the details which my colleagues had, through no fault of mine or theirs. But I regarded it as too important to allow the matter to go by with any chance of the decision of a vote in this Chamber being determined on an issue which is not material to the real merits of the questions involved.

I have in my hand a letter from a great American, a man who is entitled to the confidence of his fellow citizens regardless of their political alignment. I have in my hand a letter from the man who primarily wrote this treaty, and I ask Senators to listen to it. It is from the Secretary of State, the head of the American delegation at the conference which adopted the treaty. It is directed to me, bears date March 11, 1922, and it reads as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 11, 1922.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I understand that in the course of debate in the Senate upon the four-power treaty questions have been raised with respect to its authorship. It seems to be implied that in some way the American delegates have been imposed upon, or that they were induced to accept some plan cunningly contrived by others and opposed to our interests. Apart from the reflection upon the competency of the American delegates, such intimations betray a very poor and erroneous conception of the work in connection with the conference, no part of which—whether within or outside the conference meetings—was begun, prosecuted, or concluded in intrigue. Nothing could be further from the fact.

It is, of course, wholly inconsistent with the amenities of international intercourse that the informal and confidential suggestions and conversations incident to negotiations should be stated, but the Senate may be assured that a full disclosure of everything said or done in the course of the negotiations would reveal nothing derogatory to the part taken by any of the American delegates, or involve any consideration or acceptance of any position not entirely consistent with the traditional policies of this Government.

It should be remembered that the four-power treaty dealt with a subject—the Anglo-Japanese alliance—which, as an agreement between two powers competent to make and continue it, was not, and in the nature of things could not be, appropriately placed upon the conference agenda. Technically it was a matter outside the conference, although the conference furnished an excellent opportunity for conversations regarding it.

While I can not, of course, undertake to state what was proposed or suggested in confidence by any of the delegates, I think it entirely proper to say that the negotiations relating to the four-power treaty were conducted within limitations defined by the American Government. The views of this Government as to the importance of the termination of the Anglo-Japanese alliance had been communicated long before the conference met, and it had also been clearly stated that this Government could enter into no alliance or make any commitment to the use of arms, or which would impose any sort of obligation as to its decisions in future contingencies. It must deal with any exigency according to its constitutional methods. In preparation for the conference the American delegates reviewed the matter thoroughly, and the entire course of the negotiations in connection with the four-power treaty were in accord with these principles, and, as I have said, within the limits which we defined.

The treaty itself is very short and simple, and is perfectly clear. It requires no commentary. Its engagements are easily understood, and no ingenuity in argument or hostile criticism can add to them or make them other or greater than its unequivocal language sets forth. There are no secret notes or understandings.

In view of this, the question of authorship is unimportant. It was signed by four powers, whose delegates, respectively, adopted it, all having made various suggestions.

I ask especial attention to this—

I may say, however, with respect to the general course of negotiations that after assent had been given by Great Britain and Japan that France should be a party to the agreement—

Listen—

I prepared a draft of the treaty based upon the various suggestions which had been exchanged between the delegates. This draft was first submitted to Senator LODGE and Mr. Root, as you were then absent on account of the death of your mother. After the approval of the American delegates, who were here, the draft was submitted to the representatives of other powers, and became the subject of discussion between the heads of the delegations concerned, and with a few changes, which were approved by the American delegates, and which did not affect the spirit or substance of the proposed treaty, an agreement was reached. Immediately upon your return I went over the whole matter with you, and the proposed agreement received your approval. I should add that, in order to avoid any misunderstanding I prepared a memorandum to accompany the treaty with respect to its effect in relation to the mandated islands and reserving domestic questions.

At this stage, while it was not strictly a conference matter, in order to insure publicity at the earliest possible moment, the treaty, as thus agreed upon, and before it had been signed, was presented by Senator LODGE to the conference in plenary session and its import and limitations stated. His statement met with the acquiescence of all.

The treaty as thus drawn and notified was deemed to embrace the main islands of Japan. Later, in view of the sentiment, both in this country and Japan, it was deemed to be preferable to exclude these main islands, and a supplementary treaty was prepared to this effect, which designated the islands of Japan which it was to include.

There is not the slightest mystery about the treaty or basis for suspicion regarding it. It is a straightforward document which attains one of the most important objects the American Government has had in view, and is of the highest importance to the maintenance of friendly relations in the Far East upon a sound basis. As the President recently said, in his communication to the Senate, it is an essential part of the plan to create conditions in the Far East at once favorable to the maintenance of the policies we have long advocated and to an enduring peace.

In view of this, and in view of the relation of the treaty to the results of the conference, its failure would be nothing short of a national calamity.

I am, my dear Senator, faithfully, yours,

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

Mr. President, no man can challenge the word of the Secretary of State. Not only in this letter, but personally, he has given me the assurance that he himself carried the substance, the governing clauses, and the preamble of this treaty to the conference with the heads of the other delegations; that they came from him as the head of the American delegation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from Alabama yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is, then, a fact that the negotiations for the four-power treaty were designedly conducted in secret?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They had to be.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Because there was an existing treaty between Great Britain and Japan. If we had announced in the newspapers that we were desirous of having that treaty annulled before we made a treaty in reference to the limitation of naval armament, it might have affected conditions in the other countries; and no man charged with an important diplomatic mission would jeopardize a question of this kind by making in the open a declaration that might seriously affect the negotiations in the countries which had to join with his country in the agreement.

Mr. ROBINSON. But the negotiations did not occur in the countries that joined in the agreement. The Senator, I assume, refers to the ratification or approval of the treaties in the different countries?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am speaking primarily of the agreement by Great Britain and Japan to annul and abolish the Anglo-Japanese alliance.

Mr. ROBINSON. There was no secrecy at that time in connection with the Anglo-Japanese alliance. Everybody knew of its existence and knew its terms.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly. But there was not an announcement that it would be annulled, and there could not be until the two powers reached an agreement, and it would have been very foolish on the part of our delegation or our Government to make such an announcement.

Mr. ROBINSON. It can not be annulled now until Great Britain and Japan ratify this treaty.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly; but their delegations, their accredited representatives, have now agreed to the annulment. At that time their Governments had not consented to such a course.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator mean to say it was necessary to maintain secrecy in regard to the negotiation of this treaty in order to prevent public sentiment in Japan and in Great Britain from becoming so hostile to the proposal that the treaty could not be successfully negotiated?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all.

Mr. ROBINSON. What, then, was the purpose of withholding——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I——

Mr. ROBINSON. Just a moment, until I finish the question. What was the purpose of withholding the information from the people of Japan and from the people of Great Britain that a four-power pact was to be substituted for the two-power pact?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. So that that information might be announced by their own delegates and their own Governments to those people and not come through us.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I suggest that the premier of Great Britain announced in the House of Commons a month before the English delegation came to this country that the way to dispose of the Anglo-Japanese alliance was to extend the alliance so as to include the United States?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly; but that was an announcement by one of the powers.

Mr. BORAH. It was before the conference was called.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That was an announcement by one of the powers about their own business.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; but that announcement was made before the Washington conference was called.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think that everybody will recognize that if the delegates of other nations should meet here to consider a matter which primarily concerned the United States, as the question of the Anglo-Japanese alliance primarily concerned Japan and Great Britain, it would have been very unwise and very undiplomatic for the Japanese delegation or the English delegation to have made an announcement about our affairs instead of allowing such an announcement to come from an American source.

Mr. ROBINSON. What does the Senator from Alabama have to say about the American delegation making the announcement to the American people?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It did not concern the American people until the agreement was reached that the Anglo-Japanese alliance should be canceled; and when that was done the announcement was made to the American people.

Mr. ROBINSON. But it was well understood by the delegates from the beginning, even prior to the meeting of the Washington conference, that one of the principal subject matters to be considered by it actually was to be the recision of the Anglo-Japanese alliance and the substitution for it of something that would satisfy Japan and Great Britain. Is not that true?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I do not think that is entirely true.

Mr. ROBINSON. What part of it does the Senator from Alabama think is true?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think this question gradually developed; the situation did not stand in all respects in the light which the Senator states. I think before the conference met there was hardly a newspaper in the United States which, either in its news or editorial columns, did not reflect the sentiment that if we were going to enter into a treaty scrapping our Navy in good faith the Anglo-Japanese alliance should be canceled or annulled by the powers that made it; but I think that is as far as the sentiment went.

It may have been expressed otherwise at that time; it may have been stated that there must be some other agreement to take its place; but if so, I did not see the statement. I know that the other sentiment existed, but my first information and the first discussion, so far as I was concerned, of the proposal that something else must take the place of the Anglo-Japanese alliance came after the conference was called and after the American delegation met. Then we received the information that it was the desire of the Governments of Great Britain and Japan, if that alliance were annulled that something else should take its place. That is my understanding of it. Something different may have appeared in some of the newspapers or at some time prior; but if so, I did not know of it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield to a further question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator think that if it had been announced that the Anglo-Japanese alliance was to be rescinded through the formation of another alliance to which the United States should become a party, the American people would have approved of that course?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is what this treaty does. I will say to the Senator—he may not agree with me, but I make no mistake about it—that outside of some certain factions in this country the American people approve of this treaty, because it means peace.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator has not answered the question which I asked him.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well?

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask the Senator from Alabama if the American people had understood that the Anglo-Japanese alliance was to be rescinded or nullified by the substitution of a four-power alliance, to which the American Government should become a party, does he believe that under those circumstances the American people would have approved of the negotiation of the four-power treaty?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I thought I had answered the Senator's questions by saying that I believe the American people approve of that pact, which certainly answers the question; but if he wishes me to go further I will say that if the American people had known during the negotiation that we were going to get rid of a menace in the Pacific Ocean in the form of the Anglo-Japanese pact by making this agreement to keep the peace, I believe the great American people would have then approved it just as they approve it now.

Mr. ROBINSON. My stupidity has prevented me from communicating to the Senator from Alabama the true meaning of my question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am sorry that I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am going to try to make it clear to him. The Senator has asserted that the American people favor the ratification of this pact?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In my judgment they undoubtedly do.

Mr. ROBINSON. That evades the question as to whether the American people understand the nature of this pact.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think——

Mr. ROBINSON. Just a moment, if the Senator will indulge me.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. The contention of the proponents of the treaty is that it is not an alliance, that it is a mere agreement for an amicable conference. That idea has been carried in the newspapers and magazines and in resolutions of commercial and political organizations until that is the view and construction which has been placed before the American people concerning this pact. That, however, does not take into consideration the real question which those of us who are doubtful about the advisability of ratifying the treaty present, and that is what is the nature of the treaty? Is it a mere agreement to confer, or is it in fact a quadruple alliance, substituted for the Anglo-Japanese alliance and binding the United States and France to Great Britain and Japan as Great Britain and Japan were bound together under the Anglo-Japanese alliance? If it appears that such is the nature of the instrument, does the Senator from Alabama think that the American people would approve it?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think this is an alliance, and I think the American people know it is not an alliance; but, as I have said in my speech, I believe that if the American people thought it was an alliance to keep the peace and avoid the danger that we have been threatened with for the last quarter of a century, holding, as we do, the Philippines without proper protection, the American people would approve of a course that canceled a military alliance against us for a peaceful alliance in our favor. However, I do not admit at all that it is an alliance.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will allow me for a moment, I will say——

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. If it is not an alliance, what is it in international law?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is a grave difference between a conference and an alliance. I am sure the Senator recognizes that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. An agreement to hold a conference and an alliance are two different propositions. An alliance carries with it the understanding between nations, no matter what it is called, that in the happening of certain events those nations shall be bound to follow a certain course, usually a resort to arms, an obligation to defend each other. An alliance is a binding agreement with respect to a subject matter where the determination is reached in the beginning that that subject matter shall be treated in a certain way. An agreement to hold a conference is not an obligation that binds the signatory powers as to what shall be done when they meet at the conference table.

Mr. ROBINSON. Now, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And this agreement does not bind anybody. It leaves all four of these nations free to act when they take their seats at the conference table. As I have said, it is similar to the conference that took place in Washington. Unanimous consent of all must be obtained before action can take place.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will yield in just a moment. I trust the representatives of the American people should they go to a conference either now or hereafter will protect the rights of the American people within constitutional lines. I now yield to the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator has just stated that unanimous consent is required to any conclusion by the conference which may be convened under the treaty.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. How does the Senator arrive at that conclusion?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Because the wording of the clause, as recognized in international law by every writer of international law, is the wording of a conference and not the wording of an alliance.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator is aware, of course, that the Senate put an entirely different construction on a provision in another treaty, somewhat analogous to this, and insisted that there should be written into the face of the treaty a provision that all decisions should be unanimous.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator refers to the treaty of Versailles?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, the Senator and myself did not occupy that attitude.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is perfectly true.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not ashamed of the attitude I then occupied.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; and I am proud of it. Now, let me ask the Senator from Alabama this question: In view of the construction which the Senate placed on that treaty, contrary to the construction which he and I placed upon it, has the Senator from Alabama any objection to saying in this treaty, as was said on the face of the Versailles treaty, that all decisions or conclusions shall be unanimous?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think it is necessary. I will tell the Senator candidly that I regret that these treaties should be changed. I think the position which this Government occupies before the people of the world because of its rejection of the Versailles treaty is most unfortunate. There is a doubt in the minds of other great governments as to whether the United States of America can make an agreement and be bound by it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just let me finish, and I will then yield. But I feel the treaty is of so great importance to my country and to the future peace of my country that I will not stand in the way of its ratification because somebody may want to offer a reservation which does not destroy its terms. I think the reservation offered by the Senator himself the other day would destroy its terms; but here is a reservation which has been proposed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, reading as follows:

> The United States understands that under the statement in the preamble or under the terms of this treaty there is no commitment to armed force, no alliance, no obligation to join in any defense.

In order that our Government may keep faith and also that the treaty may be ratified, I am willing to vote for that reservation; and when it says that our understanding of the treaty is that it involves no alliance, of course that carries the meaning that everything that may be determined shall be determined by unanimous consent.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will yield further, our understanding can not control the understanding of the other nations.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; but, as the Senator well knows, it controls our attitude at the table, and if we ratify with the understanding that this is not an alliance, then the nations that join in the treaty if they ratify it know that we come to the table with the understanding that we are not bound until we give our consent after we get to the table, and that implies unanimous consent.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator signs an instrument which by its terms constitutes a contract, can he change the nature of the instrument and diminish his liability by saying "this is not a contract"?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think so in the court of law, if——

Mr. ROBINSON. Well——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Wait a minute; let me answer the question—if it was subsequently signed; but I think any understanding expressed in the contract at the time of the signature would be a part of the contract. Undoubtedly in the high courts of international law reservations defining the terms under which a nation accepts an agreement are a part of that agreement so far as that nation is concerned. There can be no question about that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the language of the contract or compact or alliance or agreement or conference, or whatever it may be termed, actually creates an alliance, its nature can not be changed by a reservation adopted by one party, can it?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, it is changed so far as that party is concerned undoubtedly, and really changed so far as the others are concerned when they accept it on those terms, just as much as if it was written in the contract; but there can be no doubt whatever that this is only an agreement in a case of a difficulty arising to consult in order to try to maintain peace. I want the Senator to go back with me eight years ago this coming summer, and I should like to ask him to recall what Lord Grey said in August of 1914, when he had struggled for weeks as no man in history had ever struggled before to try to prevent the catastrophe of the Great War. When the ax fell, when the life of the nations became at stake, he said:

> If there had only been a machinery by which those nations could have consulted together, the Great War would have been avoided.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will.

Mr. ROBINSON. I might ask the Senator to come forward eight years with me to the present time, and consider the statement made by Lord Grey upon the return of Mr. Balfour to England after the negotiation of this treaty; but I do not want to——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The British people gave every honor to Balfour, and he deserved it; and I regret that our people do not recognize that peace means more to them than anything else, as the people of Great Britain did.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think the reason why Great Britain gave so much honor to Mr. Balfour was that they concluded that he had been able to substitute for the very unpopular two-power alliance a four-power alliance which committed the United States and France to substantially the same principles that were involved in the two-power alliance; but, if the Senator will permit me to pursue an inquiry as to one statement that he made some moments ago; he defined in general terms an alliance. I shall not undertake to give a general definition of the term "alliance," but I want to point out to the Senator that under his own definition, as I understood it, this treaty, in its second article, constitutes a defensive alliance. The Senator is more familiar with the language than I——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all.

Mr. ROBINSON. And I am somewhat embarrassed in asking him to place a construction on a certain provision in the treaty after he has made that general declaration; but he is kind enough to yield, and I am going to ask him if he does not think that in addition to conferring there is an obligation upon each member to arrive at a definite conclusion?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Without meaning to reflect on my friend at all, I think if it were not for the heat of this debate he would recognize that that statement is absurd on its face—to say that the obligation is to confer, but that when we enter into the conference we are required to arrive at a definite result.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if there is any heat in this debate, either internal or external, I am unable to feel it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should say the activity of the debate.

Mr. ROBINSON. But now let me point out to the Senator that the first proposal is:

If the said rights are threatened by the aggressive action of any other power—

That means an act of war, does it not?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It might be an act of war, or it might be something else.

Mr. ROBINSON. What else might it be?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It might be approaching war.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; it means an act which indicates a purpose to make war. That is the condition under which the conference is called.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It might be somebody else taking possession of a piece of property.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is an act of war, of course.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not necessarily.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator knows that if one nation seizes a peace of property owned by another that constitutes an act of war under international law, and has done so for all the years since international law was first recognized.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; it may justify war.

Mr. ROBINSON. It violates sovereignty and constitutes an act of aggression or an act of war.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. An act of aggression, but not an act of war.

Mr. ROBINSON. The first obligation is to—Communicate with one another fully and frankly—

That is in the language of the Anglo-Japanese alliance—for a definite purpose. Take the Senator's own definition of an alliance: Here is a definite purpose stated:

In order to arrive at an understanding.

That is the object of the conference. What is the purpose of the understanding?

As to the most efficient measures to be taken.

That is predicated upon the proposition that one of the powers party to this agreement is being attacked by another power, and that it is necessary to repel that attack. The United States and the other parties to the treaty then would enter into the conference for the purpose of determining how that attack should be repelled; and the agreement goes further. It provides that the conference shall determine whether the measures of repulsion shall be taken jointly or separately. The first question to be determined in a conference of that nature will be: "By what means, what agencies, what process, shall we four powers repel the aggression against one of us?"

The inevitable answer, of course, will be war. No one would think of proceeding in any other manner when an act of war had already been committed against one of the parties to the compact. It means the employment of force. Then the conference not only determines the most efficient measures to be taken, but it decides the question whether the four parties shall proceed jointly or separately. It provides who shall do it.

Now, listen: Suppose that in the years to come——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, I am glad to yield to my friend from Arkansas; but he made this same speech the other day, and I want to go on, so I will ask him not to go too far in his speech now.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, the Senator controls the time——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not want to cut the Senator off.

Mr. ROBINSON. But I wanted to ask the Senator to consider a specific proposition or illustration. However, the Senator did not answer Wednesday, the Senator could not answer then, who wrote the four-power treaty. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] could not answer then. The Secretary of State refused to answer; but after a prolonged consideration of the matter, and after having told the newspaper men that it was nobody's business who wrote it, he submits to the Senate through the Senator from Alabama a long statement saying that he wrote the first draft of the treaty upon the suggestions of the various delegates, after Japan had agreed that France might become a party.

Mr. REED. Which is purely ex parte, with no chance to cross-examine.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Missouri when I have answered this question. I shall be delighted to do it, but I want to answer first the speech of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator stopped me before I finished my question and I was directed to another point. It was rather a long question, and somewhat argumentative in nature.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator is getting off of it right now, and I should like to have it completed.

Mr. ROBINSON. All right. The first duty is to communicate fully and frankly with one another. The second is to arrive at an understanding as to the most efficient measure by which aggression shall be repelled, and the last is to determine whether they shall all act together or whether one of them shall do it alone.

If the nation assailed contends that it is not able to repel the attack, by reason of the strength of the enemy—either the enemy alone, or in combination with allies—what is the logical consequence of a decision as to what constitute the most efficient measures? That two or more of them shall join their forces, their navy and their army, with the navy and the army of the power attacked. Of course, Mr. President, no treaty can obligate Congress to declare war. It would be necessary under this instrument, just as it would have been necessary under the League of Nations covenant, before this Government can be committed theoretically to war, that the Congress should vote a declaration of war. Nevertheless, the terms of the agreement are to give to each of these four powers in the Pacific the strength of all before the rest of the world.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is the Senator through, now?

Mr. ROBINSON. I will pause for a while. I thank the Senator.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, if the Senator will be just as kind to me as I have been to him, I shall try to answer. I wanted him to state his case, and I shall be glad to have an opportunity to answer.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have one or two more questions.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I want to say, first, that in part of this long question, before the Senator got to the last part of his argument, he asked something in reference to what he called the secrecy of this treaty. There was no secrecy about it. There were certain things that could not be said until the proper time came to say them, and then they were said. Of course, no man can blame me because the other day I could not answer the Senator's question when I was unavoidably out of the city.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, certainly not, Mr. President. I hope the Senator understands that I had no such purpose.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I realize that the Senator did not mean that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But I have laid before the Senate the unquestioned statement of the man who did make the treaty that he made it and he wrote it.

The Senator's first assertion was that it was an offense against this treaty because it might have been considered in secrecy. I do not think it was. I do not think there was ever a conference that met in the history of the world that was more open and more free from that criticism than the late conference that met in Washington. But even if the treaty had been considered in the depths of secrecy, that is no argument against the treaty if you approve of its terms; and I say that the best compliment that has been paid to the real merits of the treaty pending before the Senate is that a Senator of the recognized ability and force of the Senator from Arkansas is driven away from the merits of the treaty on its face to try first to find an opportunity to attack it because it was thought by somebody that it was made by some one else than an American delegate; and then because it was thought to have been made in secrecy. It merely shows the straits to which the opponents of this treaty are driven in their argument.

As to whether or not the second article of the treaty makes this an alliance, here is the way it reads. I will read it all into the RECORD:

If the said rights—

Senators understand that in the first article we have contracted to respect—not to guarantee, not to fight for, but to respect—the rights of the others. The second article says:

If the said rights are threatened by the aggressive action of any other power, the high contracting parties shall communicate with one another fully and frankly in order to arrive at an understanding as to the most efficient measure to be taken, jointly or separately, to meet the exigencies of the particular situation.

The Senator says that makes this treaty an alliance. If it were an alliance it would not have said:

The parties shall communicate with one another fully and frankly in order to arrive at an understanding.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just one minute. It would have said that the parties shall meet to arrive at an understanding as to what shall be done.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why, with the Senator's permission, the language in that particular is identical with that of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, which no one doubts was a military alliance. That is the language of diplomacy. It is not the language the Senator from Alabama would use, to be sure.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no; wait a minute. We must take into consideration also the other parts of the treaty. The Anglo-Japanese alliance in its terms is an offensive and defensive alliance. It says so. We can not construe section 2 of this treaty by itself. We must construe it in connection with section 1, as I said.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will permit me, I am referring now to the Senator's point that if it had constituted an alliance it would have been necessary to command a meeting rather than to provide for full and frank communication; and I point out to him the fact that in an instrument admitted and known by all the world to have been an alliance the same language is used in that particular that is employed in this document, and it is the language that is always used in diplomacy. The Senator never knew an alliance to exist in all the history of time that did not employ words indicating a purpose to promote peace.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am sorry my friend will not give me the same chance that I gave him.

Mr. ROBINSON. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I must finish my sentences.

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I started out in the beginning to say that section 2 can not be considered by itself. Perhaps I did not speak loudly enough, but I called the attention of the Senate to what was in section 1. That is, there is not an agreement to fight; there is not an offensive and defensive alliance. That section is an agreement to respect each other's rights; and then section 2 calls for a conference in reference to the question if somebody else violates those rights.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I shall be glad to yield, but I can not possibly make an argument unless I am allowed to finish my sentences. I will yield to the Senator in just a moment.

A conference does not necessarily mean war. When nations meet and make representations to other nations, sometimes it produces war and sometimes it avoids war. When Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, represented to Great Britain that they were violating the Monroe doctrine in reference to Venezuela, the country became alarmed lest it might mean war, but it did not. If these four powers met within the next 10 years and represented to any other nation on earth that it was violating the terms of an agreement, I think it would not mean war; but that does not answer the question of the Senator as to what would happen. I say that there are no binding words within the terms of this pact to bind the signatory powers to any definite action of any kind when they meet at the table. The only answer to that is that we may be afraid to send our ambassadors to confer; but under our Constitution there is always a check on the power of an ambassador, and that is the Constitution of the United States, which makes the final decision rest in the Congress of the United States.

Now I yield to the Senator from Georgia. I am sorry I have kept him waiting.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I ask the Senator if the first clause does not refer entirely to misunderstandings between the high contracting parties to this treaty?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. And if the second does not relate entirely and exclusively to what the four contracting parties shall do in case either one of them is menaced by an outsider?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly; but the connection between the two articles is the word "rights." The first clause relates to the rights of the high contracting parties; that is, to their territorial integrity, their national rights, and that attitude of the treaty is carried into the second clause, because the first line says, "If said rights are threatened," referring back to the rights in the first clause. "Said rights" means their national rights, making the second clause ancillary to the first clause, and related entirely to it.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. But in the Yap treaty we consent to the mandates given to Great Britain and Japan over the islands in the Pacific Ocean. Some say there are 25,000 of those islands.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not to Great Britain.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. To both Great Britain and Japan.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not in the Yap treaty. I know the Senator has unintentionally made a mistake. I have read that treaty very fully. The islands mandated to Great Britain were not covered in the Yap treaty at all. It referred only to the islands of Japan.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. We would consent to her mandatory authority over those islands.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. To Japan's authority.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. If any outside party threatened her mandate in those islands, then we are as much bound to adopt efficient means as we are to confer.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no; we are only bound to confer, and after a conference we will determine what means shall be adopted; but the only obligation is to confer.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Of course, Congress would have to be consulted.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Surely.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. We might feel in honor bound to ratify what our representatives did.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Our representatives at that conference would go there unbound, as I went to the Washington conference unbound, except so far as my Government had instructed me.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I have another question, if the Senator will be so good as to yield further.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly; I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. For some days I have been puzzling my head to find out what our relations would be toward the League of Nations if we ratified this treaty, Japan, Great Britain, and France being members of that league, and those members of the league being in honor bound and legally bound to submit all disputes to the league. Those members of the League of Nations agree to have a conference and a settlement and an adjustment with a nonmember nation. In what position will that leave us toward the League of Nations and in what position will it leave those member nations who have violated their contract with the League of Nations?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not prepared to say whether they have violated their contract with the league or not. That is a part of the argument I have not concerned myself about, because we are not a member of the league. I suppose the three nations which signed this treaty—honorable nations represented by honorable men—reached the conclusion that they were in no way violating their contract in reference to the league or they would not have signed it. But if they submit a question in reference to these mandated islands to the League of Nations, that avoids all difficulties so far as we are concerned, because the league mandated the islands to them and the league would protect them in the mandate. Of course, my viewpoint about the Yap treaty, as the Senator knows, is different from that of some of my brethren. I think we surrendered all our rights in reference to those mandated islands when we refused to take our seat at the table in the League of Nations, but the Senator and others differ with me about that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to say to the Senator that I am disposed to be very much in accord with him concerning his construction of article 2 of the treaty. I have not been able to convince myself that we are under any kind of an obligation under article 2 to arrive at any conclusion nor that that conclusion should be in any case that we should exercise force to carry out the thing arrived at. That is not what troubles me about article 2. The Senator has not addressed himself to the matter which does concern me with respect to it, and I should like to have his views about it. It provides that—

If the said rights are threatened by the aggressive action of any other power, the high contracting parties shall communicate—

And so forth.

Of course, those who were drawing this treaty were practical people, and they must have had in mind some particular outside powers which might pursue an aggressive course toward one of the signatories.

Let us take Japan, for instance. From what source outside of the four signatory powers was it supposed that Japan might be the object of aggressive action? China, for instance? Russia, for instance?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I stated in the opening part of my remarks, I was not present when this particular treaty was made; I was not in consultation, because of a death in my family, when the consultation took place in reference to the terms. I got back here after they were made up. But in the first part of my remarks I stated that I did not know of any power which could possibly have any connection with the Orient in the next 10 years which could affect any decision determined by these four powers. I know of none.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then article 2 means nothing. Of course, we can not accept that view, the Senator will understand. It was put in there for some reason.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with the Senator about that, but I must be equally candid with the Senator. I was not present when the discussions took place for the reason I have given; therefore I can not speak of what happened, but when I review in my mind the powers of the earth which might effectively interfere in matters relating to the islands of the Pacific Ocean within the next 10 years, and call them by name, outside of the four named in this treaty I can not name a power which could effectively interfere with the determination of these four powers or would attempt to do so.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then we must conclude that it does not have any significance at all and that there is no condition which can be foreseen which will bring it into operation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will not say that, because I was not present at the discussion, as the Senator knows, and I can not give the reason of the men who put it in when I was not there. I leave that for others to give light where I can not; but the Senator can go with me and call the roll of nations. Does he think that within 10 years Russia will show sufficient force as to in any way interfere with the control of the present territorial rights of these four powers in the islands of the Pacific? Could Germany? Could Italy? Could China? My imagination is not vivid enough for me to conceive of it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If I agree with the Senator about that, I am still forced to the conclusion that somebody must have had some nations in mind as the aggressive nation, or they would not have insisted upon this article going into the treaty.

Let me say to the Senator that I have reflected upon the matter and I can not conceive of any nation outside of the signatory powers which, within the realm of probability, could attack the United States in her possessions. Neither can I conceive of any that would attack the possessions of France, and I can hardly think it likely that any nation would make war upon Great Britain affecting her island possessions, although they might. But, of course, we can not escape the conclusion that there is a possibility that Japan may be engaged in war. Some demonstration may be made against her by either China or Russia, and what is the use of talking about the matter? Anybody who reflects upon the situation must know that article 2 is directed against just exactly that situation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not agree with the Senator about that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am forced to that conclusion. I am forced to the conclusion by the conditions to which he adverts. If there are any powers which might be likely to engage in aggressive action against either Japan or Great Britain, it must be one or the other or both of these powers, either singly or unitedly, having some additional aid, or having none.

Let us assume that for some reason or other, for instance, Japan does not comply with the terms of the treaty with respect to Shantung, and China is rehabilitated and makes some demonstration against Japan. A conference is then held, in which the United States sits with Great Britain, France, and Japan, and China is on the outside.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That could not be, because the treaty does not relate to such a situation. I call the Senator's attention to that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Why does it not?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Because Shantung is not included within the treaty.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not mean that the dispute would be about Shantung. That merely gives rise to the controversy, and China makes some demonstration, or is likely to make some demonstration, against one of the island dominions or possessions of Japan.

Mr. ROBINSON. She tries to take back Formosa, for instance.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; we may assume that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think anybody engaged in making this treaty dreamt of China having a navy within the next 10 years which could come to sea and jeopardize Formosa or any of the island possessions of Japan.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, if we reason that way, we must reason that article 2 was put into this treaty with no purpose whatever, to meet no condition which anyone could possibly foresee.

Let us inquire, then, about Russia. Let us assume that Russia may conclude that the southern end of Sakhalin was unjustly wrested from her by Japan. The Senator will remember that France, within 10 years after her revolution, when conditions were at least as bad as they are in Russia to-day, defied all Europe. What is the reason for reaching the conclusion that Russia may not within 10 years get into a controversy with Japan touching the island of Sakhalin? In that event we would sit in a conference with Japan, Great Britain, and France, and Russia would be on the outside.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, the Senator is theorizing, and I can only theorize in reply. That is all that can be done when we get into the realm of theory.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will allow me to answer the Senator from Montana, I will then yield to him. When you come down to the theory, of course, we know that the mainland of Japan, the home islands of Japan, are no longer included in this treaty, provided the supplemental treaty is adopted, which I presume will be the case if the pending treaty is adopted. I am arguing it from that standpoint. We know that the mainland of Asia is not involved in this treaty, and that the only contest which Russia could possibly have in relation to this treaty at all would be over the southern half of the island of Sakhalin. If we are going to indulge in theories, the southern half of Sakhalin being within the terms of the pact, and the main islands of Japan, which are nearer to Vladivostok than is Sakhalin, being outside of the pact—if you can dream such a dream as that Russia could come back within 10 years—I think it is entirely within theoretical lines not to charge her with being likely to attack the southern half of Sakhalin. If she were going to sea to make an attack, she would attack one of the home islands of Japan.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Just one more question. In view of the statement now made by the Senator, would he object to an amendment striking out article 2?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would, and I will state why. So far as we are concerned, I do not think article 2 means anything. When the Senator says article 2 may affect any of the nations party to this treaty under such conditions, I can not imagine it, because I can not possibly imagine that Russia will come back to life within the next 10 years.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I promised to yield to the Senator from Connecticut when I am through with my colloquy with the Senator from Montana.

I can not imagine that Russia could rebuild her railroads, that she could reorganize her national life, that she could reorganize her finances, that she could build a navy within 10 years, the life of this treaty. I think if Senators should vote to reject this treaty on a theory of that kind it would mean that they would be going into the realm of conjecture to such an extent that if that were made the standard we could never ratify any treaty in the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I promised to yield to the Senator from Connecticut, and I will yield to the Senator from Arkansas after I have yielded to that Senator.

You have left the solid facts, the substance, and the conditions of the world entirely behind you and waded out into the realm of speculation, not justified by an existing fact. Now I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but I want to call attention to the fact that most of the questions which have been asked the Senator as to how article 2 would practically operate under various contingencies in the future have been based upon the supposition that the aggressive action which might take place would be a military or naval attack upon the islands of one of the high contracting parties. I suggest to the Senator that the language employed in article 2 is broad enough, in my opinion, to cover other things besides physical attacks by force, by navies, upon the islands of the contracting parties, because, as the Senator well knows, the language is:

If the said rights are threatened by the aggressive action of any other power.

In article 1 the said rights are defined to be "their rights in relation to their insular possessions and insular dominions." There may be and doubtless are rights which these parties have in relation to their insular possessions and dominions that can be threatened by aggressive action without a direct military or naval attack upon the island itself. I will not undertake to enumerate any of them, but I can imagine many claims being made which would call article 2 into effect other than a direct military attack on an island.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the Senator is right about that. It recalls a matter that I will not say is true, because I had no connection with the State Department at that time, but only remember what occurred as stated in the newspapers. I do recall, however, that in the newspapers at the time of the Spanish-American War, when we were fighting in Cuba, when Sampson's fleet had sunk the Spanish ships, there was talk of our sending an expedition to Spain. There were also statements in the newspapers that some of the European powers had requested this Government not to pursue an aggressive action on the Continent of Europe. The war concluded soon afterwards. I do not say that that request kept us from sending a fleet to bombard the ports of Spain, but, nevertheless, I understand the request was made, and we did not bombard the ports of Spain. I can well conceive that should Russia—if one can dream that there can be a rebirth of Russia in 10 years—and Japan become involved in war, possibly requests from the high contracting parties under this document might prevent Russia or some other country from pursuing the war into the islands embraced in this pact. That might be done.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from Alabama yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I was astonished to hear the Senator from Alabama say, in view of the course which this matter has taken and the facts which are well known to us all, that there was no secrecy in connection with the negotiation of this treaty.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not say there was no secrecy. I said that when the treaty came down to a question of determination there was no secrecy; that it was immediately given out.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well. We will let that pass. I was much more astonished when the Senator said two or three times that article 2 of the treaty does not mean anything whatever to the United States. Then, imagine my amazement when, in reply to the question of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], whether he would object to striking the article out, he replied that he would object. This controversy can end, so far as I am concerned, in one minute. If the proponents of this treaty agree with the Senator from Alabama that article 2 means nothing, that it has no practical effect, and will strike it out, we will ratify article 1, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the Senator from Arkansas allow me to answer his suggestion?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is a material suggestion. I have stated, in answer to a question of the Senator from Montana, that I can not conceive how article 2 can be effective in any way during the 10 years of the life of the treaty.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. The life of the treaty is for 11 years instead of 10 years; and Russia already has an army of 4,000,000 men, which she is about to move against Japan.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My understanding of the terms of the treaty is that the treaty is for 10 years.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But 12 months' notice must be given of a desire to renounce it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is true; including the 12 months' notice makes the duration of the treaty 11 years; but the talk about Russia does not appeal to me. To suppose that a so-called government, without organization, without railroads, without manufactures, could become effective within 10 years is, in my judgment, but the dream of theorists.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not answer everybody at one time. I am trying now to answer the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. He has asked me a pertinent question that should be answered and is entitled to an answer, and I want the opportunity to answer it.

The Senator from Arkansas asks if I say that I do not see how article 2 of the treaty can be effective within the next 10 years, why should we not strike it out. The reason we should not strike it out is because we do not know what effect striking it out may have upon the other signatory powers to the treaty. They may regard it as of some value. There is many a treaty which is made some of the agreements of which are of no value to one of the signatory powers, but it accepts those portions of the agreement which are of no value to it in order that it may reach an agreement in reference to other portions of the treaty.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the Senator allow me to conclude my answer?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think it would be unwise from every standpoint if the Senate should strike out article 2 of the treaty. In the first place, what objection is there to agreeing to an article which it is agreed is ineffective? When it is said it is ineffective, that it is not going to hurt anyone, that no harm can come from it, what objection is there to giving it to the other power?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like, in reply, to say that that is merely the view of the Senator from Alabama, but is not my view.

Mr. ROBINSON. We do not agree that article 2 is ineffective, but the Senator from Alabama does.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was referring to the article being actually ineffective.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the Senator allow me to proceed for a moment?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understood that there was a complete agreement between the Senator from Montana and myself with reference to the basic fact that there was no human probability of article 2 coming into effect in reference to our possessions, in reference to the possessions of Great Britain, or in reference to the possessions of France, and that the only theory which the Senator from Montana advanced was that it might come into operation in reference to the possessions of Japan. I thought, however, the Senator from Montana agreed with me that it involved a long-spun theory to believe that China could in the next 10 years reach a condition where it would have an effective navy that could threaten anything involved in this treaty; and that it was a further long-spun theory to conceive for a moment that Russia could do so. We should be practical men in the Senate, and we should determine these questions from the standpoint of practical men.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the proposition be true that there is no probability within 10 years or 11 years of article 2 being effective—and it could only be effective even in reference to Japan on the assumption that China will develop in the next 11 years and become so powerful as to be able to stand in combat against Japan, or that Russia could do so—it would be idle to take the chances of destroying the effect of this treaty and its benefits to us because of a theory of that kind.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield now to a question on that particular point?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator throughout his argument as the basis of the question which he has just been discussing has referred to a 10-year limitation. He said that article 2 can not amount to anything during the next 10 years. The Senator, of course, recognizes that this treaty is not self-renunciating; that it continues in force until the parties to it renunciate it upon one year's notice.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly.

Mr. ROBINSON. And that if at the end of the 10-year period neither the United States nor any other power to the treaty renounces it it will continue in effect indefinitely.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no. It may be renounced at the termination of 10 years, or, as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] suggested, with the 12 months' notice, it would be 11 years. He is correct about that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly; it may be renounced.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It can be renounced at any time after that period.

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly; but until it is renounced it remains in effect.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. So that in case a controversy arises either during the 10-year period or subsequent to the end of the time, if the treaty should be continued in force longer, the only way, under article 2, that the United States can escape participating in the conference and assuming whatever responsibility may be attached to that participation—and we differ about that—would be by renouncing the treaty upon 12 months' notice.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly; the 12 months could begin before the 11 years ran out.

Mr. ROBINSON. If I may try to make myself clear, the argument against article 2 in reply to the statement made by the Senator from Alabama is that it is not limited to 10 years, but it continues in effect indefinitely and until the parties to it renounce it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will pardon me, let us be practical and reasonable about this matter—I was going to say "fair," but the Senator is always fair, and so I will appeal to his reason. What the Senator suggests is true, that this treaty on its face is made for a period of 10 years, with 12 months added. Up to the end of that period it is binding upon all the parties and they can not get out. At the end of that period they can renounce it, or denounce it, if it is desired to use that term; at any hour after the 10 years the treaty can be denounced by any party to it. So I say the argument stands, because at the end of 10 years—and I say these conditions can not happen within 10 years—if it is not to our interest to continue the contract we can renounce it, or denounce it; and I am going to assume that the President of the United States 10 years from now and the Secretary of State at that time will have brains enough and patriotism enough to denounce it, or renounce it, in the event they think that there is any danger to this country in maintaining it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Now, will the Senator yield just at that point?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. It seems to me that the vice in his argument is that during the first 10 years, in a practicable sense, it can not become applicable, and therefore it must remain in the treaty; that at the end of 10 years it may become practically applicable, and therefore harmful; but it can be renounced, and therefore there is no reason to strike it from the treaty; that as soon, however, as it becomes applicable it ought to be renounced.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not say it will become applicable at the end of the 10 years. I do not think it will ever become applicable; but I know it will not become applicable in 10 years, and at the end of that time we can get rid of it if we want to, and in the meantime we have avoided the Anglo-Japanese alliance.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. But the Senator thinks as soon as it does become applicable, to employ his own language, we will have a President with sense enough to get us out of the difficulty which we are now getting into.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no; the Senator puts in my mouth language that does not belong there. The Senator is an artful debater; I always "take my hat off to him" in debate; but I have not said that this treaty would get us into any danger; I do not think that it will, but I say that within the 10 years, the life of this treaty, there is no power that can come to the front in this world and seriously raise any question under article 2.

Mr. REED. May I ask the Senator a question now in a very serious vein? What does the Senator know about the military force of Russia to-day? What reliable information has he in regard to the military establishment of Russia?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I myself have not, I am free to say to the Senator, any reliable or accurate information.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator permit me to give him my information?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. REED. I am free to say that I do not know whether it is reliable, because whatever secrets our Government may have knowledge of it does not give out and almost everything that is known now is not known; that is, it is kept secret; but the best information I have is that Russia has over 4,000,000 men under arms; that those troops are commanded by the flower of the officers of the army of the Czar, and that they are largely supplemented with German officers of high order. I should like to ask when 4,000,000 men thus officered became a force that we could treat lightly?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. So far as this treaty is concerned, they would have to exercise swimming ability unknown up to this time before they could approach any of the islands involved in this treaty. That, however, is perhaps a captious answer; I will give the Senator my real answer.

Mr. REED. Let me interrupt the Senator on the question of swimming ability. Just how far is the island of Sakhalin from the Russian coast at the nearest point?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not be accurate about it, because I do not recall ever looking at a map to ascertain exactly how great the distance is; but, if the Senator wants my best guess, I should say several hundred miles.

Mr. REED. I think it is about 21 miles. I may say, however, that I have not looked it up either.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am sure the distance is much greater than that.

Mr. REED. There is a very narrow and tortuous channel separating the island from the mainland.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But if the Senator will allow me, I will give him my real answer. My answer about their swimming ability, although based on fact, was not the real answer that I intended to make. To begin with, I do not think that Russia has 4,000,000 men under arms, for I do not believe that she has the finances to maintain that many men, and I know that she has not the war materials to sustain an army of 4,000,000 men, because when she collapsed she did not have sufficient war materials, and she has obtained very little war materials since. She has not had the finances or the places to get it. We know that a great Russian army very largely in excess of that of Poland was stopped by the French artillery before it reached Warsaw, and I am inclined to think that the so-called Russian Army to-day is not much more than a mob, if it be considered in connection with the modern armies of the world.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, under article 3 we are fast bound for 10 years, and if at the end of 10 years we find the alliance repugnant to us we will have to endure it for another year. Why should we have to wear the shackles of an unwelcome, distasteful, repugnant alliance for one year after we get tired of it?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator from Georgia thinks it is an unwelcome and distasteful alliance, he ought not to accept it at all.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. He is not going to do so.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, I do not address myself to the argument from that standpoint. If I thought it was a distasteful alliance, I would not receive it at all. I think it is a very important and necessary agreement for the protection of the people of this country and our islands in the Pacific, but, of course, there must be a time for the termination of treaties.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. What is the reason for giving 12 months' notice before the treaty may be terminated?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is customary in all treaties, as the Senator knows, to prescribe a certain notice to the other contracting parties before the treaty may be terminated.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I can not subscribe to that statement.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There are very few treaties in connection with provision for the termination of which there is not required a reasonable notice to be given before the treaty shall expire.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. FRANCE. Of course, Mr. President, the searching question of the Senator from Montana put the Senator in a dilemma from which he can not escape.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I thank the Senator for that. Perhaps other people may not judge in the same way of his own egotism.

Mr. FRANCE. I was paying a very high compliment to the Senator from Montana, in which I think the Senate would be very glad to join me. I have very high respect for his legal attainments; but what I wish to ask the Senator is this:

I was very much interested in that portion of the Senator's remarks which referred to Russia, and I desire to ask the Senator if he can give me the sources of the information upon which this theory of the conference and of the Senator was based, that not within 10 years could Russia become a menace to the peace of Japan? Will the Senator please give us the sources of information which the conference had upon the situation which prevails in Russia?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. So far as I know, the conference did not give out any information of that kind in reference to Russia, or consider it; but I did not speak for the conference when I answered the question. I was speaking for myself. There is a limitation on my power to speak, and I recognize it. My own information I have gathered from newspaper articles, from magazine articles, from talking to an American ambassador who recently has come through Russia on his return home, and from talking to some of those Russians who have been driven from Russian soil; and I have come to the conclusion, although there are in Russia a vast number of men of military age, a large number who have had military training, that there is practically no life in Russia to-day except some agricultural life; that there is no government in Russia to-day except a government of terror; and I know that armies and navies can not be built in a condition of that kind. It is an impossibility.

Mr. FRANCE. Does the Senator mean to say that there was no accurate information before this great international conference as to conditions in Russia except that contained in the newspapers?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On the line that we are discussing, I think there were laid before the American delegation some pamphlets by the State Department giving a statement of the conditions in Russia. I read those pamphlets, but it has been some months ago, and I do not recall the statements in them. I am sure they are not contradictory of what I have said, but I am not basing my statements on those papers, because I do not recall them, and therefore it would be inaccurate for me to say that I was; but I recall that documents as to the size of the Russian Army were laid before us by the Bureau of Information of the War Department. Documents were laid before us as to internal conditions in Russia coming out of the reports of the State Department; but I did not base my statement on them, because I really did not recall them. They were there, however.

Mr. FRANCE. Does the Senator recall whether Americans wrote those pamphlets containing this information?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think they did. They were Americans who had been in Russia and had gathered their information there.

Mr. FRANCE. But the Senator can not recall what Americans went to Russia to obtain information and then furnished that information to the State Department?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think most of them were consular officers. Some of them were secret service agents, but I think they were mostly consular officers and men of that kind. I did not base my statement on that, and I did not claim that I did; but I could not truthfully answer the Senator and say that no reports were made when I recall that some were made.

Mr. FRANCE. Did the Senator base his information as to the conditions of the Russian railroads upon the statement of an ex-ambassador who traveled through Russia?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Part of it; yes.

Mr. FRANCE. I will say, for the information of the Senator—and I shall be very glad to place the newspaper report in the RECORD—that that very same ambassador came through Russia over the Trans-Siberian Railway and wrote out a report from Russia to the effect that the conditions of the railways in Russia were excellent. I can put that in the RECORD if the Senator so desires.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not recall that he referred to the railroads generally in Russia. He referred to that particular railroad and said that traffic continued on that road; but the information that I gathered was that outside of his special train, which was given the right of way, traffic was clogged at every station. I do not care, however, to go into that side issue. It is not material.

Mr. FRANCE. But, Mr. Presdent, I think the Senator, with his very sound judgment on most matters—I say "on most matters"—will recognize the fact that the question of the condition of Russia is a very important question. Here was a conference dealing with vital issues in which the great country of Russia was deeply interested, and it seems to me that it was of paramount importance for them to have accurate first-hand information as to the conditions in that country; and that has become all the more evident as the Senator here is basing his argument upon the assumption that Russia could not within 10 years become a menace to the peace of Japan.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will allow me to answer, I want to conclude my argument. I have been speaking for over two hours and a half, and it is really getting tiresome; and if the Senator will just yield the floor now and let me conclude I shall try to answer him, and then I shall close my speech.

Of course, the question of conditions in Russia is a very important one to the world. It is not to be overlooked in considering this treaty. Information in regard to Russia was before the conference, before the American delegation. A nation in order to maintain great and effective armies and navies must first have financial resources. Russia has none. It is recognized that she has none. We are sending a gift of charity to her people to-day to save them from starvation. A modern army can not be maintained without manufactures. The factories and the mines must run in order to manufacture the implements of war. Russia has none.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not yield any further. I must go on and conclude my argument. I will answer the Senator, and when I get through he can speak as long as he wants to. I do not care to be impolite, but I must close this argument.

Russia's factories can not be rehabilitated in the course of 10 years. She can not reorganize her labor for that purpose and she can not reorganize her armies under a government such as she has. So I say that in my opinion—the Senator may have a different opinion—it is absurd to think that Russia can be a menace to anybody offensively, outside of her borders, in the conditions which exist to-day. She is a menace to the whole world to-day in the fact that she has not a stable government, that anarchy reigns where law and order should be preserved, and the markets of the world are greatly disturbed because a government of civilization has ceased to exist in Russia.

In concluding my remarks, if my friends will allow me, I want to call attention to just one statement in reference to what this treaty means, showing how the other parties to the treaty look upon it. The morning paper contains a dispatch from Tokyo giving an account of a speech by Prince Tokugawa to the American-Japan Society last night or night before last. Prince Tokugawa, as Senators will recall, is the president of the legislative body in Japan which corresponds to our Senate.

He was one of the delegates from Japan to the conference that wrote this treaty, and his name is signed to the four-power treaty. Here is what he says in Japan in the presence of his own people as to what the treaty means.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, when was that statement made?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It bears date of March 10. It appeared in the morning paper.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I ask the Senator another question? Has the Senator before him the statement by Prince Tokugawa appearing in the Japanese Advertiser under date of January 31, 1922?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I have not.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have that, and later will bring it to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Here is the last word that Prince Tokugawa says, and he is a man of great importance. His grandfather or granduncle was the Shogun of Japan 50 or 60 years ago, before the power of the Emperor was restored. He says:

It goes without saying that had the Washington conference taken place in any of the other world capitals it would not have progressed so fast or so far. Americans certainly are practical, and do not waste time in talking or in referring to ideals.

We Japanese had no intention of being left behind. We followed close on the heels of the western nations when armament was the game. We, of course, did not like it, but we had to do it, for our national existence depended on taking up arms, and to a very important degree the national existence of our great neighbor, China, also depended on our military and naval preparations.

Now, a new era has come. There can be no doubt of that. It is an era which we Japanese welcome as sincerely as any other people in the world. America is powerful, wealthy, remote, and secure. No other nation in the world dares attack her except in desperation, and no combination of forces is possible against her. To her, therefore, the coming era of peace is welcome more as a matter of principle and sentiment than as a happy alternative from grim necessity, as with us.

I think I am speaking within bounds when I say the results accomplished at Washington have been remarkable. Critics of the treaty are trying to read into the very plain terms some moral pledge binding the nations to war as well as to peace. But that interpretation is too far fetched to need repudiation. The treaty is a moral pledge of four powers to consult one another in a friendly manner to maintain the general peace of the Pacific. As such, no nation can refuse to accept it.

If it had not been for the fact that the spirit of Japan was in full accord with that of the other great nations that participated in the recent terrible war, those agreements could never have been concluded. It proved beyond all question how unreasonable was the doubt that had prevailed regarding Japan's attitude before Mr. Hughes made his historic speech.

It showed how unfair would have been the charges that Japan was militaristic in spirit. You will see that Japan as a whole will rejoice in these agreements, although a negligible amount of opposition may exist at present. So long as Japan is assured that she need not fear an assault upon her own independence and need not anticipate dangerous aggressions upon the security of China, which is vital here, you will find she will play her part of peace and she now rejoices because of the evidence the Washington conference has given that she need no longer harbor any fear, either for herself or for her great and worthy neighbor.

Over the entire length and breadth of America we met not only a spirit of justice, but true consideration and generosity. So with Government circles, with the press, and with the people generally. From the President of the United States—that strong and far-sighted man—to the bellboys in the hotel, there was the same democratic spirit of kindliness shown us, and I am glad to see that some American papers have noticed that we, too, were both democratic and sincerely well disposed.

I left the United States with a different spirit from that I had when I went there. My hopes and determinations were strong when I went, but we had doubts in regard to the American attitude, the same as they had doubts as to ours. We sent our delegates to the conference not only for our interests, which were important enough, but also for the interests of the peace of the world.

Fortunately, the two things go hand in hand. What is good for the rest of humanity is good enough for Japan, and all Japan knows that to be a fact. We went to Washington with a lofty purpose and strove for lofty ends, and I am more than gratified to think we have been permitted to assist in the achievement of that great aim.

Three great naval powers have agreed to reduce their armaments and enter on a long naval holiday, and after 10 years to maintain a reduced ratio of construction which will leave none of them a menace to the security of others. But this is only the major agreement. The most ardent among us may regret we have not accomplished more, but what has been actually achieved was far more than many of us believed possible.

The four-power pact alone promises to be the greatest pledge for the peace of the world that has ever been concluded. Not only do the hearts and will of the peoples but the vital interests of the great powers stand behind this remarkable agreement, and none of the participating nations could refuse to accept it.

Especially were the achievements at Washington important to the United States and Japan, for between us there had been recently some distrust and suspicion which was not entirely justified. The campaign of hostility against Japan had had its effect and there was some fear of possibly serious consequences.

Realizing this situation, we welcomed the opportunity the American Government gave us to go to Washington with the purpose of talking freely and frankly and making a serious effort to clear away such misunderstandings as existed. I rejoice to say we have largely realized our hopes, which alone is a wonderful achievement. If the conference had accomplished nothing else, this would have meant much for the peace of the Pacific. We have arrived at a spirit of international cooperation, which is the new spirit of the new age, upon which we are launching new ships of peace.

When Senator's assume that Japan's attitude is hostile to the conclusions that I have stated to-day as to what this pact means, they must not only deny the interpretation put on this treaty by their delegates to this conference, they must not only deny the plain terms of the written instrument, but they must deny the interpretation put on it by the delegates from foreign powers. Tokuwaga holds an office in Japan second only to that of the Emperor himself. He is a man whose family is a part of the history of Japan; yet he says that the terms of this treaty provide merely for a conference for the maintenance of the peace of the Orient.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield at that point to have a statement by Prince Tokuwaga, made on January 31, 1922, and before the question had arisen here as to what the treaty really means, put in the RECORD?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I will not, because I do not think the Senator is fair. I said I had not read the statement.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not mean to be unfair.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I know that, but when I state my position in the matter I am sure that the Senator will recognize the justice of it. The Senator has the statement. I have not read it. I can not stand here and analyze it until I have read it, and the Senator can put it in the RECORD and accomplish his purpose in his own time. I do not think he should ask me to put in the RECORD in connection with my speech something that I have not had a chance to read.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield for just a brief statement?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no desire, and I think the Senator from Alabama understands that, to be unfair.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I withdraw the remark, because the Senator never has been unfair to me.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator need not withdraw it, because I knew he did not mean it in any offensive sense.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not mean it in that sense, but I mean that I can not submit at this stage in my speech to the Senator putting in the RECORD a lot of matter, regardless of what it is, that I have not had a chance to consider.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator permit me to state why I asked leave to print it in the RECORD?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly, if the Senator wants to; but I should like to finish my speech.

Mr. ROBINSON. It will take me only a moment to do it.

The reason I asked leave to put this statement in the RECORD was that it is the first authentic account of Prince Tokugawa's interpretation of the treaty; and in that interpretation he expressly construed the four-power pact as an alliance and boasted that instead of having one ally Japan now had three. That statement was made by the prince before this controversy had arisen in the Senate and before the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] made his declaration the other day that the treaty merely called for a conference. I thought it would illuminate the question as to what the prince's interpretation of the treaty actually is.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not want to digress from the line of my argument; but I want to say to my friend from Arkansas that, while I am willing to meet anything in debate, I did not think I should be asked to put into my remarks statements, books, or papers that I have not seen. Of course, the Senator does not ask for the insertion of books or papers, but I have sometimes seen it done here.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no, Mr. President; I agree that the Senator has a perfect right to control what shall go into his address. I thought, however, that I had the right to ask him if he would permit me to insert it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. To be sure; and I should have been very unwise if I had accepted the Senator's suggestion, because I can not control a situation of that kind. The Senator can put in the statement in his own time, and then, if I desire to comment on it after he gets through, I will have the opportunity. What I have read, however, is the last statement of Prince Tokugawa, and I do not question that it is true.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I hesitate to ask the Senator a question, because he has been put through such a continuous catechism for the last hour or so; but I want to know how to vote on this treaty, and I must say that if the treaty is as meaningless as the Senator from Alabama says it is I should not take pains to listen to the debate further, or care how I vote, or whether I vote at all. What I want to ask the Senator is, Just exactly why should this powerful prince of Japan felicitate his country on having rid itself of a powerful alliance with Great Britain if this treaty is so meaningless, if this treaty does not involve on the other hand a still greater alliance and the assured assistance of France and the United States as well as Great Britain in case of trouble?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will try to answer the Senator's question. I think it is very clear without any alliance.

Mr. GLASS. In other words, if this treaty is as meaningless to us as the Senator says it is, and we get rid of the menace of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, what does Japan get?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will answer the Senator. I do not say it is meaningless. The Senator was not in the Chamber when I opened my argument. I referred to the question as to what it means and the effect of it. I say that it means no alliance.

Mr. GLASS. I heard the entire address of the Senator.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I beg the Senator's pardon. I judged from his question that he had not. I say it is no alliance, but that it is an agreement by four great powers to keep the peace.

I know that most of the men in the Governments of the world believe even to this hour that there is no power except the power of force and arms; but I say to the Senator that the faith which the Christ brought to men 2,000 years ago has lived in the hearts of men since that time. It has saved the world from barbarity, so far as the individual peoples are concerned. It has not taken possession of the hearts of nations yet. Up to this good hour nations, and those who control them, have believed in the power of force and not in the power of justice and right as enforced in the breasts of men. I may be called a theorist; it may be said that it is idle for me to say that the doctrine that was born with a man who came out of Nazareth can never live in the lives of the nations of the world; but I believe it can, and it will, and that the hour is at hand. I believe the great moving cause which made it possible, in the strife and turmoil to be found in Paris after the great war of nations, which made it possible for the world to sit at a table and agree on a League of Nations to keep the peace, did not come from those men at the table, did not come from national representatives; it came from the great heartbeats of Christian nations and Christian people.

Mr. GLASS. But it did not reflect itself in this great Christian Nation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But that was not my fault or the Senator's, and I am not bound by what the Senate did. It was reflected, and this treaty reflects the same proposition. It may not be reflected by 27 nations, but it reflects it by 4, and the man who votes against it denies that principle.

It may be argued to these men who believe only in the sword and the power of the sword that nothing good can come out of this world except government based on force; but I will not believe it. I believe that when four great nations are willing to submit their differences amicably that peace and justice and right may prevail, it is not a matter to be scorned at or scoffed at; it is a matter which will affect the world and will secure peace.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator in his philosophizing about the doctrines of Christianity is getting away from my question. I want him to answer my question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I thought I was answering it. The Senator said I said there was nothing in it. I say there is that in it. I may not make myself clear to the Senator.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator says there is no moral obligation on any one of these nations.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is a moral obligation to confer to protect each other's rights, and I believe the meeting together to confer carries the power of peace.

Mr. GLASS. May I not ask the Senator, as a matter of fact, if he has not to-day a different conception of the meaning of this treaty from that he had at one time? In other words, did he not at one time interpret this treaty to mean that these four nations would not only respect the rights of each other and of all, but would also maintain the rights of each other and all?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I do not recall that I did. Of course, when I first returned to Washington, as I have said, under unfortunate circumstances I was not very well informed about the terms of this treaty, because I unfortunately did not happen to be in the making of it; I was called away, and I do not recall that I ever had any other position. I certainly have none now.

I have not a doubt in my mind that there is no danger to the American people if we go into this contract. I believe it carries within its folds the terms of peace to our people, and protection to the lives of our men, and I believe that by its terms we will reject and wipe out an alliance between Japan and Great Britain which, if not a danger to us, certainly has been an embarrassment to us, and I say that the man who votes to reject this treaty takes the responsibility of turning his back on an opportunity to preserve the peace of the Orient and puts back in effective force the Japanese-English alliance.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss at length the matters gone over by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], but I want to try to point out one or two curiosities.

The Senator from Alabama worked himself into a religious zeal and fervor, seldom manifested outside an old-fashioned camp meeting, when he was discussing the idea that the dawn of that day has now come when Christianity and the Christian spirit are to rule in the affairs of men. He told us, in substance, it was because of that spirit that we could enter into this treaty with safety.

Within two minutes after he not only prophesied the dawn of the millennium, but declared its advent, he told us that if we did not sign the treaty, we would be in great danger of attack from two of the parties to the agreement. In a word, the millennium is here, provided we sign this treaty, but if we do not sign this treaty, two of our contemplated associates may pounce upon the United States without cause or reason. Mr. President, I have heard that kind of logic now for about three years in the Senate, and it makes me very, very tired. At the same time that we are told we are hereafter to put our confidence in the faith taught by the Savior of mankind, we are deliberating upon treaties proposed for the limitation of armaments. We know how long and bitterly the contention was carried on as to the balance of armaments; not one of the nations being willing to trust to faith in the Savior but all looking to their cannon and their ships.

I hope the millennium will come some day, and I should be glad to think that I could live long enough to witness its glorious advent, but when it comes, I know it is coming in the way the Good Book says. It will be ushered in with the music of anvils beating swords into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks. We will witness the spectacle of the lion and the lamb lying down together, and we will not see the military masters of the world consorting together for a balance of military power and for the preservation, as far as they can, of the most rapid moving ships of war and the most powerful cannon.

It is time we should understand that we are dealing with a practical world and that we must deal with it in a practical way. It is at least difficult to believe that the doctrine of Christianity is a sufficient safeguard for our people when we are offered a treaty with a nation which does not believe in that doctrine and which, according to the reports of American missionary societies within 12 months prior to this date, was burning down Christian churches, was executing Christian men, and was stripping naked the bodies of native Christian Koreans and beating them with bamboo rods until the flesh dropped from their bones; a nation which has just completed the ravishment of China; which broke faith in Korea; which assailed Russia before she declared war, and even while her councilors sat at the table discussing with Russia the terms of an agreement was massing her ships and preparing for a great naval attack.

Let these cold facts go out along with the beautiful picture of the dawn of a new day which is ushered in by a military alliance of four great countries, for that is what this treaty is, If it were not a military alliance, then it would clearly provide that in case of dispute anywhere in the world the representatives of the four nations would sit down and talk with their neighbors and would settle disputed questions according to the Decalogue and the Sermon on the Mount instead of agreeing, as they did agree, to meet and consort as to the most effective means of repelling an attack.

There is just one thing further I want to say. The Senator laughed at the idea of Russia getting into Sakhalin. All of us are as ignorant about the geography of that island as our American representatives seem to be of their politics, so I have been looking it up a little. On the map I found that the two lines of Sakhalin and Russia were almost identical. One could hardly find the little, narrow strait between the Russian mainland and the island; but you can not trust maps. They are almost as uncertain as the arguments of those who come forward with prophecies of a millennium; so I have gone to the texts, and this is what I find:

Sakhalin (sä'kȧ-lyēn) or Saghalien (sä'gȧ-lyēn'): An island off the east coast of Siberia, 600 miles long and from 16 to 100 miles wide, extending from latitude 45° 54′ to 54° 30′ north and from longitude 141° 30′ to 145° east (Map, Asia, Q 3). It is separated from the Maritime Province—on the west by the Gulf and Strait of Tartary, the latter only about 5 miles wide, and from the island of Yezo on the south by the Strait of La Perouse, about 27 miles at its narrowest part.

That is, on the Siberian coast—

I just read from the New International Dictionary. I now read from the Encyclopedia Britannica:

Sakhalin, which was under Chinese dominion until the nineteenth century, became known to Europeans from the travels of Martin Gerritz de Vries, in the seventeenth century, and still better from those of La Perouse (1787) and Krusenstern (1805). Both, however, regarded it as a peninsula and were unaware of the existence of the Strait of Tartary, which was discovered in 1809 by a Japanese, Mamiya Rinzo. The Russian nagivator Nevelskoi in 1849 definitely established the existence and navigability of this strait.

Therefore the separation is so narrow that it was only in 1849 they found there was a way to get vessels through at all. It is frozen in the winter; armies may be marched across the solid ice; and if Russia ever arouses herself from her sick bed it does not require a prophet to know that Russian Cossacks and Russian soldiers will attack the Japanese hold on that island, and that some day the great Russian bear, with his claws and his teeth, will be fighting for the possession of that land. When that time comes the millennial dream of my friend from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] will vanish in the thin air out of which it is composed and we shall be confronted with the very practical question, Are we to keep faith, sit down and consult as to the most effective means of repelling an attack upon these islands, or are we to say, "We bound ourselves to nothing"?

Mr. President, I do not intend now further to discuss these questions. I merely wished to call attention to the two matters.

Mr. WARREN and Mr. ROBINSON addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I am about to ask that the Senate go into legislative session for the purpose of considering the second deficiency appropriation bill. I am rather forced to ask for the passage of that bill to-day, because there are nearly 100,000 disabled soldiers who should be paid their money on the 15th of the present month, and there is no authority to pay them under appropriations which have already been made.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from Wyoming withhold his request for just a few moments until I can read a statement to which I referred in the remarks of the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. WARREN. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I am fortunate enough to know Prince Tokugawa. He is one of the greatest if not the leading statesman of Japan. When the final judgment of history is registered as to the accomplishments of the Washington conference, his shrewdness will not be in doubt. When he returned to Japan immediately following the conference he was received with great enthusiasm. He made an address which was published in the Japan Advertiser, which claims to have the largest circulation of any foreign newspaper published in the Empire; indeed, it is the claim of this journal that it has the largest daily circulation of any newspaper published in the Far East. Speaking to the people of Japan and explaining his opinion as to the natural and true meaning of the four-power treaty, Prince Tokugawa gave utterance to expressions widely at variance with the declarations attributed to him in the news reports quoted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and admittedly made on the 10th of March, since the Senator from Massachusetts gave to the Senate his remarkable interpretation of the treaty.

On his return to Japan the Prince said:

America lent a sympathetic and intelligent ear to Japan's straightforward and candid arguments, and after a series of fair and open-hearted discussions of the problems the two nations were left in a position of better mutual understanding and more cordial relationship than before. Without such mutual understanding and sincerity on the part of both Japan and the United States the four-power pact never would have been formed.

In summing up his views and impressions brought back from the conference, Prince Tokugawa said that the question of naval armament was settled in a spirit of conciliation and cooperation far beyond the expectations of the Japanese delegates.

I am pleased to note—

The Prince smiled—

that Japan instead of losing her old ally has gained additional ones by the four-power pact. I can not help feeling assured, therefore, that our people will be satisfied with the general result achieved by the Washington conference.

This is an explicit, clear declaration of his opinion at that time, that this treaty is an alliance, and will meet the approval of Japan because it constitutes such an agreement.

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. ROBINSON. With pleasure.

Mr. McCORMICK. Let me submit to the Senator a part of Prince Tokugawa's statement, which reads as follows:

The critics of the treaty are trying to read into the very plain terms some moral pledge binding the nations to war as well as to peace. But that interpretation is too far-fetched to need repudiation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, that is the statement attributed to the prince on the 10th of March, is it not?

Mr. McCORMICK. It is.

Mr. ROBINSON. That has already been put into the RECORD by the Senator from Alabama, and it is in reply to it that I am reading a statement made by the prince when he first arrived in Japan after the Washington conference and before he had had occasion to change his interpretation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator from Arkansas is reading from a paper which is published in Japan?

Mr. ROBINSON. I am reading from a newspaper which is published in Japan; and I have stated that it claims to be the most authentic foreign newspaper which is published in Japan. I think if the Senators will investigate the matter, they will find that the statement is true.

Mr. President, in view of these two statements by Prince Tokugawa, the grandson of the great Shogun, I submit that he is well nigh as skillful as any other man living in changing his viewpoint respecting important international affairs. There is only one man to whom I concede greater ability speedily to readjust his convictions and his interpretations of international documents in order to meet the exigencies of the hour, and that is the learned, intellectual genius—the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. No man can rival him.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, surely the Senator from Arkansas has not forgotten the statesman "who kept us out of war" in 1916?

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois and other Senators for some mysterious reason throughout this debate, by inspired interviews in newspapers, have been seeking to bring ex-President Wilson into this contest. When my name and the name of the Senator from Illinois shall have been buried in oblivion, the name of Woodrow Wilson will live and thrill the hearts and minds of men and women who love fairness and justice and liberty.

Mr. WARREN rose.

Mr. ROBINSON. Just a moment.

The place of Woodrow Wilson in history is fixed by events which neither the Senate nor insinuations by Senators can materially alter. I am entirely content to leave to the Senator from Illinois any feeling of pride which he may derive from that interpolation into my remarks.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has been kind in not pressing the motion which he took the floor to make, and if he will be indulgent for a few moments more, I will read to the Senate what a great British statesman said when the four-power treaty was first brought to the attention of the British people. While the language used is not quite so frank as that employed by Prince Tokugawa in asserting that the four-power pact is a quadruple alliance, it is susceptible of no construction save that. Earl Grey believed when he spoke to the British people concerning this treaty that it is an alliance. Without further comment, I propose now to read from a great British paper, the Manchester Guardian, under date of Wednesday, December 14, 1921. Speaking of the Washington conference and its achievements as they affected the British people Earl Grey said:

He had felt for some time that if any nation, so great and so strong as to be above the suspicion of advocating the reduction of armaments simply to save its own back or its own skin—and the United States alone was in such a position—would come forward with a concrete proposal about which there could be no misunderstanding it would stampede public opinion in favor of it. That the United States had done, and they had been seconded by the representatives of other countries at the conference. He wished especially to express his gratification at the work done at Washington—and he might add, the work done at Geneva a short time previously—by Mr. Balfour. All people, to whatever party they belonged, admitted Mr. Balfour's great ability. But he had shown more than ability. He had shown conviction and zeal in this cause, and he trusted that there would be unanimous recognition of the great services he had rendered to his country in the cause of peace. [Hear, hear.]

The quadruple agreement between the United States, Great Britain, France, and Japan was, in his opinion, a most momentous and favorable departure. He had been much exercised during recent weeks by the discussion about the Anglo-Japanese alliance. He felt very strongly that separate alliances of that kind, while justifiable when they were made, and indeed useful, were not in harmony with what we hoped would be the development of opinion since the war. But at the same time he felt that the Anglo-Japanese alliance was something upon which we could not respectably or honorably turn our backs. We could not say: "The alliance has served its purpose," least of all if at the time the alliance was being denounced we were ourselves fortifying our position by new friendships and strengthening it—he did not say by alliances—

Oh, no; he would not say it. When you wish to imply the existence of a fact you do not say it; you merely intimate it—but by ties of friendship—with other countries. Therefore he felt that, although the Anglo-Japanese alliance was out of date, there was only one way by which it could come to an end satisfactorily both to ourselves and to Japan, and that was by being merged in something greater in which each should be a part.

That was exactly what had happened. The Anglo-Japanese alliance was to be merged in a quadruple agreement, and that agreement though it related only to the island possessions of the Pacific, must have an effect in spirit which would go far beyond the letter of the agreement itself.

I make no comment in detail on that statement. I leave it to the Senate to conclude whether the interpretation placed upon this treaty by Earl Grey and by Prince Tokugawa in the early period of its consideration expresses a real interpretation which seems to have been changed in order to meet the exigencies of debate for the ratification of the treaty in the Senate of the United States.

I shall conclude by a brief reference to the question of secrecy. Mr. President, the Secretary of State, day before yesterday, said the four-power treaty was signed by the delegates of the four powers and that therefore it was written by all of them; but, said he, "It does not matter who wrote it; what is in it does matter." To-day he seems to have changed his view respecting that subject; at last we have learned something—I will not say it is anything definite or complete concerning the origin of this treaty—but the Secretary of State says that after consultations among the delegates and after Japan had consented that France be made a party he framed the first draft. Why has he withheld information concerning the subject since the treaty was reported at the plenary session? What occasion has there existed since this treaty became public to withhold that fact? There can be no doubt, Mr. President, when the facts are studied, that the suggestion originated in the desire of both Great Britain and Japan to retain the benefits of the Anglo-Japanese alliance without taking the odium that attached to it in the eyes of other nations of the world, and this their representatives have accomplished by entering into the four-power treaty. I thank the Senator from Wyoming.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGES.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of United States courts, to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside of their districts, and for other purposes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate take up for consideration House bill 10663, the deficiency appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10663) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RETIREMENT OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WARREN. If it is for a matter that will lead to no debate.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, this is an emergency matter.

From the Committee on Civil Service I report back favorably a bill which was before that committee yesterday, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. I do not think it will lead to any discussion. It is Senate bill 3265, entitled "A bill construing the expression 'all employees in the classified civil service of the United States' as used in section 1 of the act of May 22, 1920, entitled 'An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.'"

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be received.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I wish to say simply this: By a recent ruling of the Attorney General, the term "classified civil service" has been held to embrace only those employees who have entered the civil service through competitive examination, notwithstanding the fact that many thousands, indeed, are in the civil service under Executive order or under legislative enactment. The effect of the ruling of the Attorney General will be to deprive about 80,000 civil-service employees of the benefit of the civil service retirement, act, and to deprive immediately something over 2,000 who have retired of the benefits of the provisions of that act in regard to annuities. So it is absolutely necessary that some act be passed construing the term "classified civil service" as the Civil Service Commission has construed it and as the Senate construed it when the civil service retirement bill was before the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. I have not heard the bill read. Does the bill make a legislative construction of the act or does it provide by legislation that the words referred to shall include these people?

Mr. STERLING. It is a legislative construction of the term "classified civil service."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Personally, I do not think that would accomplish anything. I think if we want to include these people we ought to say so by legislation——

Mr. STERLING. They are included.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Because even if we construe the term, it seems to me that the courts will construe it according to the language of the law. It would be a very easy thing for us to say that those people shall be included in it.

Mr. STERLING. I can refer to the rules of the Civil Service Commission to show how it has been construed all these years by the Civil Service Commission, and how the Executive has acted upon that construction.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But let us provide in terms that they shall be included.

Mr. STERLING. I do not think so. I think it is quite competent for the legislature to determine how an act shall be construed.

Mr. WARREN. If this is to lead to any debate——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not going to discuss it further. I only call attention to this matter. I think, instead of legislating a construction, that we ought to provide by law that it shall be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3265) construing the expression "all employees in the classified civil service of the United States," as used in section 1 of the act of May 22, 1920, entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the civil service retirement act approved May 22, 1920, the expression "all employees in the classified civil service of the United States," as used in section 1 thereof shall be construed to include all persons who have been heretofore or who may hereafter be given a competitive status in the classified civil service, with or without competitive examination, by legislative enactment, or under the civil service rules promulgated by the President, or by Executive orders covering groups of employees with their positions into the competitve classified service or authorizing the appointment of individuals to positions within such service.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I desire to offer one simple amendment to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the bill, the following:

The expression "classified civil service," as the same occurs in other acts of Congress, shall receive a like construction to that herein given.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, this is a Senate bill; is it not?

Mr. STERLING. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope that when it gets over to the House the House will put it in the form of legislation and not of construction, which is simply an idle thing.

Mr. STERLING. I hope the Sentor from Washington will abandon the idea that a legislature can not pass a construing or declaratory act. We have done it again and again.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It amounts to nothing when we do.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, let the bill pass or let it be withdrawn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendment to be proposed the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSOLIDATION OF NATIONAL FOREST LANDS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I think a statement should be made as to a colloquy that occurred yesterday afternoon with reference to Senate bill 490. This was a bill that passed the Senate providing for the exchange of lands in forest reserves. It went over to the House, and came back here yesterday with some minor amendments. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] moved to concur in those amendments. In a colloquy occurring with reference to that, in which the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and I asked the Senator from Utah for certain information, this occurred:

The Senator from Nebraska said:

It proposes a general law in regard to the exchange of lands?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; of lands within forest reservations for lands outside.

Then, in reply to another question, the Senator from Utah said:

Yes; that is, land within a forest reserve may be exchanged for lands outside.

And, on page 3662 of the RECORD, in answer to the following question of mine:

This applies to all the forest reserves and permits the exchange of private lands in the reserve for lands of a similar character outside?

The Senator from Utah replied:

That is all there is to it.

That would give the impression that this bill permitted the exchange of private lands in forest reserves for any public lands outside of national forests. I do not think that is correct, and I did not intend to have my question carry that impression when I asked it, because all these bills that we have passed heretofore provide for the exchange of private lands in a forest reserve for other lands in other forest reserves. The language of the bill that we were discussing is like this:

That, when the public interests will be benefited thereby, the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized in his discretion to accept on behalf of the United States title to any lands within the exterior boundaries of the national forests which, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, are chiefly valuable for national-forest purposes, and in exchange therefor may patent not to exceed an equal value of such national forest land in the same State.

So I think it is clear that this bill authorizes the exchange of private lands in a forest reserve for, it is true, lands outside of that forest reserve, but only lands within some other forest reserve within the State.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10663) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I merely want to say, as I was out of the Chamber when the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] brought up this bill and laid aside the treaty, that his action, of course, meets with my entire approval. I did not know this morning of the importance of some of these deficiencies, especially the one relating to the large appropriation which will be necessary by the 15th of March in order to take care of the soldiers in the hospitals and in vocational training. I wish to say, however, that I shall ask the Senate to take a recess when the proper time comes after the disposition of this bill, and on Monday I shall have the pending treaty taken up again and kept before the Senate, if the Senate sustains me, for action, and have long sessions held in order to do it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head "Legislative establishment," on page 2, after line 1, to insert:

SENATE.

EMPLOYEES.

For assistant clerk for the Committee on Appropriations, at the rate of $3,000 per annum, from March 16, 1922, to June 30, 1923, both dates inclusive, $3,883.33.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator how many clerks the Committee on Appropriations has now?

Mr. WARREN. I will give the Senator the information that he desires. We have one more than one-half what they have in the Committee on Appropriations in the House.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know what the House has. The Senator compares it with the House. I am trying to ascertain how many clerks the Senate committee has.

Mr. WARREN. It now has its chief clerk, and two assistants, and three stenographers. Those are for the Committee on Appropriations and also for the Senator who is chairman of that committee. The Senator will remember that in the Senate a Senator has four clerks, though he may not be chairman of any committee; so that in the case of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, according the chairman of the committee the same number of clerks that the Senator from Florida and other Senators are entitled to have, there are but two left to do the work of the Committee on Appropriations. Hence we ask for an additional clerk.

Mr. FLETCHER. I presume that very likely the recent change in the rules will impose more work on the committee.

Mr. WARREN. I should have asked for this additional clerk just the same if that additional work had not come along, because the clerks of that committee have been working nights and days and Sundays and holidays, more than any clerks ought to be expected to work.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, after line 6, to insert: "For purchase of furniture, $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 7, to insert:

To pay Jack Crocker for extra services rendered to the Committee on Privileges and Elections in guarding ballots during vacation and in recount in connection with Michigan senatorial contest, $250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 11, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay from the appropriation for 1921–22, compensation of officers, clerks, messengers, and others, to Eugene Colwell for additional services as assistant financial clerk, $400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Architect of the Capitol," on page 4, after line 21, to insert:

Senate Office Building: For maintenance, miscellaneous items and supplies, and for all necessary personal and other services for the care and operation of the Senate Office Building, under the direction and supervision of the Senate Committee on Rules, $23,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 2, to insert:

For furniture for the Senate Office Building and for labor and material incident thereto and repairs thereof, window shades, awnings, carpets, glass for windows and bookcases, desk lamps, window ventilators, name plates for doors and committee tables, electric fans, etc., $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 14, to insert:

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.

LEGISLATIVE REFERENCE.

For the legislative reference, including the same objects specified under this head in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1922, $6,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 20, to insert:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES.

For miscellaneous and contingent expenses, stationery, supplies, stock, and materials directly purchased, miscellaneous traveling expenses, postage, transportation, incidental expenses connected with the administration of the Library and the copyright office, including not exceeding $500 for expenses of attendance at meetings when incurred on the written authority and direction of the Librarian, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Executive," on page 6, after line 13, to insert the following paragraph:

BUREAU OF EFFICIENCY.

For carrying on the work of the Bureau of Efficiency as authorized by law, including salaries and contingent expenses; supplies; stationery; purchase and exchange of equipment; printing and binding; traveling expenses; per diem in lieu of subsistence; not to exceed $100 for law books, books of reference, and periodicals; and not to exceed $100 for street car fare; in all, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "District of Columbia," on page 6, after line 22, to insert the following paragraph:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE.

For temporary employment of additional assistant inspectors for the building inspection division, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Contingent and Miscellaneous," on page 7, after line 9, to insert:

For printing, checks, books, law books, books of reference, periodicals, stationery; surveying instruments and implements; drawing materials; binding, rebinding, repairing, and preservation of records; maintaining and keeping in good order the laboratory and apparatus in the office of the inspector of asphalt and cement; damages; livery, purchase, and care of horses and carriages or buggies and bicycles not otherwise provided for; horseshoeing; ice; repairs to pound and vehicles; use of bicycles by inspectors in the engineer department not to exceed $800; and other general necessary expenses of District offices, including the sinking-fund office, Board of Charities, including an allowance to the purchasing officer and to the secretary of the Board of Charities of not exceeding $360 each per annum for maintenance of vehicles for use in the discharge of their official duties, personal tax board, harbor master, health department, surveyor's office, superintendent of weights, measures, and markets office, and department of insurance, and purchase of new apparatus and laboratory equipment in office of inspector of asphalt and cement, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 4, to insert:

For postage for strictly official mail matter, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 10, to insert:

BRIDGES.

For repairs and improvements to the Calvert Street Bridge, $26,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 3, to insert:

Public convenience stations: For maintenance of public convenience stations, including compensation of necessary employees, $2,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 6, to insert:

ELECTRICAL DEPARTMENT.

For general supplies, repairs, new batteries and battery supplies, telephone rental and purchase, wire and cable for extension of telegraph and telephone service, repairs of lines and instruments, purchase of poles, tools, insulators, brackets, pins, hardware, cross arms, ice, record books, stationery, printing, livery, purchase and repair of bicycles, allowance for the maintenance of not more than three automobiles at not to exceed $30 per month each, blacksmithing, extra labor, new boxes, and other necessary items, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 21, to increase the appropriation for fuel, gas, and electric light and power for the fiscal year 1922 from "$20,000" to "$29,300."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 8, to insert:

POLICE COURT.

For compensation of jurors, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Medical charities," on page 14, after line 15, to insert "Children's Hospital, $7,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 17, to increase the appropriation for Eastern Dispensary and Casualty Hospital from $6,700 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 5, to insert:

MUNICIPAL LODGING HOUSE AND WOOD YARD.

For maintenance, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Insane," on page 15, line 19, to increase the appropriation for heating offices, watchmen's lodges, and greenhouses at the propagating gardens from $1,000 to $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 19, to insert:

NATIONAL ZOOLOGICAL PARK.

For laying in the National Zoological Park approximately 1,550 feet of 6-inch cast-iron water main and installing two fire hydrants of design approved by the fire department of the District of Columbia, $3,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 9, to insert:

For payment of the judgments against the District of Columbia, set forth in Senate Document No. 148 of the present session, $2,436.26, together with a further sum to pay the interest at not exceeding 4 per cent per annum on said judgments, as provided by law from the date they became due until the date of payment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "General Accounting Office," on page 18, after line 21, to insert:

Salaries and expenses: For necessary clerical force to enable the General Accounting Office to properly audit and settle the accounts and claims growing out of the expansion of the work of the United States Veterans' Bureau and the payments of interest on the public debt, together with the settlement and payment of transportation claims, $110,333.33.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 2, to insert:

For necessary clerical force to enable the General Accounting Office to properly audit and settle the accounts and claims growing out of the expansion of the work of the United States Veterans' Bureau and the payments of interest on the public debt, together with the settlement and payment of transportation claims, fiscal year 1923, $350,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 8, to strike out:

The Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to cause an audit to be made of the financial transactions of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe. Such audit shall be effective commencing July 1, 1921, the date of the discontinuance of the audit required to be performed under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury by the act approved July 1, 1918.

And in lieu to insert:

The Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to cause an audit to be made of the financial transactions of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, in accordance with the usual methods of steamship or corporation accounting and under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe. Such audit shall be effective commencing July 1, 1921, the date of the discontinuance of the audit required to be performed under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury by the act approved July 1, 1918.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "United States Veterans' Bureau," on page 20, line 24, before the word "repairs," to strike out "minor," so as to make the additional proviso read:

Provided further, That no part of the foregoing appropriation shall be expended for construction work (except necessary repairs) at any Army camp acquired by the United States Veterans' Bureau for use as a training center.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 12, after the word "buildings," to insert "to be done under the supervision and direction of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury," so as to make the paragraph read:

The allotments made by the United States Veterans' Bureau to the Public Health Service for the care of beneficiaries of that bureau by the said service shall also be available for expenditure by the Public Health Service on that account for necessary personnel, regular and reserve commissioned officers of the Public Health Service, and clerical help in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, maintenance, equipment, leases, fuel, lights, water, printing, freight, transportation, and travel, repairs and necessary minor alterations to hospitals and auxiliary buildings to be done under the supervision and direction of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, and maintenance and operation of passenger motor vehicles.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Plant Industry," on page 22, line 24, after the word "regions," to strike out "of the Pacific coast," and on page 23, line 4, after the word "areas," to strike out "in the West," so as to read:

White-pine blister rust control: For meeting the emergency caused by the appearance of the white-pine blister rust in the white and sugar pine regions threatening the extensive Federal holdings of these essential woods as well as private and State holdings, thus endangering the entire supply thereof, $150,000, which sum shall be available for investigation and control work on the white-pine blister rust in the white-pine and sugar-pine areas, in such manner as in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture may best accomplish the suppression of the disease, and shall remain available until March 31, 1923.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I have no objection to that committee amendment, but when we return to the amendments I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this item. I have information from the department of agriculture of the State of Washington, which is a very well organized department, that the item is not needed for the purposes designated in the bill, and at the proper time I want to move to strike it out and let it go to conference for further investigation.

Mr. WARREN. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Department of the Interior," on page 26, after line 1, to insert:

PATENT OFFICE.

Salaries: To pay the salaries of the officers and employees of the Patent Office from February 18, 1922, the date of the passage of the act to increase the force and salaries in the Patent Office (Public, No. 147), to June 30, 1922, both dates inclusive, for the positions and at the rates per annum authorized by said act, in addition to the amount appropriated by the legislative, etc., appropriation act, approved March 3, 1921, $166,671.16.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 10, to insert:

TERRITORY OF ALASKA.

For care and custody of persons legally adjudged insane in Alaska, including transportation and other expenses, $8,800: Provided, That authority is granted to the Secretary of the Interior to pay from this appropriation to the Sanitarium Co. of Portland, Oreg., not to exceed $570 per capita per annum for the care and maintenance of Alaskan insane patients during the fiscal year 1922.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 10, to insert:

NATIONAL PARK SERVICE.

Grand Canyon National Park, Ariz.: For labor and material necessary for insect-control work on the north rim of the Grand Canyon, to remain available until expended, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 15, to insert:

CREDIT IN ACCOUNTS OF GEORGE W. EVANS.

The General Accounting Office is authorized and directed to credit the accounts of George W. Evans, chief disbursing clerk Department of the Interior, with the payment of $480, made to F. W. Bolgiano & Co., Washington, D. C., for three snow plows delivered June 30, 1920, per voucher No. 2336, quarter ended September 30, 1920, from the appropriation for "Improving the Capitol grounds, 1920."

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask that that amendment be passed over. I think it is subject to a point of order as an allowance of a private claim not authorized by law. I will reserve the right to make the point of order.

Mr. WARREN. That is a provision made for cleaning the sidewalks of snow. Those plows have been in use, as the Senator knows, and are very valuable for that purpose. They were purchased in a hurry. The Senator will remember that there was quite a heavy fall of snow.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator is discussing the merits of the proposition. It may be meritorious, but I was speaking about the practice of putting private claims in an appropriation bill.

Mr. WARREN. I was coming to that point. This big-snow matter was brought to my attention at bedtime during the storm, the inquiry being made of me as to what they should do, because the appropriations were not sufficient, and I said that in emergencies the city had at various times taken quick action as to necessary expenses. I did not speak of the plows specifically, but I said they should go at cleaning sidewalks in the most economical way, and that undoubtedly the committee would take it up and provide funds for it. I think this party took the money out of his own pocket at the moment to see that the streets were cleaned, so that the Senator and I could come to the Capitol, and so on.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I know of one case where a man took money out of his own pocket, I think in the Senator's own State, to pay the rent for a post-office building, and it took him 30 or 40 years to get it back. I think the claim was just allowed two or three days ago. I do not know that I shall make a point of order, but I ask that it be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, in the items for contingent expenses, Department of Justice, on page 29, after line 23, to insert:

For 1922, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 30, to insert:

For furniture and repairs, including carpets, file holders, and cases, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 2, to insert:

MISCELLANEOUS OBJECTS, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

For conduct of customs cases, including the same objects specified under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1922, $3,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 6, to insert:

JUDICIAL.

COURT OF CLAIMS.

For stationery, court library, repairs, including repairs to bicycles, fuel, electric light, electric elevator, and other miscellaneous expenses, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 20, before the words "to be available," to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$300,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

MARSHALS, DISTRICT ATTORNEYS, CLERKS, AND OTHER EXPENSES OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

For assistants to the Attorney General and to United States district attorneys employed by the Attorney General to aid in special cases, and for payment of foreign counsel employed by the Attorney General in special cases (such counsel shall not be required to take oath of office in accordance with section 366, Revised Statutes of the United States), $300,000, to be available for expenditure in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Department of Labor," on page 32, after line 21, to insert:

IMMIGRATION STATIONS.

The appropriation of $11,000 made in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1922 for new service pumps for water supply, including installation, at Ellis Island, N. Y., is hereby made available for a new service pump for water supply, including installation of present salt-water suction connections to existing pumps, and also for extension of present sewerage system at and near the northwestern portion of Ellis Island; also for extension of suction and discharge piping between pumps and new reserve water-supply tank.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Immigration Service," on page 33, after line 8, to insert:

For the enforcement of the laws regulating immigration of aliens into the United States, including the same objects specified under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1922, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Children's Bureau," on page 34, line 9, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "$2,400" and to insert "$2,000," so as to read:

For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act for the promotion of the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy, and for other purposes," approved November 23, 1921, including printing and binding, $490,000, of which sum $240,000 shall be for equal apportionment among the States without reference to population, and $250,000 shall be for apportionment among the States with reference to population and for administrative expenses in accordance with said act: Provided, That no salary shall be paid from the portion of this appropriation allotted for administrative purposes at a rate exceeding $2,000 per annum except the following: One at $3,600, 1 at $3,500, and 1 at $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Naval Establishment," on page 36, after line 8, to insert:

Payment to Dona Concepcion Cruz: To pay to Dona Concepcion Cruz, sole next of kin of Francisco R. Cruz, the amount found by the court of the first instance of the city of Manila to be the value of a casco taken by the United States Navy in 1899 from the said Francisco R. Cruz, $350.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is another private claim. I reserve the right to make a point of order, and ask that it be passed over temporarily.

Mr. WARREN. That was the finding of a court.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It was the finding of a court in Manila, but there is no law authorizing the payment of it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to ask the Senator a question. On page 33 we just passed an item under the Immigration Service, $150,000. The Senator will remember that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] offered an amendment calling for $150,000 in the other bill, which we agreed to look out for.

Mr. WARREN. The other will be dropped from that bill if this goes through.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understood that we were to look out for that in this bill if it was dropped.

Mr. WARREN. This is a deficiency, and the other would not be effective until after the 1st of July. Hence the intention and the understanding that when this item goes into the pending bill the other will be dropped out in conference.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is all right, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). The amendment, on page 36, to insert lines 9 to 13, inclusive, will be passed over.

The next amendment was, under the head "Post Office Department," on page 38, line 21, to increase the appropriation for fuel and repairs to heating, lighting, ice, and power plant, including repairs to elevators, purchase and exchange of tools, and electric supplies, and removal of ashes, from "$4,000" to "$10,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 2, to increase the appropriation for reimbursement of the Government Printing Office for the cost of furnishing steam for heating and electric current for lighting and power to the Post Office Department building at Massachusetts Avenue and North Capitol Street, District of Columbia, from "$8,000" to "$12,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 2, to insert:

Not exceeding $3,000 additional may be expended for telephone service and not exceeding $500 additional may be expended for the purchase and exchange of law books, books of reference, railway guides, city directories, and books necessary to conduct the business of the department, out of the appropriation "Contingent expenses, Post Office Department, miscellaneous items, 1922," in the act approved March 3, 1921.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of Postal Service, office of Postmaster General, to be paid out of the postal revenues, on page 39, after line 13, to insert:

For gas, electric power, and light, and the repair of machinery, United States Post Office Department equipment shops building, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 18, to insert:

OFFICE OF CHIEF INSPECTOR.

For payment of rewards for the detection, arrest, and conviction of post-office burglars, robbers, and highway mail robbers: Provided, That rewards may be paid, in the discretion of the Postmaster General, when an offender of the class mentioned was killed in the act of committing the crime or in resisting lawful arrest: And provided further, That of the amount herein appropriated not to exceed $10,000 may be expended, in the discretion of the Postmaster General, for the purpose of securing information concerning violations of the postal laws and for services and information looking toward the apprehension of criminals, $50,000.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I reserve the right to make a point of order against the amendment beginning on line 20 on the ground that it is new legislation, which would require the return of the bill to the committee. I just ask that it be passed over, and reserve the right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, under the head "Department of State," on page 42, after line 3, to insert:

EMBASSY, LEGATION, AND CONSULAR BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Purchase of embassy building and grounds at Santiago, Chile: For the purchase of an embassy building and grounds at Santiago, Chile, and for making necessary minor repairs and alterations in the building to put it in proper condition, in addition to the appropriation for this purpose made in the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation act approved June 4, 1920, $20,000.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is new legislation. I ask that it be passed over and reserve the right to make a point of order.

Mr. WARREN. I do not wish to be understood as accepting the remarks that these amendments call for new legislation, because they do not. I am willing to have them passed over if the Senator requests, but not on that ground.

Mr. POINDEXTER. May I ask the Senator for information, as the question is up, if there is any law authorizing the purchase of these buildings and grounds?

Mr. WARREN. It is very specific, and if the Senator could have seen what the subcommittee saw, he would have been very much pleased, I know. There is a general law which provides that these buildings may be constructed as embassies, provided they shall not cost over $150,000. In this particular case there was a building which cost, together with fine grounds, some $500,000 or $600,000, a beautiful structure. We had the pictures before us. During the bad times the owner failed before the completion of the building and the Government got an option at $130,000, but when they take up the option, of course it will take considerable money to put it in order for use, and this $20,000 is within the law and limit and within their rights, and is to be used to complete the building.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I withdraw the request I made in regard to this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for contingent expenses of the Treasury Department, on page 43, after line 16, to insert:

For purchase of gas, electric current for lighting and power purposes, gas and electric-light fixtures, electric-light wiring and material, candles, candlesticks, drop-lights and tubing, gas burners, gas torches, globes, lanterns, and wicks, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Internal-Revenue Service," on page 44, after line 10, to insert:

Refunding taxes illegally collected: For refunding taxes illegally collected under the provisions of sections 3220 and 3689, Revised Statutes, as amended by act of February 24, 1919, including the payment of claims accruing prior to July 1, 1920, without special authorization and appropriation by Congress in each individual case: Provided, That a report shall be made to Congress of the disbursements hereunder as required by the act of February 24, 1919, $27,468,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public Buildings, Operating Expenses," on page 46, after line 13, to insert:

Operating force: For such personal services as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary in connection with the care, maintenance, and repair of all public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1922, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "War Department," at the top of page 48, to insert:

MEDICAL AND HOSPITAL DEPARTMENT.

For amount required to pay adjudicated awards for lands condemned for use by the War Department at Walter Reed General Hospital, Washington, $94,703.44.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, at the end of line 20, to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$2,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

ENGINEER DEPARTMENT.

Washington Monument: For fuel, lights, oil, waste, packing, tools, matches, paints, brushes, brooms, lanterns, rope, nails, screws, lead, electric lights, heating apparatus, oil stoves for elevator car and upper and lower floors; repairs to engines, boilers, dynamos, elevator, and repairs of all kinds connected with the Monument and machinery; and purchase of all necessary articles for keeping the Monument, machinery, elevator, and electric plant in good order, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, at the end of line 25, to strike out "$266.37" and insert "$1,105.37," so as to make the paragraph read:

River and harbor work: For payment of claims adjusted and settled under section 4 of the river and harbor appropriation act approved June 25, 1910, and certified to Congress during the present session in House Document No. 168, $1,105.37.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, after line 10, to insert:

The appropriation for "Pay, etc., of the Army, 1922," shall be available to pay the expenses incident to carrying into effect the provisions of the act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish free transportation and subsistence from Europe and Siberia to the United States for certain destitute discharged soldiers and their wives and children," approved June 30, 1921, under such regulations as have been or may hereafter be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Judgments, United States courts," on page 50, line 11, after the word "in," to insert "Senate Document No. — and in," so as to read:

For payment of the final judgments and decrees, including costs of suits, which have been rendered under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," certified to Congress during the present session by the Attorney General in Senate Document No. — and in House Document No. 173, and which have not been appealed, namely:

Mr. WARREN. I move to insert in the committee amendment, after the word "numbered," the figures "160," so as to read:

Senate Document No. 160 and in.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Judgments, United States courts," on page 50, line 15, under the Navy Department, to increase the appropriation from "$11,803.29" to "$13,370.79."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 15, to insert:

Under the United States Housing Corporation, $2,867.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 18, after the words "In all," to strike out "$11,148.42" and to insert "$18,583.42," so as to make the paragraph read:

In all, $18,583.42, together with such additional sum as may be necessary to pay interest on the respective judgments at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from the date thereof until the time this appropriation is made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Judgments, Court of Claims," on page 51, line 1, after the word "in," to insert "Senate Document No. —— and in"; in line 4, after the words "War Department," to strike out "$29,147.69" and to insert "$102,296.93"; in line 5, after the words "Navy Department," to strike out "$47,361.46" and to insert "$138,586.46"; in line 6, after the words "Post Office Department," to strike out "$52,327.60" and to insert "$105,146.25"; in line 8, after the words "Interior Department," to strike out "$50,000" and to insert "$100,228.93"; and in line 9, after the words "In all," to strike out "$212,800.85" and to insert "$480,222.67," so as to read:

Under the Interior Department, $100,228.93;
In all, $480,222.67.

Mr. WARREN. I move after the word "numbered" in the committee amendment to insert the numerals "161," so as to read:

Senate Document No. 161 and in.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, after line 19, to insert as section 3 the following:

AUDITED CLAIMS.

SEC. 3. That for the payment of the following claims, certified to be due by the General Accounting Office under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, and under appropriations heretofore treated as permanent, being for the service of the fiscal year 1919 and prior years, unless otherwise stated, and which have been certified to Congress under section 2 of the act of July 7, 1884, as fully set forth in Senate Document No. ——, reported to Congress at its present session, there is appropriated as follows:

Mr. WARREN. I send to the desk the figure to be inserted in the blank on page 66, line 6.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 66, line 6, insert the numerals "162" after the word "numbered," so as to read:

As fully set forth in Senate Document No. 162.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, line 17, to change the section number from "3" to "4."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the first amendment passed over.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 28, line 16, the committee propose to insert:

CREDIT IN ACCOUNTS OF GEORGE W. EVANS.

The General Accounting Office is authorized and directed to credit the accounts of George W. Evans, chief disbursing clerk Department of the Interior, with the payment of $480, made to F. W. Bolgiano & Co., Washington, D. C., for three snow plows delivered June 30, 1920, per voucher No. 2336, quarter ended September 30, 1920, from the appropriation for "Improving the Capitol Grounds, 1920."

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think under the rule that is clearly subject to a point of order against a private claim not authorized by existing law in an appropriation bill, but the chairman of the committee and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS], a member of the committee, have made a very convincing statement to me of the meritorious character of this claim, and while I think the committee ought to be governed by its own rules, I will not make an objection against the amendment at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. On behalf of the committee I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 25, line 11, it is proposed to strike out "$60,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$120,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. On behalf of the committee I offer another small amendment to come in on the same page.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 25, line 19, it is proposed to strike out the words "Document No. 162" and to insert in lieu thereof "Documents Nos. 162 and 198."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. On behalf of the committee, I offer another amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 25, line 20, it is proposed to strike out "$736.23" and to insert "$843.27."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The next amendment passed over was on page 39, after line 18, to insert:

OFFICE OF CHIEF INSPECTOR.

For payment of rewards for the detection, arrest, and conviction of post-office burglars, robbers, and highway mail robbers: Provided, That rewards may be paid, in the discretion of the Postmaster General, when an offender of the class mentioned was killed in the act of committing the crime or in resisting lawful arrest: And provided further, That of the amount herein appropriated not to exceed $10,000 may be expended, in the discretion of the Postmaster General, for the purpose of securing information concerning violations of the postal laws and for services and information looking toward the apprehension of criminals, $50,000.

Mr. POINDEXTER. May I ask the chairman of the committee upon what law that amendment is based?

Mr. WARREN. There is a very old law providing for private detectives, and so forth, the administration of which has been running along under annual appropriations of about $25,000, perhaps. This amendment carries a somewhat larger amount, and also contains additional language as to the appropriation being used for the payment of rewards. In fact, it has always been used for the payment of rewards or for services.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is a great amount of legislation on this bill, Mr. President. Of course, if the appropriation is already provided for by law the proviso "That rewards may be paid, in the discretion of the Postmaster General, when an offender of the class mentioned was killed in the act of committing the crime or resisting lawful arrest," and so forth, would not be necessary in this proposed act. I think the amendment is clearly subject to the objection that it is new legislation.

I may also call attention to one or two other places in the bill, Mr. President, which we have already gone over, that contain new legislation.

Mr. WARREN. Let me say to the Senator from Washington, before he proceeds to the other matter of which he speaks, that this amendment is not to provide for next year, but it is to pay rewards that have already been granted, the time for the payment of which will approach before the end of the year in which they are due. Not to make this appropriation would simply be to leave the Postal Service without funds to pay amounts due under contracts which they have made.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is an argument to the merits of the question rather than to the point of order; but I shall not make the point of order. I merely want to call attention to the violation of the rule, and I will make no objection to the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am glad the Senator from Washington is not going to make the point of order, although I think the amendment is subject to the point of order, because a part of it is new legislation. However, if the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] withdraws his objection I shall not make the point of order against the amendment. The proviso, however, is clearly new legislation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. My colleague has withdrawn his point of order against the amendment, but I do not myself think that it is subject to a point of order. I am satisfied that there is a law authorizing the payment of such rewards.

Mr. OVERMAN. This is an amendment to the law.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The proviso is simply a limitation.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is an amendment to the law, because it provides for paying a reward for the killing of a mail robber.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It only applies to the particular deficiencies for this year.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator from Washington will read the law he will find that this is an amendment to the law.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina what his view is as to the merits of the provision, aside from the question of a point of order? Does the Senator think it is a meritorious provision?

Mr. OVERMAN. I must confess that I made some objection to providing a reward for the killing of a man who may have been detected in the act of committing a crime. I never have liked such rewards as that to be offered by the Government. However, I will not make further objection, though I made my objection and fought the proposition in the committee. I repeat, however, that I think a part of the provision is subject to a point of order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The difficulty is that there is no opportunity in the Senate, or in the committee, as a matter of fact, the committee not being a legislative committee, strictly speaking, to investigate the merits of these legislative provisions. So far as I know about the matter of the protection of the mails I am heartily in favor of the vigorous steps which are being taken by the Government to protect the mails from the wave of banditry that seems to be jeopardizing their safe passage.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the reason I waived my objection to the amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But we ought not, because of the pressure for meritorious legislation, to use appropriation bills, right in the face of the new rule which has been adopted, as a vehicle for obtaining such legislation. However, I will withdraw my objection to the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I agree with the Senator that the proposed legislation is meritorious, but where an attempt is made to amend the old law I think such an amendment is subject to a point of order. I shall not, however, make the point of order, but shall let the amendment go.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 36, after line 8, to insert:

Payment to Dona Concepcion Cruz: To pay to Dona Concepcion Cruz, sole next of kin of Francisco R. Cruz, the amount found by the court of the first instance of the city of Manila to be the value of a casco taken by the United States Navy in 1899 from the said Francisco R. Cruz, $350.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I presume, in view of the fact that the claim provided for in the amendment which has just been read has been submitted to a court at Manila, that it is a meritorious claim. A judgment was rendered, and I assume there was a fair trial and an adequate investigation of the matter. The item, however, is put into this appropriation bill in violation of the fourth paragraph of Rule XVI, which prohibits the insertion of private claims in appropriation bills unless they are authorized by law or by treaty; and this is authorized neither by a law of the United States—of course, the rule refers to a law of the United States—nor by a treaty.

Mr. WARREN. About half of this bill is taken up with appropriations for the payment of judgments of courts and of audited claims, which are always included in deficiency bills, and are within the law. As to this particular claim, there is no reason of which I know why it should be excluded, when it has been adjudged to be due by the courts of a country which is under the jurisdiction of the United States, and is for the payment of property which the Government took away from the private owner.

Mr. POINDEXTER. However, it is merely a claim; that is all it is.

Mr. WARREN. Everything which is contained in the bill in the nature of a judgment is a claim. The Senator states that this is a claim; but it is an adjusted claim, and when an adjusted claim is presented it is in order on an appropriation bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, this lady, Dona Concepcion Cruz, may be a very meritorious and estimable person; she may be in need of this money, and she has obtained a judgment for it. I shall not make any objection to the amendment, although it is subject to the point of order that it is a private claim.

Mr. FLETCHER rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection——

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I was merely going to appeal to the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], although I know nothing about this case, on the ground that the claim has been 23 years in the course of being adjusted, and if we do not provide for its payment now I am afraid the claimant will die before the matter is settled.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The claim ought to go to the Committee on Claims and be reported in the regular way; but I shall not make any objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask unanimous consent that it may be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, on page 27, after line 21:

RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

For construction work upon reclamation projects authorized under existing law, $16,200,000, to be repaid to the Treasury from the reclamation fund when funds shall be available for that purpose.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it is probably unnecessary to discuss the merits of the amendment. Of course, the Senator from Washington knows that is entirely out of order from every standpoint. I think he intends to ask unanimous consent that it may be adopted.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have asked unanimous consent.

Mr. WARREN. I do not wish to thwart the will of the Senate in any way, but I desire to say that the amendment is of such an extreme nature that I fear, even though it might be put into the bill, it could never be protected by the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like the Senator to let the amendment go in.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator has asked unanimous consent for the adoption of the amendment, and I will leave the matter to the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to know of the Senator from Washington if this amendment provides for an appropriation of $16,000,000?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; it provides for an appropriation; or, rather, it is in the nature of a loan, to be repaid from the reclamation fund. I will say to the Senator that it is in accordance with the estimates which have been made, except that the estimates, although they cover each one of the projects which go to make up the total, do not call for quite so large a sum as is provided for in the amendment, but very nearly as large, as disclosed by the Book of Estimates. This amount is to carry on the development of projects upon which construction work has already been begun. It is in accordance with the conclusion arrived at after very careful examination and is based upon the report of the Director of the Reclamation Service to the committee on public works on reclamation of the President's unemployment conference.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no doubt that the amendment is in line with estimates, but we are now considering a deficiency bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And the amendment, I think, provides for a deficiency appropriation.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the amendment should have been placed on the bill in which provision was made for the Reclamation Service. I feel compelled to make the point of order against the amendment being placed on a deficiency bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will not the Senator allow it to go to conference and have it considered in connection with the report, which I shall insert in the RECORD?

Mr. OVERMAN. No. If the Senator please, why did he not propose it as an amendment to the bill in which we provided for reclamation projects? This amendment is against the rule, and I can not agree to it, because this is a deficiency bill, and the amendment proposed by the Senator is not a deficiency in any sense of the word.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What point of order does the Senator from North Carolina make against the amendment?

Mr. OVERMAN. I make the point of order that it is not estimated for; that the pending bill is a deficiency bill; and that this amendment has no business at all on a deficiency bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But the amendment is estimated for.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understood the Senator to say that a certain portion of it was estimated for.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I stated that it was not estimated for in the entire amount——

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But each one of these projects has been estimated for.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will ask the Senator if any committee has reported on this item?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No committee of the Senate has reported on it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I must make the point of order on the amendment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, in connection with the amendment which I have proposed, I ask leave to print in the RECORD the report of the Reclamation Service to the Committee on Public Works on Reclamation, contained in the report of the President's conference on unemployment, on pages 92 and 93.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

APPENDIX L.—LETTER FROM RECLAMATION SERVICE.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES RECLAMATION SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., October 7, 1921.

Mr. O. T. MALLERY,
Secretary Public Works Committee of the Unemployment Conference,
Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In accordance with your request upon the occasion of your recent visit to this office, the following statement of the possibilities of Reclamation Service work in stabilizing employment conditions has been prepared along the lines of your memorandum of inquiry.

This statement is intended to supersede our memorandum on this subject of September 13, which was based upon inadequate information and a misapprehension of the scope of Secretary Hoover's inquiry.

The Reclamation Service consistently pursues the policy of investigating in advance the feasibility of and preparing plans and estimates for proposed irrigation projects throughout the West to the fullest extent of available funds. While our appropriations for such work have been small, they have been supplemented by contributions from the various States, irrigation districts, and other interested organizations, so that at the present time we have more or less complete data on a large number of projects throughout the West. Investigations of a number of these projects have been carried to the point where construction could be immediately initiated. On many others we have sufficient data to justify their authorization for construction, but some additional detail study would be required before the actual "dirt moving" could be started.

The Reclamation Service work is especially adapted for the stabilization of employment conditions. Even on our most northern projects such operations as tunneling, rock work, and heavy excavation can be carried on successfully throughout the winter, and where some operations are interfered with there is frequently sufficient range of climate on the project to permit the transfer of employees and equipment economically from one class of work to another and keep them employed throughout the year. For example, a force may be employed on storage work in the mountains during the summer and a part transferred to canal construction on the lower-lying project lands during the winter. Again, on partially completed projects operations may often be arranged to furnish employment for many of the settlers and their teams during the months when farm work is slack. On our southern projects winter is frequently the most favorable period of the year for efficient construction work.

In any plan for improving employment conditions extension of the work of the Reclamation Service is particularly deserving of consideration. Not only does it provide a means of stabilizing employment conditions through the direct employment of engineers of all grades, survey men, mechanics, construction foremen, skilled and unskilled laborers, etc., the very classes who suffer most from the seasonal nature of much of their work, but through the demand thus created for construction materials, machinery, and supplies should help materially to improve conditions in other industries.

Furthermore, it is to be remembered that this outlay is of the nature of an investment. The cost of all projects is eventually to be returned to the Federal Treasury by the settlers who are thus furnished opportunities to make homes for themselves while engaging in the production of one of the fundamental forms of national wealth.

Reclamation Service projects now under construction have already demonstrated beyond question the economic value to the entire country of this work. On a number of these projects funds could be efficiently expended during the approaching winter, pushing them toward completion, and furnishing direct employment to probably 16,000 employees and indirectly (furnishing construction materials, machinery, etc.) to half as many more. A list of these projects and proposed expenditures on each follows:

State.	Project.	Amount.
Colorado	Grand Valley	$1,200,000
Idaho	Boise	1,200,000
	Minidoka	2,000,000
Montana	Sun River	800,000
Nebraska-Wyoming	North Platte	2,000,000
Nevada	Newlands	1,000,000
New Mexico-Texas	Rio Grande	1,400,000
Oregon-California	Klamath	1,000,000
Washington	Yakima	3,600,000
Wyoming	Riverton	1,250,000
	Shoshone	750,000
Total		16,200,000

In addition to the work on projects already under construction indicated in the foregoing list, several projects in the Southwest, which have been thoroughly investigated by our engineers, could be taken up immediately.

The following table shows the immediate appropriations and the additional estimated ultimate expenditure required:

State.	Project.	Immediate expenditure.	Additional to complete.
Arizona	Boulder Canyon Dam	$5,000,000	$50,000,000
California	All-American Canal and laterals	15,000,000	20,000,000
Arizona	Parker	4,000,000	10,000,000
	San Carlos	4,000,000	10,000,000
		28,000,000	90,000,000

This work would furnish employment for five months to between 25,000 and 30,000 men on the work itself and indirectly to between 10,000 and 15,000 more.

Settlers on Reclamation Service projects under the terms of the act of August 13, 1914 (38 Stat., 688), are given 20 years within which to make their payments. These payments are graduated so that the returns for the first few years after the completion of the project are relatively small. An arrangement might be suggested similar to that of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., 835), as amended by the act of June 12, 1917 (40 Stat., 149), whereby a stipulated amount is repaid from the reclamation fund to the general fund of the Treasury each year until the advances are repaid.

There is being forwarded you, under separate cover, copy of a report on the development of unused lands, which contains the results of an investigation made by the Reclamation Service under the direction of Congress in 1919–20. This investigation shows the existence of large areas of swamp and cut-over as well as arid lands in the United States, the reclamation and settlement of which would furnish large opportunities of employment. The construction activities of the Reclamation Service, however, have always been restricted by law to the arid and semiarid States of the West, and Congress has never authorized any of the work outlined in the above report.

SUMMARY.

1. An appropriation of $16,200,000 for expenditure on projects now under construction would provide direct employment for 16,000 or more men during the coming winter and would not commit us to further appropriations.

2. An additional appropriation of $28,000,000 would provide employment for 28,000 more men, permitting work to be begun on four new projects. These four projects would require for completion a future appropriation of $90,000,000 additional.

3. The above total of 44,000 men employed should be increased by probably 50 per cent to cover increased activities in other lines occasioned by the demands of the above work.

4. Opportunity exists to provide employment and settlement opportunities by the reclamation of swamp and cut-over lands throughout the country, but such reclamation is outside the scope of Reclamation Service activities under present law.

Yours, very truly,

OTTAMAR HAMELE,
Acting Director.

Mr. POINDEXTER. On page 22, I move to strike out the paragraph beginning at line 21 and ending on line 15, page 23.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 22, after line 20, it is proposed to strike out:

BUREAU OF PLANT INDUSTRY.

White-pine blister rust control: For meeting the emergency caused by the appearance of the white-pine blister rust in the white and sugar pine regions, threatening the extensive Federal holdings of these essential woods as well as private and State holdings, thus endangering the entire supply thereof, $150,000, which sum shall be available for investigation and control work on the white-pine blister rust in the white-pine and sugar-pine areas, in such manner as in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture may best accomplish the suppression of the disease, and shall remain available until March 31, 1923: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay the cost or value of trees or other property injured or destroyed. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to incur all necessary expenses, including the employment of such persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, in cooperation with such authorities of the States concerned, organizations, or individuals, as he may deem necessary to accomplish such purposes.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Washington proposes to strike out the entire paragraph?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator probably knows more than I do about that matter, as it affects the Pacific coast section of the country. It is an item which first came before the committee, I think, two years ago, and was pressed with tremendous vigor, it being alleged that the white pine was dying out because of the so-called blister rust. So we made an appropriation to investigate and to arrest the ravages of the disease. The Agricultural Department has come now to the committee with a request for the item; the House allowed $150,000, but confined it to the Pacific coast. New England is suffering from the blister rust, and the committee, without increasing the amount, simply struck out the words "of the Pacific coast," so as to leave the appropriation applicable wherever it may be needed. If the Senator wishes to exclude his section of the country from the expenditure, I still think that he should be willing to allow some portion of it, or all of it, to remain in the bill, in order that it may be applied to the State of Maine and other New England States.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection to that at all.

Mr. WARREN. Those States, I understand, are suffering very severely on account of the blister rust.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not advised about the condition in Maine, but there are no white-pine trees to amount to anything in the western part of the State of Washington, where investigations have been carried on. I am informed that $150,000 is asked for work in the West which, I am told, on the most reliable authority in which I have the utmost confidence, could be done for $5,000. It is only as to the West that I am concerned. An appropriation may be needed in Maine or in other New England States.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Appropriations Committee has amended this provision by striking out the words "of the Pacific coast," so that the appropriation will be available for use throughout the entire country. In my State a great deal of trouble is being experienced on account of the blister rust, and relief is greatly desired. They are taking care of the situation there for the next year, but they need relief. So I hope very much the Senator from Washington will not insist on having the item stricken out.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I withdraw the motion which I have made, and now move to strike out "$150,000," in line 2, on page 23, and to insert "$50,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 23, line 2, it is proposed to strike out "$150,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$50,000."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, does the Senator's last amendment contemplate that no part of the appropriation shall go to the western part of the country?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; that is my intention, for none of it is needed there. It is simply a piece of extravagance which discredits the Agriculture Department and discredits the Congress to be making large appropriations which are not needed.

Mr. WARREN. I am entirely willing to join the Senator in any economy which may safely be practiced, and if the representatives of other sections of the country, notably New England, whom I see present, desire the appropriation cut down, I have no objection.

Mr. LODGE. I know, Mr. President, the appropriation is very much needed in northern New England, and I hope the item will not be stricken out entirely.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I call the attention of the Senator to the circumstance in connection with the amendment which I have last proposed, that this item was put in the bill in the House of Representatives solely for use in the West. I have called the attention of the Senate to the fact that this is a piece of extravagance. It is an appropriation for something which does not exist. There is no white-pine blister rust in the State of Washington. I have a mass of evidence here on that subject from experts, which I am perfectly willing to present to the proper authorities. I have moved to reduce the amount from $150,000 to $50,000 for those reasons. If the chairman of the committee wants to insist on appropriating money where it is not needed I will not insist upon further argument in the matter.

Mr. WARREN. Let us trade in the matter. Suppose we reduce it to $100,000. I feel it would be too much to reduce it to $50,000, because the reports I have received from various sections of the country seem to indicate that that much at least will be required.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the committee what information he has as to why the House restricted the appropriation to the West? My impression, from information submitted to the Agricultural Committee, is that the ravages of this blister have been greater in the New England States and on the Atlantic coast than elsewhere. I should like to inquire if there is not need for the appropriation of $150,000? Is the condition not one which should be taken care of in various portions of the country, rather than that the appropriation should be restricted to the West?

Mr. WARREN. The committee struck out the words making the appropriation applicable only to the West. I am uninformed as to how or why that provision was put in the bill, but that is the way it came to us. We have stricken it out, and made the appropriation applicable to the whole country. I am entirely willing, of course, to reduce appropriations provided the purpose of the appropriation may properly be carried out. It is simply a matter of the extent to which this disease is ravaging the white pine in various portions of the country. I would rather appropriate $500,000 than to have the forests destroyed.

Mr. SMITH. But it perplexes one who is not familiar with the situation when the appropriation is restricted to the West and a Senator from a State that would be one of the beneficiaries of the appropriation gets up here and says that they do not need this money in that section. Senators from other sections say they need it in their sections. I was wondering why it was restricted to the West, when doubtless there is need for it in other regions than the West. If they do not need it in the West—and those who drew this amendment seem to think that there is where this disease is—have we any evidence at all that this extra appropriation is needed in the East?

Mr. WARREN. There is no doubt about that. The disease came over from across the water some years ago, and no attention was paid to it in its infancy, but it has gotten a very large hold in New England.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I will read what was said on that subject in the hearings taken before the House committee.

Mr. WARREN. I was just about to refer to that; but I shall be glad if the Senator will read it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Dr. Taylor, representing the Agricultural Department, says:

> This item, which is a deficiency item of $150,000, is made necessary by the discovery of the white-pine blister rust in the Pacific Northwest during the past autumn.

Apparently it was discovered out there just this last fall. I do not find that he mentions any State at all—as to where it is. He simply says "the Pacific Northwest."

He goes on then to describe the nature of the disease and the remedy. Apparently that is all that he says here.

> Mr. ANDERSON. And what you have just said refers entirely to the infestations in the Eastern States.
> Dr. TAYLOR. Yes, sir; from Minnesota eastward and chiefly east of Lake Michigan.
> Mr. ANDERSON. Where it is a problem of controlling the spread of the disease?
> Dr. TAYLOR. Where it is a question of a progressive, systematic clearing out of the currants and gooseberries and controlling the disease, for the disease is present in practically all of that area.

Apparently it started in the East, and it has gone out there. He says further:

> In September last the disease for the first time was discovered west of Minnesota and the corresponding portions of Canada. It was discovered in British Columbia near Puget Sound, in the vicinity, I believe, of the city of Vancouver. That immediately caused careful scouting in the Puget Sound territory of the State of Washington, and prior to the setting in of winter infection had been found in four localities in the State of Washington, all near Puget Sound, so that we have at once upon us the problem of protecting the 8,000,000 acres, approximately, of merchantable susceptible pine in the Cascade and Rocky Mountain areas, of which approximately one-third is in the national forests and is therefore Government property.
> Mr. ANDERSON. Is there now any infection in the national forests?
> Dr. TAYLOR. There is no infection in the national forests now. This map will show the locations of the known infections in British Columbia and in the State of Washington, which are close to the sound.

Apparently he had a map. I know nothing about it myself, Mr. President.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I just want to read in that connection a quotation from a report of the inspectors of the department of agriculture of the State of Washington:

> In reference to the white-pine blister rust, I investigated it at Mount Vernon and sent some of the leaves to Frank at Puyallup for identification of the disease. We had to dig them out of the ground in order to get samples. At the nursery we looked over their stock and could not find anything that would resemble the disease, but the nurseryman tells me that these men came up there—> and took two trees away for identification, but said they could not find any traces on the trees that were left, but felt certain it was there. On the currants in the nursery they were not certain. Then these men came back and told Chenolwith that they had decided it was the white-pine blister rust, and said that they wanted to take it to Portland to show it down there, but if I remember correctly I did not see nor hear any mention made of it.

I am informed from the same authority that they have investigated scientifically each one of these places reported by the agents sent out by the Department of Agriculture, and have been unable to find any trace whatever of white-pine blister rust there. It is only in the interest of economy that I call the attention of the Senate to this fact. Nobody can find any white-pine blister rust in our country. They said there was some on some small bushes in a park in Vancouver. If the Senate insists on appropriating this large amount of money, $150,000, for a part of the country where there is not any white-pine blister rust, I have performed my duty in calling attention to it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion to the Senator? Possibly the reason why the House limits the appropriation to the West, or the Pacific coast, is that there is already an adequate appropriation for taking care of this disease in the East. This is a deficiency bill. Perhaps it carries an appropriation to take care of the disease in the West only because there is no appropriation for that, but there may be an appropriation for the East. I do not know as to that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think possibly that is true.

Mr. HALE. No; there is no appropriation for the East. They have had a shortage already, and our people are asking now for help. There are no appropriations that will take care of it.

Mr. WARREN. This is work that has to be done in the early part of the year; and in looking over the evidence I find, while I think the Senator from Washington undoubtedly is stating the case as it appears there, that this is one of the appropriations in which they have to have the cooperation of the States, and the money can not be expended for anything else; so I hope that the whole amount may stand as it is, at $150,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to read to my colleague another statement from Dr. Taylor. I assume, of course, that Dr. Taylor is an expert in this matter. I know nothing about it, but I do not think we ought to take any risk in the matter if there is any danger.

The first statement I read shows that they discovered this disease out in our State last fall. He says, further:

> The disease is difficult to determine on the pines except through repeated inspections, for this reason: That a pine tree when first infected does not show the infection the first year; there may be merely a single needle or two through which the disease gains entrance. The next year it creeps back into the twig, and if that twig is high, of course, it does not show, and then, too, it may remain invisible to ordinary external inspection for three or four years after it is in the inner bark of the twig—

And so forth. Assuming that he knows what he is talking about as to the character of this disease, it seems to me that we ought not to take any chance in the matter. While we might save $150,000, yet, if he is correct, we might lose several million dollars' worth of property in our State, as well as in other sections of the Northwest. I rather think we would take a great deal of chance if we were to strike this out.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I want to call attention to a statement from the director of agriculture of the State of Washington. It is dated just a few weeks ago—February 14, 1922. He says:

Referring to the campaign for the purpose of raising $150,000 to make certain investigations in reference to pine blister rust—

Mind you, this is not to extinguish white pine blister rust known to exist, but it is to make certain investigations and find out whether or not it is there. Our people have already made the investigation, and say that it is not there.

Referring to the campaign for the purpose of raising $150,000 to make certain investigations in reference to pine blister rust, I find in Senate bill 2924, presented by Senator KEYES of New Hampshire, request for $150,000 for the West and $125,000 for the East. The Secretary of Agriculture has been induced to recommend the $150,000 for the West. I am not in any position to know the needs of the East. I will regret very much if the Secretary of Agriculture is imposed upon in this manner, as it will eventually reflect on the department when all the facts in the case are brought out. If this matter can not be killed entirely, try to see that not to exceed $50,000 is spent.

I think you should have a confidential talk with the Secretary of Agriculture. I am positive of my grounds, as presented to you in a previous communication. The State of Washington will be calling on the Agriculture Department at Washington continually for assistance, and we can not afford to be placed in a false position.

I submit the matter upon that statement.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I may add a word to what I have already said, I am informed that in the State of Massachusetts we have white pine blister rust, and the State is now paying money to fight the disease; and I certainly hope that this appropriation will not be cut down.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have here a matter that no doubt is legislation. We have not offered it in the bill. It is a matter that came up very lately. The auditing and accounting department formerly with the Bureau of War Risk Insurance has all been turned over to the Comptroller General and his assistants for action. Under the law as it exists the settlements must be made and come into the General Accounting Office in a certain number of days, which they claim is much too short a time, and they want to have extended the time in which they have to audit these matters. I have here a letter from the Acting Director of the Veterans' Bureau. I am sending the amendment to the desk in order to ask unanimous consent for its consideration; but I ask first that this letter may be read before the amendment is offered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the letter will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU,
Washington, March 10, 1922.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Chairman Appropriations Committee,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WARREN: In accordance with the provisions of the act creating the United States Veterans' Bureau, the general work was physically decentralized into 14 territorial districts, which made necessary the appointment of special disbursing agents in each district. The present statutes provide that disbursing agents' accounts must be administratively examined and transmitted to the General Accounting Office within 20 days.

In view of the tremendous amount of detail involved in the examination of such large accounts as these special disbursing agents' accounts have proven to be, it is requested that a rider be attached to the second deficiency bill extending the time for such examination from 20 to 60 days, and the following wording is suggested:

"That the time for examination of monthly accounts covering expenditures from appropriations for the United States Veterans' Bureau by the special disbursing agents of the bureau, after the date of actual receipt and before transmitting the same to the General Accounting Office, as limited by section 12, act of July 31, 1894 (28 Stat., 205–211), be extended from 20 to 60 days."

* * * * * * *

Yours, very truly,

GEORGE E. IJAMS, Acting Director.

Mr. WARREN. I offer the amendment to which I have referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the proper place in the bill, the following:

That the time for examination of monthly accounts covering expenditures from appropriations for the United States Veterans' Bureau by the special disbursing agent of the bureau after the date of actual receipt and before transmitting the same to the General Accounting Office as limited by section 12, act of July 31, 1894 (28 Stat., 205–211), be extended from 20 to 60 days.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, before the bill is disposed of, I desire to offer an amendment.

On page 50, after line 4, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 50, after line 4, it is proposed to insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to rent, under such terms and conditions and for such periods as he may prescribe, to the adjutant general of the State of Alabama the buildings and premises of the United States situated at the northeast corner of Second Avenue and Eighteenth Street North, in Birmingham, Ala., known as the old Government building, or such parts thereof as may be properly utilized by the Alabama National Guard and other military and patriotic organizations.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I want to say that a bill of similar effect has been favorably reported and is on the calendar. The old post-office building in Birmingham is not being used now. The Government has moved into a new post office. This is not an advantageous time to sell the old building. The National Guard is made up of many of the boys who served oversea and came back to Alabama, and many of them went back into the National Guard regiments located there. They are anxious to use the building temporarily as an armory, and it can not hurt anything. There is no way to dispose of it.

I have a letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury stating that they have no other use for this building now, or that they do not desire to use it for any other purpose. Until some future time when it may be desired by the Government to dispose of the building in some other way, I desire that these boys may have the opportunity to rent it—of course they will not be able to pay much rent; I do not pretend that they will—at a nominal rental, and use it for an armory and a place for gatherings during that time. It can not hurt anything. Of course I am satisfied that if this amendment becomes a law the Secretary of the Treasury will require them to give proper assurances that the property will be properly taken care of, and therefore I ask that the Senate agree to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator, if he will look at his copy of the bill, whether the amendment had not better go in after line 24 on page 46, under the heading "Public buildings, operating expenses," and so forth, at the foot of the page?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Probably it had. I put it under the War Department because I thought it was a National Guard item; but probably it would be better to have it go where the Senator suggests, and I ask that that be done.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the amendment just agreed to on page 46, after line 24, as a separate paragraph.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

REGULATION OF BANKING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BALL. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 3170, regulating corporations doing a banking business in the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. NORRIS. Reserving the right to object, I should like to hear the bill read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no corporation that is not now engaged in the business of banking in the District of Columbia shall, after the passage of this act, be permitted to enter upon said business in the said District until after it shall have secured the approval and consent of the Comptroller of the Currency; and each one of the officers of such corporation so offending shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I can explain in a very few minutes the object of the bill. Not all of the banks incorporated under the laws of other States and doing business in the District of Columbia are under the control of the Comptroller of the Currency. The national banks, of course, are under the control of the Comptroller of the Currency; the trust companies are under the control of the commissioners; but the banks incorporated in other States really are under nobody's control. Just now there are, I think, 30 being organized here.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, does the Senator state that the laws of the District are such that a corporation can be formed under the corporation laws of some State and come into the District and do a banking business here?

Mr. BALL. That is the law here.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator seeks by this bill to change that?

Mr. BALL. Yes; and I am going to offer an amendment to the bill. We do not know how to bring the banks that are doing business now under this bill, but we want to prevent them from establishing other banks here, branch banks of those already doing business; and I shall offer an amendment for that purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator says, then, that there are those banking institutions now doing business in the District?

Mr. BALL. I can not say how many are doing business here now, but the commissioners wrote me a letter very strongly urging the passage of this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Would the bill put the State banks under the jurisdiction of the Comptroller of the Currency?

Mr. BALL. They are not under his control.

Mr. OVERMAN. What is the purpose of the bill?

Mr. BALL. It requires a 30-day notice before the Comptroller of the Currency will have any control over them whatever.

Mr. OVERMAN. He does not have any control over our State banks.

Mr. BALL. I ask that the Secretary may read the letter from the commissioners. The bill places all the banks under the Comptroller of the Currency except those which are doing business now. It does not place those under him.

Mr. NORRIS. Why not place them under him?

Mr. BALL. The commissioners did not think it possible to do that.

Mr. OVERMAN. It applies only to banks which are operating in the District?

Mr. BALL. Those which are to be organized.

Mr. OVERMAN. The jurisdiction of the comptroller does not reach out and take charge of a bank in a State which has a branch here?

Mr. BALL. I do no know about the branches, but banks organize here under the laws of the States, under their power of incorporation, and they do business here.

Mr. NORRIS. Are State banks examined by the examiners of the States from which they get their charter?

Mr. BALL. They are not.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand it, then, a set of men can get together in the adjoining State of Maryland, let us say, and organize a bank to do business in the District of Columbia, and they will not be under the supervision or control of anybody.

Mr. BALL. That is right.

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly Congress will have authority to provide for the control of banking institutions in the District, even though they are already organized and doing business here.

Mr. BALL. Unless this bill is passed within the next few weeks there will be 30 of them doing business in the District of Columbia.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator says there are some already doing business in the District of Columbia which will not be affected by the bill, and they will continue to do business in the District of Columbia without any examination, and without being responsible to anybody. That condition ought to be remedied. I did not know that such a condition exists here.

Mr. FLETCHER. All the banks doing business in the District of Columbia are under the control or supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency, are they not?

Mr. BALL. All national banks are, but all trust companies are under the control of the commissioners.

Mr. FLETCHER. And all savings banks are under the comptroller, too.

Mr. BALL. The banks which are organized under the laws of the States are really under the control of nobody.

Mr. FLETCHER. If they come here, they would be under the same control other banks are under, namely, the Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. BALL. There is no control under which they are placed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. REED. I do not object to immediate consideration, unless the Senator from Delaware intends to press the bill to passage this afternoon. I am unwilling that a bill which proposes to affect the banking situation in any serious way shall be taken up and passed without consideration and discussion.

Mr. BALL. The only effect this bill would have would be to prevent the further organization of any banks under the laws of the States to come here and do business without getting the consent of the Comptroller of the Currency to do business here. It would place them under the laws which govern in every State and govern all banks doing business here, except those organized under the laws of States and coming here to do business.

Mr. REED. How many of that kind are there here?

Mr. BALL. Not more than three or four. I do not know the exact number.

Mr. REED. How long have they been here?

Mr. BALL. I can not say.

Mr. REED. Has any harm come from it?

Mr. BALL. The commissioners say there is harm coming from it now.

Mr. REED. What commissioners?

Mr. BALL. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. REED. What do they know about the banking business?

Mr. BALL. They have control of the trust companies here. Under the laws of Congress they are authorized to control the trust companies.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the Senator from Missouri did not hear the statement made by the Senator from Delaware, who said a little while ago that there are about 30 of these banks being organized now to do business in the District. I do not know anything about it, but that is the statement he made.

Mr. BALL. I will ask the Secretary to read the letter from the commissioners, which clearly states the conditions.

Mr. CARAWAY. Before that is done may I ask the Senator a question? Under the proposed bill the Commissioners of the District of Columbia would be given the power to refuse to permit banks to be organized here?

Mr. BALL. No; the Comptroller of the Currency is in entire control. The commissioners will have no control except what they have now, namely, over trust companies. The statute provides that the commissioners shall control the organization of trust companies.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is this an effort upon the part of the present banks to shut out other banks? Is that the real purpose of the bill?

Mr. BALL. The bill does not shut out any bank, provided the Comptroller of the Currency is satisfied that it is organized to do a legitimate business.

Mr. CARAWAY. And that there is a need for it. The comptroller would have a right to decline to permit a bank to be organized, because he might say there was already a sufficient number here to meet the local demands.

Mr. BALL. It would give him the same authority that there is in the States, so far as the organization of banks is concerned. There is not a State in the Union where the banking system is not controlled by the State. In the District of Columbia there is no law which puts the control over the banks which get their charter from the States in the hands of anybody.

Mr. REED. I do not want the District of Columbia infested with a lot of wild-cat banking institutions any more than the Senator does, but I want a bill of this kind to have reasonable consideration. I am not going to object to taking it up at this time, in view of the Senator's statement, although I can not remain here myself.

Mr. BALL. Will not the Senator permit the Secretary to read the statement of the commissioner, which is brief but very clear?

Mr. REED. I said I would not object to taking up the bill.

Mr. BALL. I understand, but I think the Senator wants to act knowingly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the letter referred to.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Washington, February 20, 1922.

Hon. L. HEISLER BALL,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to submit the following on Senate bill 3170, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, entitled "A bill regulating corporations doing a banking business in the District of Columbia," which you referred to them for report as to the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage.

The commissioners believe that there is an imperative need for this proposed legislation. There are at the present time five banks being organized in the District of Columbia under State laws.

When Congress enacted the national bank law it deemed it wise to empower the Comptroller of the Currency, who is charged with the administration of the act, to inquire into the character and the ability of those who seek to use other people's money for the purpose of doing a national banking business, to ascertain whether business conditions in the community where the proposed bank is to be located render it reasonably certain that the corporation can secure a sufficient amount of business to prevent the capital paid in from being impaired, to the loss of innocent stockholders, by expenses that exceed the profits, and to grant or refuse a charter in his discretion.

When the Congress, legislating for the District of Columbia, passed a law authorizing the formation of trust companies to engage in business in the District, it clothed the Commissioners of the District of Columbia with the same discretionary powers with respect to proposed trust companies in the District as it granted to the Comptroller of the Currency in respect to proposed national banks.

In all of the States that grant charters to corporations to do a banking business, powers similar to those exercised by the Comptroller of the Currency and the commissioners are conferred upon the State banking departments.

There is no banking law in the District of Columbia similar to the banking laws of the States, hence there is no official here who has the power to inquire into the organization of a proposed commercial State bank that seeks to do business in the District of Columbia and determine whether or not it shall be permitted to enter upon that business.

The absence of adequate legislation has resulted in 30 State-chartered institutions (in business and in the process of formation) coming into the District of Columbia. In addition to those State banks there are 15 national banks and 6 trust companies.

While the door through which additional national banks and trust companies may enter is guarded by responsible public officials who have the power to protect the investing and the banking public in its relations with such institutions, the door through which State-chartered banks may enter is open and unguarded, and there is no protection to the investing and banking public in its relations with such banks.

The purpose of the proposed law is not to narrow or restrict competition nor to prevent reliable and responsible persons possessing the requisite knowledge and skill from entering the field of banking in the District of Columbia in competition with existing institutions but to place the entire banking situation in the city of Washington more completely under the authority and control of a responsible public official who is clothed by law with the power to guard the interests of the investing and the banking public.

The commissioners recommend the speedy enactment of the bill and suggest that its provisions be embodied in the District of Columbia appropriation bill now pending before the Senate.

Very respectfully,

THE BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
By CUNO H. RUDOLPH, President.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BALL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On line 6, after the word "District," the Senator from Delaware proposes to insert a comma and the words "or to establish branch banks in said district."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON CONFERENCE TREATIES.

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a telegram from Mr. Robert R. Stone, president of the Lake Charles Kiwanis Club, Lake Charles, La., urging me to support the treaties negotiated by the disarmament conference.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LAKE CHARLES, LA., March 9, 1922.

United States Senator JOSEPH E. RANSDELL,
Washington, D. C.:

Our organization feels that the rejection on the part of the United States Senate of the treaties negotiated by disarmament conference would clog the wheels of progress toward a universal declaration that war is a crime and punishable as such. We respectfully ask your vote in favor of these treaties.

ROBERT R. STONE,
President Lake Charles Kiwanis Club.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I also ask to have inserted in the RECORD, in 8-point type, a letter signed by former Senator George E. Chamberlain; Mr. Frederick I. Thompson, of Mobile, Ala.; and Admiral W. S. Benson in regard to the pending shipping bill.

I merely wish to call attention to this letter and express the hope that it will be read by all Senators and to state that these three gentlemen are Democrats, one of them being a lawyer on the Pacific coast, another a newspaper man from the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, and the third a very eminent ex-naval officer whose home is on the Atlantic coast. I ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

MARCH 4, 1922.

Hon. JOSEPH E. RANSDELL,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: The message of the President and the bill introduced simultaneously by the chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce and the chairman of the Marine and Fisheries Committee of the House, having reference to further measures considered essential to establish in full force and effect an American merchant marine, were based very largely upon an intimate study made by the United States Shipping Board after extended hearings, at which men of all shades of opinion on the subject and intimately familiar with shipping were present.

In considering the question, the attitude of political parties, past and present, was not given consideration by the board, and the Democratic members of the board were governed solely by the real questions involved—

1. The necessity for maintaining a merchant marine, developed from the immense fleet called into existence by the emergencies of war.

2. The necessary action to be taken to assure to the United States its former position and prestige on the high seas.

Aside from the economic necessity for the establishment of an adequate merchant marine under the American flag, deep consideration was given to that aspect embodied in the merchant marine act, 1920, providing for the merchant fleet to be a naval auxiliary in time of war. It is our opinion there can be no divergence of opinion as to the necessity for the full establishment of an American merchant marine; the only question upon which there could be divergence of opinion is whether aid, either direct or indirect, or both, should be granted to accomplish that purpose. It is our opinion that the establishment of an American merchant marine will be impossible without such aid as will equalize present differentials that exist in favor of foreign shipping, and our recommendation to the President contemplated direct aid only in the event the indirect aids first suggested were inadequate to properly develop and maintain an American merchant marine, the direct aid itself being nonexistent if the indirect aid sufficed, and further limited as to profit to the ship only up to an adequate return to the operator on his investment. This assures no profiteering and brings into being direct aid only when it becomes a final essential to maintain American-flag ships on the high seas.

We understand that there will be a joint hearing of the appropriate Senate and House committees on the bill in question, and we trust you will not deem it impertinent in us, the Democratic members of the United States Shipping Board, to suggest to you and the other Democratic members of the committees of the Senate and House to withhold a final judgment with respect to this legislation until after the hearings have been completed and full opportunity given to the members of the board to state the reasons guiding their action in unanimously recommending direct and indirect aid to American shipping, and so that the full details of the proposal submitted, which has taken many weeks of survey and consideration, shall have been placed, in all detail, clearly before you.

Respectfully and sincerely, yours,

GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN.
FREDERICK I. THOMPSON.
W. S. BENSON.

RECESS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate in open executive session take a recess until 11 o'clock on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate in open executive session took a recess until Monday, March 13, 1922, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 11, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by Mr. WALSH as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

To the God of our fathers we lift our hearts in prayer. We yield to Thee the right of sovereignty and accept Thy law. Let it touch all the motives and emotions of the heart, and thus we shall know what things to value. Enlarge our charity and keep us free of all prejudice. Be Thou with our President and advance the interests of our whole country. O lead the races of men until all ignorance and superstition are overthrown and all peoples conspire for the growth of Christian liberty and for those ideals that make nations strong, free, and intelligent. Through Christ our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REQUEST TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. GARNER. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a report of the President's position on the bonus appearing in the Washington Post this morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a report of the President's position on the bonus appearing in the Washington Post this morning. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understood the gentleman to say he wanted to insert a report of the President's position on the bonus.

Mr. GARNER. What appears to be the President's position from a statement in the Washington Post this morning.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is usually accurate. If he would say a report as to the President's position——

Mr. GARNER. I amend my language in that particular, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman modifies his request in the manner indicated—to insert a report as to the President's position. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 10730).

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, with Mr. HICKS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose yesterday nothing was pending. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations, experiments, and demonstrations for the welfare, improvement, and increase of the reindeer industry in Alaska, including the erection of necessary buildings and other structures and cooperation with the Bureau of Education, and for the enforcement of section 1956 of the Revised Statutes as amended so far as it relates to the protection of land fur-bearing animals in Alaska, including necessary investigations in connection therewith, $46,500.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alaska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SUTHERLAND: Page 48, line 18, strike out "$46,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$61,500."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Chairman, the amendment seeks to substitute the original Budget estimate for the amount fixed by the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order.

Mr. MANN. The amendment is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. HAUGEN. A point of order on the paragraph of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that, in his opinion, the reservation comes too late. The gentleman from Alaska had begun to discuss his amendment. The Chair will have to hold that the reservation was made too late.

Mr. HAUGEN. I simply desired to reserve a point of order for the purpose of asking a question as to the erection of these buildings which are referred to in the paragraph.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Chairman, this $15,000 was asked for by the Biological Survey for the payment of salaries of game wardens in the Territory of Alaska. At present they have three regular salaried game wardens to cover a territory of 600,000 square miles, almost every square mile of which contains fur-bearing animals, and in which territory trappers operate. They do pay small amounts to individuals throughout the Territory to act in the capacity of game wardens, but the results of that system of appointing game wardens in that way are not at all satisfactory, and they hope to get this appropriation whereby they may appoint five permanent game wardens, and also pay their traveling expenses.

The Territory of Alaska produces several million dollars worth of furs each year. The fur animals over which the wardens would have supervision produce about a million dollars a year, the Seal Islands adding sometimes $1,000,000 and sometimes $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 a year.

I maintain that these wardens are necessary in this great territory where the animals should be preserved. At least, the methods of catching them should be restricted whereby men should be prevented from poisoning foxes in violation of law; and I maintain that a certain number of game wardens are necessary there. You have appropriated large sums for the protection of trees and plants, for the eradication of weevils, of moths, of corn borers, and of these various insects, but Alaska does not participate in those appropriations. You appropriate approximately half a million dollars for the destruction of predatory animals. Alaska has never participated in that appropriation, and yet we have many more predatory animals than you have in the States. In fact, I believe we have more wolves right in the Territory of Alaska than there are in all the rest of the United States—wolves that destroy thousands of deer annually. Yet we do not participate in that appropriation. I think it is fair and just, inasmuch as the Budget fixed that estimate, that Alaska should have this appropriation for the promotion of a system of protection of the fur-bearing animals in the Territory.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. How much of this appropriation is used in collaboration or cooperation with the Bureau of Education concerning the reindeer in Alaska?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know just to what extent they cooperate with the Bureau of Education. The work of the Biological Survey is to investigate the conditions under which the reindeer are propagated, and they investigate for parasites and anything that detracts from the development of that industry. The Bureau of Education, on the other hand, has charge of the natives, and the natives have the reindeer, so that incidentally the reindeer come under the charge of the Bureau of Education.

Mr. MANN. I just wondered whether any of it was used any more for this purpose.

Mr. ANDERSON. The sum of $31,000 of this appropriation is used for the promotion of the reindeer in Alaska, including investigations of range conditions, methods of breeding, and diseases which attack the animals, which greatly reduce the ability of the reindeer to withstand the climate.

Mr. MANN. Certainly the number is not being reduced. It may be that the disease affects them.

Mr. ANDERSON. The disease affects their ability to stand the climate and the amount of meat which each animal produces.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will.

Mr. SNELL. I understood the gentleman to speak about the seal fisheries—this appropriation has nothing to do with that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No. This amount of $15,000 is an independent appropriation, and they ask it for the protection of fur-bearing animals.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alaska has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alaska may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The $31,000 is used in connection with the reindeer; that leaves about $15,000 for the protection of land fur-bearing animals, and the gentleman wants to increase that by $15,000 more.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; I do not think they use that much at present. Perhaps they do. There are only three permanent wardens, and then they allow a small amount for some officials to permit them to enforce the game laws. I do not think it has any effect or is a wise way of spending money.

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman mean by not a wise way of expending money?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the game wardens should be permanent; I think that should be their whole business.

Mr. MANN. They live by catching fur-bearing animals, do they not, in part?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Their income is from catching the animals; yes.

Mr. MANN. What is the design of this appropriation? What is it to do?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is for the protection of game, to prevent the killing of game out of season, and to prevent the poisoning of fur-bearing animals. In a territory of that size, where there are no officials to enforce the law, naturally men violate it.

Mr. MANN. Men violate the law where there are officers to enforce it. I suppose it is as hard to prevent a man from killing a fur-bearing animal in Alaska as it is to prevent a man getting a drink of whisky in the United States. I do not see how you could do much with $30,000, but perhaps it would help.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, there is now being expended for the protection of fur-bearing animals in Alaska approximately $15,000. This amendment proposes to increase it by another $15,000. There are about 1,800 miles of coast line along the southern part of Alaska which I understand it is proposed to protect by this increased appropriation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not understand from Dr. Nelson that is his purpose; he wants to appoint a game warden at central points, in the interior and on the coast.

Mr. ANDERSON. I was getting to that. It is proposed to do that by establishing game wardens at supposedly strategic points in Alaska at the expense of the Federal Government. The present plan is to appoint people already there to enforce the game laws incident to their vocation and pay them a small amount for that purpose. While I think there is something in this proposition, I do not think this is a proper time to increase this appropriation.

Mr. HAUGEN. What buildings are contemplated by this paragraph?

Mr. ANDERSON. None that I know of. This item has been carried in the bill in that way for a long time, but no buildings are contemplated.

Mr. HAUGEN. There is no fund desired for buildings?

Mr. ANDERSON. No; no estimate for buildings.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the State of Arizona is so far removed from Alaska that I hope no one will suspect that I have a particular interest in this appropriation. But Arizona, during a large part of my lifetime was a Territory, badly neglected by Congress because of the fact that it was represented here by a Delegate without a vote, and had no representation in the United States Senate. My sympathy therefore goes out to the Territory of Alaska, and I shall be glad to vote for the pending amendment.

There are in Alaska some 150,000 reindeer, and a part of this appropriation may be used by the Biological Survey for studying the diseases and parasites that are seriously affecting the reindeer herds. It is estimated that three or four million reindeer can be profitably grazed in that vast Territory.

This money will also be used to protect the fur-bearing animals of Alaska from which there is obtained each year over a million dollars' worth of furs. According to the hearings there are men in Alaska who go about spreading poison to kill animals and thus obtain the furs. This means a great and cruel waste, because many of the animals hide and when their bodies are found they are so decomposed that the fur is valueless. It seems to me that such a modest increase as is proposed might well be allowed, particularly so since it has the approval of the Budget Bureau.

The gentleman from Alaska seeks nothing more than the amount that was recommended by that bureau after a thorough investigation. If the Biological Survey can convince hard-headed business men such as Gen. Dawes and those appointed by him, then I believe that the increase should be allowed.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has referred to the hard-headed business men; might this not be justified on the ground that it is for the benefit of the wives and daughters and ladies who wear furs?

Mr. HAYDEN. Undoubtedly the high price of furs is embarrassing not only to many ladies but also to some of their husbands who purchase them. Certainly if more furs are obtained, they should be cheaper, and in that way this work will undoubtedly be of general benefit. Alaska has been greatly neglected and as long as such neglect continues, by indifference here in Congress, we can expect to hear of the indiscriminate poisoning of fur-bearing animals and the destruction of other valuable resources simply because a sufficient force is not provided to enforce the game laws.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alaska.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For general administrative expenses connected with the above-mentioned lines of work, including cooperation with other Federal bureaus, departments, boards, and commissions, on request from them, $10,760.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, to make a statement in respect to a matter which was under discussion last evening. I refer to the action of the House in respect to the recommendations of the Director of the Budget and the reductions made in those estimates by the House. I made the statement that the committee is really the economy body. After the colloquy which occurred last evening I received information from the Committee on Appropriations, and I find that in the eight bills that have already passed the House the reduction made by the committee has been $65,000,000 below the recommendations of the Director of the Budget, a sharp contrast between the actual facts and what is generally thought to be the case in the mind of the public. I was also told that the report that is likely to come from the subcommittee on Military Affairs will be something like $87,000,000 below the recommendation of the Director of the Budget, and I have been informed by the chairman of the subcommittee on the Navy that the reduction on the naval bill will likely be something like $160,000,000 or $170,000,000 below the recommendation of the Director of the Budget. In view of the fact that the committee is trying to work economy here, I think these facts ought to be known to the public, so that the general criticism that we are overriding the recommendation of the Director of the Budget on outlay and running up expenses beyond what he recommends may be shown to be unjustified and the charge utterly untrue. Justice to the House, to the country, and to the Budget Director, it seems to me, demands that this statement be made. I want to go a little further into detail in respect to the matter, and therefore ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. In the colloquy that took place yesterday I was not criticizing the Bureau of the Budget or the committee, but was calling attention to the fact that every one of the appropriation bills thus far has reduced the estimates presented to the Congress by the Director of the Budget. I was wondering why that is the case and was trying to call attention to the fact that the House is not permitted to know why it is the case. The committee uses the Bureau of the Budget, so to speak, as a sort of punching bag, by always reducing the estimates that are compiled by the bureau, and the point I wish to make is that the House does not know why.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. In one minute. It was confessed when we had the District of Columbia appropriation bill under consideration that not only the House does not know why, but that as to one feature of the matter it is improper to tell the House what the facts are. I was criticized for putting into the RECORD the estimates that were made by the Commissioners of the District and handed over to the Bureau of the Budget. That was knowledge that I thought would be helpful to the House. I also suggested that in the same line it would be helpful to the House to know from the Director of the Budget or from the subordinates of the director how the Bureau of the Budget reached its conclusions as to what appropriations should be made. That is not now known. Under the present plan all of the appropriation bills represent reductions as compared with the estimates of the bureau, and we are left in the dark as to the facts and reasons that controlled the bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Reserving the right to object, I think that we ought to allow reasonable latitude of debate, but if we go into a discussion of the theory of the Budget and all of the matters incident to the Budget system, we shall not make very much progress on this bill. While I shall not object to this request, I hope gentleman will endeavor in the future to confine their remarks to the paragraph of the bill under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I was about to make this additional observation: It seems to me that we have here a dilemma, in view of the action of the Committee on Appropriations. On the one hand, we must assume that the Bureau of the Budget is always mistaken, that it does not function as we hoped it would function when the bureau was created; or, on the other hand—and that is the other horn of the dilemma—we must assume that the Committee on Appropriations undercuts the needs and the necessities of the Government. It strikes me this is so obvious that we should have some explanation of the processes that are employed.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to enter into a contention with the gentleman from Virginia on the point that he has made. I do not have much sympathy with the statement, however, as I think the subcommittee has all the data necessary upon which it can base its conclusions, and, therefore, I think that our subcommittee deserves the recognition of its work in economy. What I called attention to was that this is the body of economy.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman agree with the gentleman from Virginia that Congress ought to make itself merely a rubber stamp?

Mr. FESS. I certainly do not.

Mr. MANN. And let the Director of the Budget decide what the appropriations are and we do nothing?

Mr. FESS. I expressed myself upon that yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, the consideration of the annual appropriation for agriculture recalls the wonderful growth in this great industry. It is not only the basis of the country's prosperity because it provides the food supply, which is all-essential to any nation, but relatively speaking it is the industry that stands first in rank, not only in the values represented but in the numbers of our people engaged in it. The necessities of the recent war displayed the possibilities of production. We could, if our maximum ability were reached, come close to feeding the world.

The most prominent feature of modern agriculture is the progress it has made from an undesirable task where the farmer was commonly styled the "clodhopper" in more or less derision to the present position where he has become a factor in the leadership of a better citizenship. Once he was regarded as the mudsill in our social and political structure; now he is not only in the councils of the Nation but not infrequently in command.

For the past quarter century the agriculturist has witnessed a constant accumulation of conveniences and material advantages which conspire to make farm life most desirable. Improvements in machinery are reducing the element of drudgery so persistent in former years. The rewards are not confined to increased production, but extend to an independence rarely found in the centers of population. The emphasis is placed on scientific agriculture, which has filled our special institutions for agricultural research with hosts of the very best talent among our men and women. This fact is displayed both in increased results of the soil and in a most pronounced elevation of life on the farm. No longer can it be said that education compels abandonment of the farm for the city because no educated citizen wishes to train for the farm. To-day the college man and woman do not avoid the farm, but, on the other hand, modern agriculture encourages the best training for its pursuits. No longer is higher education in agriculture confined to the student in the college, but by Federal aid this learning is extended to the actual farm and farmer by an extension system by which the university goes to the people rather than invites only the few to the campus.

Perhaps no one feature of our modern education extension is more important than the movement of our farmers' institutes. In many sections its annual meetings are the most distinctive as well as important meetings of a community within the year. Every phase of the needs of the farm in all of its ramifications and specializations is brought to the community by the best minds connected with the industry, which is rapidly approaching the rank of the very highest of our industries.

It is not uncommon to find in many sections of the country the best and most highly trained and educated in the country rather than in the town or city, and consequently the highest appreciation of things worth while.

There has never been a time when the country did not supply its quota of leadership in matters of State and Nation. But more and more is it coming to be the nursery of leadership in all walks of life. This is largely due to the recent emphasis of general education so widely prominent throughout the country. The time was when the country was looked upon as the nursery of all sorts of wild-eyed and visionary theories. This was especially true in States purely agricultural.

Times of depression invariably brought forth the agrarian with his cure-all scheme for the ills of farm and city life. At such times are born the soft-money crazes, such as the greenback scheme, the populist campaign, the free-silver agitation, the non-partisan movements, all tinctured with the false and uneconomic fiat remedy for falling prices of commodities. With the constantly increasing level of general intelligence such schemes find no response and get but little beyond the mere announcement. This is especially noted since the Great War, when, due to the over-expansion of farm production to supply war's unlimited needs on the one hand, and the collapse of the buying power of a war-torn world bending under a debt almost as large as the wealth of many countries on the other, farm prices abruptly fell far below not only the cost of production but they fell far below the prewar price, and bankruptcy endangered many an agriculturist.

Yet the farmer, even under these conditions, listened to the agitator, the theorist, only to rebuke him and his cure-all ideas. He connected effect with cause, saw the condition, discovered the cause, and gave heed to the economic view, rejected the ready-made cure, and awaited such remedial action as could legitimately and safely be given. The present day is a comment upon this stability of mind. No combination of circumstances speaks so eloquently of the high order of thinking as displayed by the agricultural interests in their counsels as the attitude toward economic and fundamental principles shown by this leadership since the war. It displays again the guarantee of sound principle from this part of our citizenry, which is daily taking higher rank. It is true that no group of men gathered to take council on ways and means will show higher ability and sounder advice than such a conference that recently met in the Capital upon the call of the President to consider the agricultural situation due to the war. This conference held its sittings January 23 to 27, this year. The report of their proceedings, published as House Document No. 195, discloses the wide range of discussion and the comprehensive view of men interested in this great industry.

The Sixty-seventh Congress authorized in the early days of the special session the appointment of a special inquiry commission to investigate conditions and recommend such remedies as are found feasible. This commission has assembled a mass of valuable information to serve as data for future action. Its hearings, together with selective data, collected by a force of research men and women, supply the most important body of information yet assembled on the subject of agriculture from the legislative point of view.

The future of agriculture must be encouraging. It is basic, absolutely essential, and must inevitably be a barometer of general industrial conditions. When agriculture is prosperous the country is prosperous. This fact constantly and forcibly emphasizes the wisdom of caring for this industry. It is the basis of the effort to make the farm a desirable habitat and agriculture a profitable avocation. It is the reason for our concern to induce a substantial portion of the youth of the Nation or that part of it best adapted to prepare for and remain on the farm.

It explains why so much attention is given to insure the farmer a position of credit in the station which he occupies. Already this station, to-day in sharp contrast with yesterday, is his by choice rather than by compulsion. This fact is increasingly more apparent from day to day. The farmer is taking high rank in our time. This rank has been made possible by the Rural Mail Service, the daily newspaper, telephone, improved highways, and automobiles. In many country places the city conveniences are enjoyed through the application of electricity in the use of light and power. These features are merely in their infancy, as scientists assure us that within the next few years the greatest improvements will be made by application of electric power on the farm.

These features demand a better system of education. Already in many sections are to be found superior educational facilities in the country.

It is not overstating the fact to assert that the farm is rapidly becoming the more desirable habitation. It possesses many of the advantages of the city and few of its disadvantages. Few parents would prefer the city in which to educate the children if the country supplied equal facilities. While that stage is not yet reached, there is no obstacle against reaching it in due time.

From a financial point of view conditions are not yet as they should and will be in time. Production is reaching a scientific basis, but marketing the product is the problem. This involves better credit facilities, which await development. The farmer is too much at the mercy of seasonal control, where he who must sell is at the mercy of the buyer for the price paid. All of these features quite naturally call for more unity of action of the agriculturist. It invites if not commands organization, so that the industry can speak with greater emphasis.

This explains the recent term "bloc" influence on legislation. It is unfortunate that prejudice has been aroused in some parts of the country by the charge that farmers are dictating legislation as class and selfish as against the general interest. It is true that this Congress has enacted an unusual program looking to agricultural relief.

It began with the enactment of the emergency tariff law and the antidumping law. That was followed by the aid extension through the War Finance Corporation. That was followed by two amendments to extend credit in aid of agriculture. This legislation was followed by the packers' bill and the antigrain gambling bill. All these measures became law in the early part of the session. The farmers' cooperative marketing measure has been before Congress for two years. Nine months ago it was passed in the House, and recently passed in the Senate, and is now law. None of these measures were enacted under pressure save the unfortunate stress of a too-rapid liquidation of war prices. All of them except the cooperative marketing measure became law before the unfortunate publicity was given to what was styled "bloc" influence.

This word was first introduced when through collective action of a group of Senators the surtax rate of the tax law, which was fixed by the House at 32 per cent, was raised to 50 per cent. This rate is thought too high to induce capital to invest in productive industry, which greatly disappointed the industrial elements of the country and produced some prejudice against agriculture. It is argued that since agriculture must depend upon the other industries for its market it should be primarily interested in the upbuilding of industry. This is sound and will lead to the reduction of the rate as soon as it can be done. There is no doubt that the farmers will be back of any economic movement which is in the interest of all the people. That is the reason why the farming industry has been consistently back of the principle of protective tariff, in order to supply a market for his product, since the vast proportion of at least 90 per cent of it is sold in the home market.

There is now pending another very important piece of legislation which should have action. It is known as the truth in fabric bill. This proposed legislation is on the same basis as the pure-food laws. While there is some opposition on the ground that it furthers Government interference with business, that opposition is not conclusive.

There seems no legitimate reason why a purchaser should not know the character of the goods he is purchasing. While it might be somewhat prejudicial in instances to the seller, the right of the buyer to know what he is purchasing certainly is superior to any possible prejudice that might arise. There is a definite sentiment in the country favoring this piece of legislation, which should become a law in due time.

The future of agriculture is assured. The country is now, as it always has been, the location of the most stable and reliable citizen of our Nation. It is to him we must continue to look in the future as the bulwark against the issues and quack remedies so often heard in modern times. The open air of the farm is the best antidote for the ills of congestion of the centers of population.

The farmer knows his best interests lie in the direction of a growing and prosperous people. His prosperity depends upon the prosperity of the city, which in turn consumes his product and thereby supplies his market. The leadership of the best agricultural ability decries legislation that is not general. In other words, it does not demand class legislation. There is an element of danger in what we know as group control. While the Nation at large has been led to believe such pressure is now operating in legislation, the result will be, in the end, the same as in all groups, and especially among farmers, to back only such legislation as is for the general good.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, I have not said anything in reference to this bill yet, although I am a member of the subcommittee. I think the gentleman from Virginia is laboring under a misapprehension. As I view it, the Bureau of the Budget and the Committee on Appropriations are working in absolute harmony and in absolute cooperation. It is impossible, in my judgment, for the Director of the Budget to give the same care in respect to what amounts should be appropriated for certain purposes that can be given thereto by the different subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations. I may be able to illustrate by a single instance exactly what I mean, and the gentleman can look up the records in verification thereof. I refer to the matter of the appropriation for printing and binding in the Treasury Department, where the director had submitted an estimate of $700,000.

When we had the hearings before the subcommittee the official who will have charge of expending the money appropriated appeared, and the hearings upon this particular item were fairly well extended. We tried to point out, and especially the distinguished chairman of the committee, where perhaps economies might be effected, and by the time we got through the official very frankly stated to the committee that he felt that he could get along with an appropriation of $500,000. So we put the item at $500,000 in the bill. My observation is that in this manner reasonable conclusions are reached by the committee in fixing the amounts of appropriations for specific purposes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I say one thing to my friend? I think he and the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] have both gotten away from the proposition that I have tried to present, and that is, that always, with hardly any exception, almost universally, the estimates made by the bureau are reduced. I can understand how you can discuss an isolated case like the one the gentleman has given, and thoroughly justify it, and the general practice of the committee may be correct. I was only pointing out the very interesting fact that reductions are always made.

Mr. MAGEE. As I understand, the inference to be drawn from the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia is that the Bureau of the Budget and the Committee on Appropriations do not work harmoniously together and in cooperation with each other. As I understand the fact, that is not the situation. We do work harmoniously together. I do not assume that Gen. Dawes would expect us to accept the items which he submits to the Committee on Appropriations and act, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, merely as rubber stamps. I want to say that the responsibility of making appropriations for governmental purposes rests upon the Members of the House. You can not escape that responsibility; you can not shift it to the shoulders of the Director of the Budget, or put it upon the members of the Committee on Appropriations. The Director of the Budget has done most commendable work. The members of the Committee on Appropriations do the best they can, but ultimately you must be the final arbiters in making all appropriations.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the pro forma amendment. Mr. Chairman, I think that the suggestion the gentleman from Virginia has made is perhaps, as it appears to me, a slight misconception of the duty of the Director of the Budget. The Budget is only a method of presenting the estimates of the administration. That is what it is in all countries that I know that have a budget system. The Budget system in the United States, as we have adopted it, is no different from that, except we adopt a different method. The estimates of the administration are reviewed by the Bureau of the Budget and then are presented to the Committee on Appropriations of the House for consideration. The Director of the Bureau of the Budget presents these to the various subcommittees of the House for consideration, just as before this system was adopted the estimates were made directly by the various heads of the departments to the President and by the President transmitted to the Congress. Now, as has been suggested, the fact that these congressional estimates are less than those that have been submitted so far by the Bureau of the Budget I do not think is an indication that there is any policy that brings this about. It only is a compliment to the persistent determination of the subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations to reduce to the very last possibility of reduction the estimates that are submitted.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Excuse me, but I want to call attention to one other matter. The illustration given by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE] is an illustration well in point. Of course the fact that the estimates made by the head of this bureau could have been reduced from $700,000 to $500,000 was not known by the Director of the Budget or he would have reduced the estimate in accordance with that. The fact is that the more investigation, the more discussion, the more these points are examined, the more these estimates are reexamined, the more these men are cross-examined when they come before the various committees results almost always in reduction. As suggested by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, these facts are sometimes shown by changes that have occurred in the prices of materials. The last hearing being before the Committee on Appropriations, they have before them more and later intelligence than was before the Director of the Budget.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. The system is working well, and I think it is a compliment to the Congress and to the Committee on Appropriations that so far these investigations have resulted in reductions.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want five minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON. At the end of 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I just want to submit an observation or two in reference to the propaganda and news items that have appeared, beginning some few months ago, soon after the director had taken charge of the Bureau of the Budget, to the effect—and it was generally published all over the country—that the only way to stop and hold in check the wasteful and extravagant tendency of the Congress was through the activity of the Director of the Budget. Publicity was given throughout the country in newspapers, and the idea became prevalent that the Congress was a wasteful and extravagant body, as compared with the departments. The director took occasion rather to foster that sentiment. Time after time he broke into the headlines with the suggestion that he was going to club Congress over the head and reduce the amount of appropriations and force Congress into line.

I am in thorough sympathy with these reductions. This is a time for economy. This is a time to cut all appropriations till they hurt, and to eliminate all useless ones.

With flaming language the director preached economy.

But, strange to say, in spite of his spectacular language, in spite of his expressions, Congress has found it necessary to cut down practically all the estimates of the Director of the Budget. I think it is up to the retiring Director of the Budget to make a statement to the public admitting that it is not so much in the Congress and the Members of Congress that the tendency to waste and extravagance evidences itself, but that it is in the departments, and that the publicity that was given, laying at the feet of the Congress the blame for all these things, is wrong. Of course, the Congress is not free from blame, but, bad as it has been, the departments and the Director of the Budget have been infinitely worse. An average of about 10 per cent has been taken off all the estimates of the Director of the Budget.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. How did you vote on the propositions for distribution of seed?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I voted against any appropriation for the distribution of garden seeds, believing as I do that the money can be better spent for other purposes.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. I compliment the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I can not follow the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE], who criticizes the action reducing the Budget estimates. The very purpose of a budgetary commission is to find out what the resources of our Nation are, what its income is, in accordance with its taxes, and then say that we are able to expend just so much for each department. That was the intention of the Budget in the first place. The gentleman complains that the estimates are always reduced. They should be reduced. He said that the estimates are taken as a maximum and intimates that they should be taken as a minimum.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will my friend yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. If they were considered as a minimum, what is the use of a Budget? Then we would not have gotten anywhere at all. That is the condition we were in before we had a Budget.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. BLANTON. I can not yield to the gentleman now, because he has already had 20 minutes on the subject.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Just one minute.

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment I will yield. The gentleman stated yesterday afternoon, and I challenged it then, that he thought that the estimates should be considered as a minimum, not as a maximum. Why, it should be the maximum. When the Director of the Budget comes to us and says, by reason of the income of this Nation, in accordance with the tax provisions that Congress has already provided for, you can go just so far in expending money for certain departments without disrupting the policy of the Nation, that is the maximum that the Congress ought to consider. And I commend any committee that reduces the budgetary estimates. They ought to be reduced. Every single one of them, if we can pare them down, ought to be reduced.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman is mistaken in saying that I complained of what the committee is doing.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no. The gentleman complained because estimates had been reduced.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. No. The gentleman is mistaken in that. The gentleman is again mistaken in saying that I think the estimates of the bureau should be taken as a minimum.

Mr. BLANTON. I know that in the RECORD it does not show that, but that was what the gentleman intimated yesterday on the floor.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If I said minimum, it was said inadvertently. I refer to my colloquy with the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman stated yesterday that it should be a minimum rather than a maximum. If the gentleman did not mean it, it is all right, but we ought not to let it stand here without a protest as a question of policy for the Congress to pursue, because if we accept it as anything but a maximum then we might as well wipe away the Director of the Budget and his whole proposition of saving money in the interest of the taxpayers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DIVISION OF ACCOUNTS AND DISBURSEMENTS.

Salaries: Chief of division and disbursing clerk, $4,000; supervising auditor, $2,250; cashier and chief clerk, $2,250; deputy disbursing clerk, $2,000; accountant and bookkeeper, $2,000; clerks—2 of class 4, 6 of class 3, 8 of class 2, 13 of class 1, 2 at $1,000 each; messenger, $720; messenger boy, $600; in all, $55,820.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. As I understand it, the citrus-canker appropriation has been cut out of this bill?

Mr. ANDERSON. No.

Mr. SEARS. It has been cut down?

Mr. ANDERSON. It has been cut down.

Mr. SEARS. In that connection I simply want to congratulate the committee. I was struck very forcibly by the remarks of my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] yesterday, in which he stated the people of the country should do something for themselves and not look to Congress for paternalism or all of the assistance that was necessary to secure all relief, however necessary the same might be. Many of the Members now present will recall that citrus canker threatened the orange industry of my State, and that we came to Congress and asked relief, and my colleagues kindly gave to us that relief, but it was on the basis of the Government expending so much and the State meeting that expenditure dollar for dollar. At that time my colleagues from Florida and myself promised the Members of Congress that Florida would meet that appropriation. We have spent something like $500,000 or $600,000 of State funds to eradicate that dreadful disease which threatened the orange industry of the great State of Florida.

Millions of dollars of property were destroyed, because the only way to control citrus canker was by burning trees. There was no other method known, and there is no other method known to-day. Millions of trees were burned. Men who had orange groves one day had none the next, because the inspector would come along and destroy those trees. The owners of the groves received nothing from either the Government or the State, nor did they ask anything from the Government.

I simply wanted to make these few brief remarks to show my colleagues that the State kept the promise that her Representatives made when that fight was up, and that you, by coming to our assistance, have eradicated citrus canker from Florida. This disease was permitted to enter our State because of laxity of fruit-inspection laws, and in this particular due entirely to the fault of the Government, and not because of any fault on the part of our citizens. I trust that in the future the quarantine laws will be more rigidly enforced, but should we again be threatened with this or any other scourge, in view of the above, I am sure my colleagues will give us such assistance as they feel we are entitled to.

Mr. Chairman, permit me on behalf of my colleagues from Florida and the citizens of that great and growing State, to thank you for the prompt assistance and aid you gave us. I assure you it is appreciated more than I can express.

The Clerk read as follows:

DIVISION OF PUBLICATIONS.

Salaries: Chief of division, $3,500; chief editor, $3,000; 2 assistant editors, at $2,000 each; assistants in charge—1 of exhibits $3,000, 1 of information $3,000, 1 of motion-picture activities $3,000, 1 of addressing, duplicating, and mailing $2,400, 1 of indexing $2,000, 1 of distribution $2,500; chief cinematographer, $2,500; draftsman or photographer, $2,100; chief clerk, $2,000; assistant in exhibits, $2,000; assistant editors, 2 at $1,800 each; assistants—1 at $2,500; 3 at $2,000 each; indexer or compiler, $1,800; artist and designer, $2,500; draftsmen or photographers—3 at $1,600 each, 2 at $1,500 each, 3 at $1,400 each, one $1,300, 10 at $1,200 each; assistant photographer, $960; lantern-slide colorist, $1,200; laboratory aid, $900; executive clerk, $2,000; clerks—5 of class 4, 4 of class 3, 13 of class 2, 21 of class 1, 20 at $1,100 each, 52 at $960 each; mechanical assistant, $1,980; machine operators—1 at $1,500, 4 at $1,400 each, 12 at $1,200 each, 7 at $1,100 each, 5 at $1,000 each; folders—one $1,200, 2 at $1,000 each; messengers or laborers—3 at $900 each, 10 at $840 each, 4 at $780 each, 12 at $720 each, 3 at $600 each; 8 skilled laborers at $1,100 each; messenger boys—7 at $720 each, 1 at $660, 6 at $600 each, 6 at $480 each; charwomen—3 at $480 each, 4 at $240 each; in all, $299,900.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I notice that there is an increase here in statutory salaries of $45,000. There have been several small increases in the bill previous to this item, but this seems to be an especially large one. I appreciate the fact that the Bureau of Publications in the Department of Agriculture probably puts out the most valuable information of any of the publication bureaus here in Washington, but it seems to me that at this time, when we are trying to economize, we should not increase the cost of the publications even of that department to such an extent as I think you are now doing by additional statutory salaries carried in this paragraph.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not want to quarrel with the very good speech that the gentleman is making for economy in this bill, but I would like to say that the $45,000 increase that appears now on the statutory roll occurs from transfers from various bureaus of the department. In each case the amount has been deducted from the appropriations, and this does not represent any increase.

Mr. SNELL. It represents no increase?

Mr. ANDERSON. None at all. They are transferred at the same salary.

Mr. SNELL. Then I am entirely satisfied. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses, Division of Publications: For miscellaneous objects of expenditure in connection with the publication, indexing, illustration, and distribution of bulletins, documents, and reports, as follows:

For labor-saving machinery and supplies, envelopes, stationery and materials, office furniture and fixtures, photographic equipment and materials, artists' tools and supplies, telephone and telegraph service, freight and express charges; purchase and maintenance of motor trucks; purchase and maintenance of bicycles; purchase of manuscripts; traveling expenses; electrotypes, illustrations, and other expenses not otherwise provided for, and including not to exceed $11,380 for extra labor and emergency employments in the District of Columbia, $57,930.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. HAUGEN. With particular reference to line 18, "Purchase and maintenance of motor trucks." It is subject to a point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not think it is subject to a point of order. It is the same language as was previously contained in a separate item.

Mr. HAUGEN. I refer to the act of June 30, 1914.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is entirely aside from the question of whether it is subject to a point of order. That is the same language that was carried the year before.

Mr. HAUGEN. Is it to be used in the District of Columbia or in the field?

Mr. ANDERSON. That applies to the District of Columbia.

Mr. HAUGEN. The act refers to motor vehicles necessary in the conduct of field work, and the act of July 16, 1914, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, carried this provision prohibiting the purchase of automobiles. What is the purpose of this paragraph?

Mr. ANDERSON. The total amount estimated here for the purchase and maintenance of automobiles and motor trucks and bicycles and harness is $2,000. You could not purchase and maintain very many automobiles on that amount.

Mr. HAUGEN. This is a small division in the department. The bill carries a provision elsewhere for the purchase of automobiles.

Mr. ANDERSON. This provision surely will not purchase and maintain many motor trucks.

Mr. HAUGEN. If we have thousands of them rusting and deteriorating not far away, it seems to me the department should use those owned by the Government.

Mr. ANDERSON. If the gentleman objects to the language "purchase" in there, I have no objection to its going out.

Mr. MANN. The current law carries this item four or five different times.

Mr. HAUGEN. The purchase is a violation of the law.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; it is not in violation of the law.

Mr. HAUGEN. It would be a violation of the law unless specifically provided for.

Mr. MANN. That is where it is specifically provided.

Mr. HAUGEN. And this provision is subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. No. You consolidated these items in this one paragraph for the reason stated. I suppose it was thought desirable to put in the same amount for the consolidated articles. The law provided that you could not purchase automobiles unless Congress specifically authorized it. But this is a specific authorization in accordance with that law, and it has been frequently so held.

Mr. HAUGEN. Does the gentleman object to striking out the word "purchase"?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not think it ought to go out. As the gentleman knows, there are forty-odd buildings in which the department's various bureaus and divisions are located.

Mr. MANN. This is the division that handles all the farmers' bulletins.

Mr. HAUGEN. Does the gentleman believe the Government ought to purchase automobiles if there are thousands of them available and unused?

Mr. MANN. If you can purchase any of them for $2,000, then you had better do it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Why should $2,000 be used for the purchase of an automobile under the circumstances?

Mr. MANN. I do not suppose they would, and I do not think they should.

Mr. HAUGEN. Then strike out the words authorizing their purchase.

Mr. MANN. There is no authorization in there to turn over motor trucks from the War Department. It has only been made in specific cases for the use of the department. But as long as we appropriate for the distribution of farmers' bulletins, I hope if you refuse to employ enough clerks to carry them to the post office you will not prevent them being taken there in motor trucks.

Mr. HAUGEN. They are now sent out by the Public Printer, and not by the Department of Agriculture. That law was changed some years ago. After all, there may be need of an automobile, but if thousands are available within 50 miles of Washington, I do not think this item should be carried in the bill. I reserved the point of order simply to get the information as to what amount would be used for this purpose, and whether the department intends to purchase automobiles.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think not, when the estimate of $2,000 is allotted for the purchase and maintenance of wagons, motor trucks, bicycles, horses, and harness altogether.

Mr. HAUGEN. The objection I raised was to the word "purchase." It seems to me, if a number of automobiles are available, it is bad policy to purchase automobiles.

Mr. ANDERSON. They can not get them without a specific authorization of law, and even if you give them a specific authorization of law you can not get them. The War Department will not turn them over. We have tried that half a dozen times.

Mr. HAUGEN. They have a lot of them.

Mr. ANDERSON. They may have them; but they will not turn them over.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the department calls for them—the Bureau of Roads have the automobiles on hand that can be used by the department.

Mr. ANDERSON. Which department?

Mr. HAUGEN. The Bureau of Public Roads has a number of them. The question is whether they will use the automobiles now available—the surplus automobiles owned by the War Department. If a number are rusting and going to ruin, it seems to me some use should be made of them.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman going to make the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is, Does the gentleman make his point of order?

Mr. HAUGEN. I withdraw the point of order, but I suggest that the gentleman strike out the word "purchase."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask for the regular order. I do not think we ought to spend all day on the question whether we are going to leave the word "purchase" in this paragraph.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I make a motion to strike out the word "purchase."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: Page 50, line 18, strike out the word "purchase" where it occurs the first time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I regret that there is such haste this morning that we can not be permitted to learn as to the accuracy of the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN]. The gentleman from Iowa has just said that the Government has upward of 20,000 automobiles or trucks within a few miles of Washington which are available for it to use. Is that so?

Mr. HAUGEN. I said it had within 45 miles—7 miles out of Baltimore.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I understood that to be the gentleman's statement.

Mr. HAUGEN. I do not know just how many there were. I was told that there were thousands of them.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Did the gentleman see them there?

Mr. HAUGEN. I saw them there.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And they belonged to the Government?

Mr. HAUGEN. They belonged to the Government; and they had been there for years.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman know of any reason why one of them could not be brought over here and put into service, or four or five of them, for that matter?

Mr. HAUGEN. I know of no reason whatever why that could not be done. I may say this, that two or three years ago, without any authorization of law, it was proposed to purchase an automobile for $3,200, and we had then about 100,000 of them standing around decaying, rusting, and going to waste.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That reminds me—perhaps it is not germane to this proposition—that there were 27,000 new automobiles sent to France by this Government after the armistice was signed.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. And they were sold for a song.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Sold for about 20 per cent of their value.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want to proceed for a moment and then I will yield. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] please answer this question: If the Government has on hand within a few miles of Washington 20,000 or more automobiles which are available to be used by the Government, is there any necessity whatever for appropriating $2,000 to purchase a new autotruck?

Mr. HAUGEN. I do not know of any reason why we should do it. I would not say that there are 20,000 of them.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If there are 200.

Mr. HAUGEN. My understanding is that there are several thousand of them.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If there are any, we do not need to buy new ones until we have used up the ones we have on hand.

Mr. HAUGEN. I do not recall the figures, but I believe we had about 100,000 of them, and about 20,000 of them have been distributed throughout the country, through the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I will ask if it is too late to raise a point of order on the word "purchase" in the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then I move to strike out the words "purchase and," in line 18, on page 50.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman modifies his amendment by including the word "and." Is there objection to the modification of the amendment?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, this is quite an interesting question. It may be that under existing law or the practice of the department the provision of this bill is necessary. Certainly the subcommittee reporting it have reason to believe so, or they would not have put the words in the bill. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] has said that the Government owns a very large number of automobiles and a very large number of motor trucks of different kinds; that no use is being made of them, and that they are not made available by bureaus or departments that might use them. That condition existed at the close of the war and it was necessary, or at least the Congress was asked, to make appropriations for the purchase of new machines of one kind and another. I am sure the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] would not make the statement if it were not true, that the Government at the close of the war owned a large number of machines of one kind and another.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman will recall that a requisition was made for an automobile to cost $3,200, and the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture called our attention to the fact that they had made a requisition and were about to purchase an automobile to cost $3,200 when they had nearly 100,000 of them on hand, and that action was contemplated to be taken without authority of law.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman is right in part. About two years ago the Bureau of Entomology made a requsition for a motor truck to cost nearly $5,000. The Committee on Agriculture learned of it and asked information. Officials appeared before the committee and stated that it was true that the Bureau of Entomology proposed to buy a very expensive truck. They were asked why the bureau could not use one or more of the trucks that had been transferred by the War Department to the Department of Agriculture, and the answer was that these trucks had been transferred to the Bureau of Roads for road purposes, and although they were not being used at that time for that specific purpose, or for any purpose, they were not available and could not be made available for use by the Bureau of Entomology—that one bureau was not permitted under the practice of the department to use the property of another bureau. It developed further this interesting but disagreeable fact that Mr. Newton Baker, then Secretary of War, and having charge of all the machines, numbering, as the gentleman from Iowa says, many thousands of all kinds, when directed to turn these machines over to the Department of Agriculture for use by the Roads Bureau, turned many of them over stripped of everything above the wheels, taking off the dumping apparatus, taking off the tanks, because the Secretary of War said he was directed to turn over only the machines, and that he did not consider these appliances to be a part of the machines. He had conceived that the War Department had some use for the apparatus that he took off the trucks. The result was that he turned over a lot of trucks to the Bureau of Roads, some good, some bad, some indifferent, but many of them stripped of what would make them of value to the Bureau of Roads.

There were at that time thousands of automobiles and thousands of trucks of which no use was being made. But except for the provision of law which directed the Secretary of War to turn over the trucks for the use of the Bureau of Roads there was no law, as I understand it, authorizing the War Department to turn over these trucks for any use.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The result was that they remained inactive, not being used, in the possession and under the control of the War Department, not available for use by any other department.

Now, in my judgment a law should be enacted providing for the transfer of automobiles, trucks, and other machines and supplies from a department or bureau which has them and does not need them to a department or bureau which does need them and can use them, a law in proper form, safeguarding the property in the interest of the Government, not depriving a department of property it needs; but we should not be up against this proposition that the Government of the United States owns in one department a lot of property with no way on earth by which the bureaus that need it can get it. The result will be as it was during and at the close of the war, that many items in a bill like this are carried for the purchase of these different kinds of property.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will.

Mr. DOWELL. I want to ask if we strike out the word "purchase," as suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin, it would get for this department any supplies from the War Department?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think not; under existing conditions it seems to me that the inclusion of the word "purchase" is necessary.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman think we need a mandatory amendment directing the War Department to turn them over?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. We can not put that in this bill.

Mr. DOWELL. If no point of order was raised against it the gentleman could offer it.

Mr. ANDERSON. We do not need it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Congress has authorized the Secretary of War to transfer this property to the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. For roads.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman will recall that the Chief of the Bureau of Roads came before the committee two years ago and said that he had the authority and would transfer it, and that the automobile was transferred.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman is not quite right. The Chief of the Bureau of Roads and the solicitor of the department—at that time Mr. Williams—was with him, and both gentlemen said that the Bureau of Roads had at that time no authority to turn a machine or truck over to any other bureau, that there was no law for it, but they would try and find a way; they would smuggle it over to the Bureau of Entomology.

Mr. HAUGEN. I think the gentleman is mistaken about the smuggling part of it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Well, they had no real authority, and they would try and find a way to do it. I did not criticize them then nor do I criticize them now; in fact, I think that unfortunate condition of affairs does not exist now.

Mr. HAUGEN. I do not blame the chief of the bureau, but he admitted that it could be done, and I understand it was done.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. He admitted that it ought to be done, but at the same time he said he had no direct authority.

Mr. DOWELL. The transfer should be made by the War Department and not by the Bureau of Roads.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. When any department has a lot of stuff that it does not need for any purpose there ought to be authority to transfer it to a department that does need it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have listened with a good deal of interest to what the gentleman said as to there being no way of getting trucks from the possession of the War Department for any other department. As I understand the law, the Director of the Budget, Mr. Dawes, has authority to declare them surplus and he has done so.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The only action that Congress has taken was taken two years ago, an instruction to the Secretary of War to turn over trucks that his department did not need to the Bureau of Roads for use in the construction and maintenance of highways.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, all gentlemen understand that there is a recent order under which no department can purchase anything of this character or anything like it without submitting the request to the coordinating bureau under the Director of the Budget, and if another department has such an article which is surplus and which can be turned over. it will be turned over, and if not it will be purchased from that department.

Mr. DOWELL. Is that after it has been declared surplus, or must the department first declare that it is surplus?

Mr. MANN. The department has to determine whether it is surplus or not.

Mr. DOWELL. There is quite a wide distinction between a declaration of surplus by a department that has the material and some other department that has not.

Mr. MANN. The fact is that the Director of the Budget is requiring these departments to declare these things surplus under the statement that if they do not declare surplus those that are surplus he will go to the President about it.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. I merely wanted to suggest for the record that the incident that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] has recited all occurred before this administration came in and before the passage of the Budget law. I refer to the transaction where they were going to purchase a $3,200 or a $5,000 automobile when there were automobiles available. That was before the enactment of the Budget law and under the old administration.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think these all occurred at least two and possibly three years ago.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to have an opportunity to ask the chairman of the subcommittee a question in respect to this paragraph before debate closes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Very well, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KETCHAM. I want to ask him with reference to the matter of printing which is involved. My recollection is that some time ago Congress passed a bill giving the Committee on Printing unusual powers of supervision, amounting in some cases almost to censorship. I rise for the purpose of asking whether or not the chairman has in mind any amendment to this or subsequent paragraphs in respect to that situation?

Mr. ANDERSON. This has nothing to do with that situation. I think it would be wiser to consider it under the general item for printing, which comes under another paragraph of the bill.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for five minutes for the purpose of obtaining information?

Mr. ANDERSON. Certainly. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I shall want to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question or two before the five minutes expires.

Mr. ANDERSON. If the gentleman from Minnesota has the time, he will be very glad to yield.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then I object, unless I can have an opportunity to ask a question about this purchase of a needless automobile. I want to know some of the facts. I want to ask two questions of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I reserve the right to object, and shall object unless I have an agreement with the gentleman from Minnesota that he will answer two questions.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire to discuss the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I object.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close at the end of five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON. I now yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the discussion relating to the surplus of automobiles in the hands of the various departments. I have been under the impression that there is no surplus. I want to commend the wisdom of the Members of the Democratic Party in sitting by here quietly and permitting dissention and recriminations to exist over on the Republican side of the House. I have heard this morning the various departments criticized for their extravagance and their inefficiency, and I can not believe that the extravagance and inefficiency exist to the extent that one would infer from hearing the acrimonious discussion that prevails among the Republican Members of this body. It seems that we have no unison of action or cooperation unless we are attacked by somebody on the Democratic side of the House, and then we get together and defend ourselves.

I want to know whether any department of this Government has a surplus of automobiles. Has anyone here an authoritative declaration to make that there is a surplus of automobiles? Is there a surplus of automobiles in the War Department?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not know. All I know about it is that a year ago when I offered an amendment to the Army bill directing the Secretary of War——

Mr. DUNBAR. Oh, I mean to-day—I do not mean a year ago.

Mr. ANDERSON. I can not answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. DUNBAR. I want to say that it is not for Congress nor any Member of Congress to get up here and say that in any particular department we have a surplus of automobiles unless he can give his authority for the statement.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUNBAR. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I think I have the floor. I yielded to the gentleman from Indiana to ask a question.

Mr. DUNBAR. I want to say that I went down to the War Department. Indiana has had 700 automobiles loaned to it for the purpose of construction of its roads. I went down to see if I could get some more. I said there was a report prevailing there was a surplus of automobiles in that department and I was told that there was no surplus; that they had no automobiles except in such number as the exigencies of the department might at any time demand for the proper functioning of the War Department.

Mr. ANDERSON. If I may occupy my own time now, I want to answer the questions of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. DUNBAR. I thought the gentleman had yielded the five minutes to me.

Mr. ANDERSON. No; I could not do that.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. A motion has just been agreed to to limit debate to five minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. It can be extended by unanimous consent, and I ask unanimous consent that it be extended.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I object. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin to ask a question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would like to inquire of the chairman if it is the custom for the head of a department to transfer property to a bureau in another department or to the head of the other department? If these trucks were transferred, as they ought to have been, by the War Department to the head of the Agricultural Department, then the Secretary of Agriculture could use them in any bureau in his department.

Mr. ANDERSON. Congress was very careful, as I recollect, in directing the Secretary of War to transfer these trucks to the Department of Agriculture and to provide that they were transferred for road-building purposes, and that the intention of transferring them was to permit the Bureau of Public Roads to turn them over to the States for road-building purposes, and that has been done, and it is only by ignoring the law that the department was able to use any of them at all.

Mr. HAUGEN. Are they all used for road building?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. What about the number of automobiles they have in Washington? They are not used for road building.

Mr. ANDERSON. If they are not used for road building they were not automobiles turned over to the Department of Agriculture for road-building purposes.

Mr. HAUGEN. They were those turned over by the War Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make suitable agricultural exhibits at State, interstate, and international fairs held within the United States, in cooperation with other departments of the Government; for the purchase of necessary supplies and equipment; for telephone and telegraph service, freight and express charges; for travel, and for every other expense necessary, including the employment of assistance and the payment of rent outside the city of Washington, $70,000.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This deals with the assistance the National Government is giving local State organizations. I want to call attention to one of these local organizations that is needing a little help, and that is the States that are trying to get a slight reduction or some consideration in reference to freight rates. On yesterday a dispatch went out from Atlanta that there were 3,500 bales of cotton, consisting of 40 cars, shipped from Atlanta direct to Europe. It states that the freight charges from Atlanta to Savannah, about 200 miles, were $16,000; that the freight from Savannah to Liverpool was $7,000. In other words, it cost more than twice as much to transport a cargo of cotton from Atlanta to Savannah, less than 200 miles, a few miles less, than it does to transport it from Savannah to Liverpool. I think there should be some notice taken of the fact—and remember this is entirely intrastate—that agriculture to-day is being absolutely strangled by the rates that have been forced upon the States over the protests of the State commissions by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and sustained by the United States Supreme Court. There is another thing that the farmers in our country are feeling the pinch of to-day. On the 18th of February I bought nitrate of soda for my farming operations this year at the rate of $48 a ton. Since that time the corporations have gotten together and they have gotten control of the supply of nitrates the Government owns—and the Government did sell it cheaper than the companies heretofore—and they are quoting nitrate to-day at the port for $65 a ton, and they say it is going on up. Now, there is a good deal of propaganda going on, and most of you have got some correspondence from the Philadelphia fertilizer corporation attacking the proposition that Mr. Ford be given opportunity for manufacturing nitrates and fertilizer from nitrates down at the Muscle Shoals plant. The very same fellows that have been behind it are the men who have to-day gotten control of all the nitrates of this country and have put it on the farmer just at this time, raising it from $48 to $65 a ton, and they say that if you do not buy now you will pay more in a few months, and——

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I may be in error, but is it not true that Mr. Ford wanted to pledge himself to make fertilizer at this power plant?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; pledge himself not only to manufacture nitrates but to make fertilizer. I will say that is also true in regard to the other fertilizers. I have been buying what is known as 8-3-3 at $26 a ton, and it is now advanced to $31 a ton, and they say it may go to $36 a ton, and this is just at the very point when the men who use it have to have it.

REPORT OF BOARD OF VISITORS, WEST POINT.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the report of the Board of Visitors of the House Committee on Military Affairs to West Point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The report is as follows:

To the honorable the SECRETARY OF WAR.

SIR: Pursuant to an act of Congress approved May 28, 1908, as amended by an act approved August 9, 1912, providing for the appointment of the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy, the following members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives were designated by the chairman of that committee to visit West Point in May, 1921:

Representatives JOHN F. MILLER, of Washington; JOHN M. MORIN, of Pennsylvania; HARRY E. HULL, of Iowa; CHARLES C. KEARNS, of Ohio; RICHARD WAYNE PARKER, of New Jersey; PERCY E. QUIN, of Mississippi; and HUBERT F. FISHER, of Tennessee.

In accordance with the provisions of the above-mentioned acts, the board hereby submits the following report:

The board spent three days at the academy, during which time the following program was carried out:

PROGRAM BOARD OF VISITORS UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY, MAY 19, 20, AND 21, 1921.

THURSDAY, MAY 19.

Review of Corps of Cadets immediately after arrival.
Luncheon at officers' mess with officers of garrison, 12.30 to 1.30.
Visit riding sections in riding hall, 1.50 to 2.20.
Visit drawing sections, 2.20 to 2.50.
Visit French and Spanish sections in East Academic Building, 2.55 to 3.30.
Inspection of mounted detachments, 3.30 to 4.10.

Inspect drills of corps, 4.10 to 5.15.
Dine with superintendent at superintendent's quarters, 7.
Band concert at superintendent's quarters, 8.45 to 10.45.

SATURDAY, MAY 21.

Visit present construction, including hospital, laundry, and power plant, 9.30 to 11.30.
Attend lecture to entire corps by Prof. David Todd (subject, "Astronomy"), 11.15 to 12.15.
Inspection of Corps of Cadets, 1.25.
Baseball game, Fordham University, 3.
Track meet, Tufts College, 3.
Tennis, Syracuse University, 3.
Lacrosse, New Lacrosse Club, 4.15.

The immediate mission of the Military Academy, which exists solely as a feeder for the Army, is to prepare officer personnel for the next possible future war. After an extensive investigation of conditions at West Point the board is of the opinion that the superintendent, the Academic Board, the officers on duty at the academy, and the Corps of Cadets are responding in a splendid spirit in carrying out this mission. For many years there has been an impression in Congress and throughout the country generally that there existed at West Point a system of hazing new cadets which manifested itself in the form of heaping upon them petty annoyances, discomforting situations, vexations, and, in some instances, treatment that was offensive and defenseless. In the past, Congress has taken cognizance of this fact by making special investigations, and superintendents have from time to time endeavored to break up these practices, but the customs of a century become deeply rooted and are not easily broken up. Congressional investigations and superintendents' orders failed to accomplish their purpose. It took a World War to bring the Academy face to face with the situation and to create the conditions and environments necessary to bring about a real change and stamp out the practice of hazing.

For the first time in our history the country found itself in the World War as a Nation in arms. The Regular Army, so far as the commissioned personnel is concerned, was practically broken up as an organization, and Regular officers were assigned to duty throughout all parts of this Great War Army. This brought Regular officers into immediate contact with and, in many cases, in command of the citizen soldier. The experience of those contacts demonstrated that in meeting the requirements of such assignments an officer is required to have a very broad point of view, tact, and patience in rubbing elbows with men entirely unaccustomed to military discipline and to the peculiar conditions surrounding military life as well as to have a high sense of discipline and of duty and thorough professional training. Gen. MacArthur had unusual opportunities during the war to observe these conditions, and he became impressed with the necessity of providing the means for meeting such requirements. Upon assuming the duties of Superintendent of the Military Academy in 1919, he conceived the idea of putting into the West Point training those things necessary to start the cadet along lines which would make it easy and natural for him as an officer to respond to the requirements of this new method of handling great citizen armies in time of war. While he thoroughly appreciated the primary importance of retaining in the West Point training those characteristics of rigid discipline, thoroughness, and high character building which had made West Point famous for more than a century of its life, he began an investigation and a study of conditions and methods which have resulted in modifying the cadet's training so that while it retains all of these essential characteristics it has lost most, perhaps all, of that harsh character which made it the subject of so much criticism before the World War. This has been accomplished by liberalizing the life of the cadet; by bringing him into more immediate and closer contact with the officers who are instructing and training him; by granting him a small money allowance; by granting him authority to receive packages as ordinary mail, without inspection; by granting him 6-hour leaves at week ends; by placing upon him a greater degree of military responsibility similar to that which he must assume as an officer of the Army; by bringing him, during the summer encampment, into association with the enlisted personnel of the Regular Army; by allowing each class to organize by electing a president and other class officers; by opening the First Classmen's Club; by establishing a departure book in each company orderly room, thereby doing away with a great mass of routine permits for privileges of dining on the post; and by introducing into the curriculum a system of supervised athletic training.

The academic course has been modified to accord with the best thought of the scholastic world and some changes have been made in methods of instruction. The old custom of giving a cadet extra instruction only when he asked for it has been developed into a system whereby the cadet whose standing falls below a certain mark is required to receive extra instruction not only in subjects in review but also on the advanced lesson for the following day. This system has the effect not only of giving the cadet additional instruction but also of teaching him how to study, and it has resulted in saving to the academy, and therefore to the Army, many cadets of adequate mental equipment who, under the old system, due to lack of preparation before entering the academy or to proper direction in studying after entering the academy, would have been found deficient and discharged from the academy. It is believed that the development of this system will result in saving to the Army every cadet who has the mental equipment necessary to master the course. A course in public speaking and debating has been introduced, and a number of lessons are given covering aerodynamics and the principles of internal-combustion engines. In order that the Military Academy might derive the maximum results from the instructors on duty at the academy there has been put into effect a practice of having each instructor spend the first year of his West Point detail at a civilian college or university where he can specialize in the particular subject in which he is going to instruct at West Point. This is an excellent policy and is highly commended. Instructors are impressed with the necessity of teaching the cadet rather than simply hearing the recitation. In order to develop a closer relationship and contact with the general progress of instruction, not only at civilian institutions of learning but also in the Army, the practice has been adopted of sending members of the academic board to visit civilian institutions and the general and special service schools in the Army. These visits are proving to be highly beneficial to the academy.

We wish to especially approve the introduction in the course of a new chair for the study of economics, including general outline fundamental principles of economics followed by study of industrial organization and combination and of the financial organization of society.

The method of rating a cadet for final determination of his class standing at graduation has been changed by adopting a rating scale whereby each cadet is given a standing based not only upon scholarship but on military bearing, neatness, and soldierly appearance; leadership and personality; efficiency at drills, military instruction, athletics, and extra curriculum activities. This rating is also used to determine the appointment of cadet officers and noncommissioned officers in the battalion organization.

One of the outstanding features of the new training at West Point is the system of supervised athletics. The course in physical training at the Military Academy has been extended and developed along sound and progressive lines. This development follows the teachings of the World War.

It is not sufficient that a young officer should be reared under the theory of "a sound mind in a sound body." The hardships of campaign, the necessity of actual physical leadership, and superior endurance on the part of all officers on the field of battle requires that our young officers should be trained to an ideal of athletic and physical leadership. Every officer an athlete is not only a fitting and proper ideal of our officers but is, in fact, an actual necessity.

The fact that one out of every three of the available youth of the country was rejected during the draft for the World War should give all our educational institutions and Congress itself cause for reflection. It is altogether fitting that the Military Academy, under the guidance of Congress, should take the lead in this matter and inaugurate a course in physical development which may well be taken as a model for other institutions.

The present course at West Point is based on and is in extension of an excellent system of military gymnastics which has been taught the entering classes for many years. During the allotted afternoon period military drill and intramural athletics now alternate for all classes. Every cadet is required to participate in all major sports under the supervision of officer instructors. Not only is good physique developed but the resulting competitions develop and promote the vital soldierly qualities of courage, command, decision, and leadership. The benefits to our young officers are profound and abiding.

The benefits to the service at large will prove far-reaching. Troops in poor physical condition are worthless. Young officers who have been prepared under this system of physical instruction will assume athletic leadership among the troops of their command, fully qualified to instruct the troops in all those various branches of sport and athletic activities which are so important in maintaining physical fitness and high morale. The effect upon the Army at large of an extensive system of competitive sports controlled by competent and well-prepared officers can not be overestimated. As such officers reach the service it is certain that their influence will be felt in a most beneficial manner.

Not the least of the advantages arising from this system of athletics is the mixture on athletic teams of upper classmen and first-year cadets, the so-called "plebes." It is difficult to haze the same lad that one also fosters as a team mate. The result is that the enlarged policy in athletics and physical training not only satisfies the vital requirements of a soldier's training but also offers a splendid counteraction to the vicious and un-American institution of hazing. In effect a new, buoyant, cheerful quality is wrought in the cloistered life of the cadet.

The board heartily approves of the development of the course in physical training. Indeed, it feels that the question of conducting a model course in physical training and athletics at this great military school is so vital and so closely allied to the broad question of the betterment of the physical qualifications of the youth of the Nation that it recommends the establishment at the Military Academy of a separate department of physical training. Physical qualities determine the destiny of the intellect. In military life physical leadership is a necessary ideal. It is more than self-evident that if separate branches of intellectual activity require separate departments, this fundamental and basic branch of training requires a department of its own.

It is the belief of the board that this new department of physical training should be established at the academy coordinate with the academic departments and that at the head of it should be a director of athletics appointed in the same manner and with the same standing on the academic board as the professors of the academic departments.

The board is greatly impressed with and approves the spirit of popularizing this great national institution, and the board is strongly of the opinion that nothing should be done by Congress, the War Department, or the Military Academy itself which would be in the nature of a backward step in this matter. West Point is situated in a more or less isolated spot in the fastnesses of the legendary highlands of the Hudson. This isolation, together with the essentially Spartan character of the school itself, has a tendency to prevent the people of the country from becoming well acquainted with the academy. The history of the academy, the great achievements of its graduates, and the influence it has had on the life of our country, mark it as a priceless institution of our Government.

In 1860 Gen. Winfield Scott said:

"I give it as my fixed opinion that but for our graduated cadets the war between the United States and Mexico might, and probably would, have lasted some four or five years with, in its first half, more defeats than victories falling to our share; whereas, in less than two campaigns, we conquered a great country and a peace without the loss of a single battle or skirmish."

In 1899 Elihu Root said:

"The foregoing considerations naturally bring to mind the Military Academy at West Point. I believe that the great service which it has rendered the country was never more conspicuous than it has been during the past two years. The faithful and efficient service of its graduates since the declaration of the War with Spain have more than repaid the cost of the institution since its foundation. They have been too few in number and most heavily burdened."

In 1902 Theodore Roosevelt said:

"This institution has completed its first hundred years of life. During that century no other educational institution in the land has contributed so many names as West Point has contributed to the honor roll of the Nation's greatest citizens."

It is the opinion of the board that the people of the country have known too little of this institution in the past and it is our belief that the efforts now being made to bring the academy into closer touch with the people of the country and to inform the people of its purpose and its method is a step in the right direction that has been too long delayed. Sending the Corps of Cadets away from West Point for the summer encampment and to New York and New Haven to the football games are most important factors in bringing the academy nearer to the people. The board is of the opinion that not only should the cadets as individuals be allowed to mingle very freely with the people by the extension of leave privileges, but that the corps as a body should be sent from time to time to the Middle West and even to the Pacific coast for the summer encampment or to attend athletic contests. In all this the board is mindful of the fact that there must be nothing done at West Point itself or elsewhere which will in any manner tend to lower the standards of discipline, thorough training, and character building which have characterized the institution during all of its life and which are primarily responsible for the great accomplishments of its graduates.

Under the theory of national defense which has been followed by this country during all of its history, and which is definitely laid down in law in the act of June 4, 1920, namely, that the defense of the Nation must rest upon the shoulders of the citizen soldier, it is tremendously important to maintain, in time of peace, a highly trained professional commissioned personnel in the Regular Army as a nucleus about which the great mass of citizens can and must form in time of war. This group of professional officers must be not only of the highest professional attainments but of the highest character and with the highest ideals of duty and of service, and it is the opinion of the board that not less than 50 per cent of them should be recruited from this great democratic school at West Point. In order to do this the present strength of the academy should under no circumstances be reduced. In fact, it is the opinion of the board that the present authorized strength of the Military Academy is inadequate unless some provision is made whereby the actual strength can be made equal to the authorized strength. The bill to accomplish this purpose which passed the Senate during the last session of Congress, but which failed of passage in the House, should be speedily enacted into law.

The board is greatly impressed with the democracy of the Corps of Cadets. This fact is strongly impressed upon every visitor to the academy. Gathering its students from every congressional district in the United States, and from every walk of life, assembling them together under the same roof, requiring them to wear the same clothes eat the same food, pass through the same course of study, get up and go to bed at the same hours, receive the same pay, and start always without handicap in the same competition, this great democratic school finds that friends, even roommates, remain throughout the four years ignorant of each other's social and financial status in the outside world. At West Point every boy starts from the same mark, standing on his own two feet, with the same opportunity as every other boy to win his place, and whether he wins or loses depends upon his own efforts, his own industry, and his own ability, and not on his status or that of his family or friends outside the institution.

The housing accommodations for both officers and cadets at the Military Academy are entirely inadequate to the requirements of the institution. A building program has been worked out after many years of careful study and the most painstaking investigation of the requirements of the institution, and it is the opinion of the board that the practical benefits to be derived by the Government of the United States from completing this program and thereby providing the necessary housing accommodations for the personnel at the academy are so much greater than the amount of money involved that it is poor policy on the part of Congress to delay the completion of this program any longer. It is urgently recommended that appropriations be made at once sufficient for the construction of the south barracks where the mess hall now stands and for the construction of a new cadet mess hall on the site of the old gymnasium. Present messing facilities for the cadets are wholly inadequate. The present mess hall has been in service more than 50 years. It is old and is falling into decay and is not well adapted to its present use. The completion of the new mess hall and the new barracks will add materially to the safety, comfort, and convenience of the Corps of Cadets. At the present time about 40 officers on duty at the academy and their families are living in rented quarters off the military reservation, some of them many miles from West Point. Many of the officers on the post are quartered in buildings not only inadequate in size but without any modern conveniences. The construction of a sufficient number of reasonable family quarters for the officer personnel on duty at the academy is urgently recommended, and an appropriation for this purpose should be made without delay.

The mechanical laboratory is installed in a building that was built in 1837. This building is dark and illy adapted for its use. In it is stored much valuable machinery salvaged from the World War. It should be replaced by a modern building, suitable in size and construction, where the highly important work which must be done here can be carried on satisfactorily.

A great deal has been said in the past regarding hotel accommodations at West Point. This subject has been frequently discussed on the floor of the House of Representatives. The total inadequacy of hotel accommodations can be properly appreciated only by a visit to West Point and enforced entertainment at the present hotel. The building which is now used as the hotel was constructed so many years ago that the exact date has been forgotten. It was originally built for use as a warehouse; later it was rearranged, remodeled, worked over, added to, propped up, patched, papered, and painted as succeeding generations came and passed on. It was first made habitable for the purpose of entertaining Gen. Lafayette. It is of composite construction—stone, brick, and wood. It is out of repair; it is a tottering and ramshackle building. In its silence, gloom, and decay it is strangely out of harmony with its surroundings, except that it is in keeping with its friendly neighbors on Trophy Point, where are preserved some of the relics of the early wars of the Republic. It is located on the banks of the Hudson River, commanding one of the most magnificent views in America. It should be torn down at once and a decent, modern hotel should be built in its place. This subject has been so thoroughly discussed that action should be taken by Congress without delay, the necessary appropriation made, and the hotel built.

In concluding this report, the board desires to emphasize its strong approval of the splendid service that Gen. McArthur and the officers associated with him are rendering to the country by constructing a new West Point founded on the lessons and experience and the sacrifices of the World War and in the spirit of old West Point.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose at this time to go into a full discussion of the railroad-rate question. I hope to have the opportunity for discussing the railroad-rate question thoroughly when the hearings now being held before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, of which I am a member, are concluded.

More than a year ago the railroad companies issued a statement in which they said there would be a sweeping reduction in rates throughout the country within a short time; that business was reviving, and it would not be long until industry would be stabilized throughout the entire country. They urged the people to be patient and indulgent with the railroads.

Last summer the President of the United States visited the Interstate Commerce Commission, and upon his return to the White House posed for photographers, and with the picture was published a statement that a sweeping reduction would be made in railroad rates throughout the United States, that business generally would be revived, and that we were at the dawning of a new era of prosperity. The big newspapers throughout the country carried in bold headlines news of the actions of the President. The people were led to believe that there was an honest effort and intention on the part of the Interstate Commerce Commission to reduce freight rates.

Grain men and live-stock dealers, lumbermen, and business men generally of the South and West have appeared in large numbers before the Interstate Commerce Commission pleading for a reduction in freight rates, at which time they showed the commission that there was almost a general paralysis of business on account of the excessive freight rates. The Interstate Commerce Commission listened attentively, but has given very little relief to their petitioners.

Recently the railroad commissions and public utilities commissions of practically every State in the Union have protested against the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which under the provisions of the transportation act has not only prescribed the rates to be charged in interstate commerce but has actually deprived the States of the right to regulate intrastate commerce, although intrastate rates were just and reasonable and were nondiscriminatory.

The State railroad commissions contested the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission. That contest finally found its way into the Supreme Court of the United States. I refer to the Wisconsin Rate case recently decided by the United States Supreme Court. That court upheld the provisions of the transportation act which give to the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to fix the rates so the railroads could earn a fair return on the value of the property, and among other things upheld the contentions of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The railroad companies deny the authority of the State public utilities commissions to exercise any control whatever over rate making in intrastate commerce, and have even gone so far as to have the Federal court of the State of Illinois enjoin the railroad commission from exercising any authority over rate making, which injunction is to-day in full force and effect. The same conditions exist in several other States.

The only relief for the people of the United States lies with the Congress. If Congress will not grant this relief, the people must continue to bear these unjust burdens.

The charge that the railroad companies are losing money all the time is an infamous falsehood, made for the purpose of deceiving the public and creating a sentiment in favor of the railroads that they may continue to rob the people.

To prove my statement and to show that the railroad companies are not honest and have no intention of dealing fairly and justly with the Government, I direct your attention to the provisions of the transportation act which requires all railroad companies earning more than 6 per cent on the value of their property used in transportation from September 1, 1920, to turn half of the excess so earned over to the United States Government for the support of the weaker railroads. Many of the railroads are shown to have earned many times the 6 per cent, as shown by reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The railroads earning the amounts more than 6 per cent have been ordered by the Interstate Commerce Commission to turn 50 per cent of the excess over to the Government in compliance with the provisions of the transportation act for the support of the weaker roads, but that order has been ignored by the railroad companies, and they have retained all the money up to this time and have no intention of turning any part of it over to the Government.

The Interstate Commerce Commission objects to the repeal of section 15a of the transportation act. In fact the commission is opposed to the repeal of any of the provisions of the transportation act, and so we can hope for no relief from the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Now, listen, gentlemen, this is the Interstate Commerce Commission, our servants, supposed to be the servants of the people, and it objects to the repeal of section 15a of the transportation act. They have submitted a report on a bill introduced by myself and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The Interstate Commerce Commission has protested the repeal of that section. And so, I say, if there is any relief for the people of this country it must come from Congress, because the Interstate Commerce Commission is not going to do anything in that respect.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that I have not spoken this afternoon I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, but if there are any more propositions out of order this afternoon I am going to object and make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I will.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Do I understand that when the gentleman introduced the bill he sent it to the Interstate Commerce Commission and asked for its opinion on it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Yes, sir.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Now the gentleman objects to the Interstate Commerce Commission expressing an opinion unfavorable to his bill. How can the gentleman consistently object to their expressing an opinion when they were asked to do so?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. The bill was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The chairman of that committee referred it to the Interstate Commerce Commission for report. That commission reported adversely on the bill, and took the side of the railroads as against the people. That is the answer to the gentleman's question.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. To what section of the bill do you refer?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. In that particular case, to section 15a. But I am in favor of repealing paragraphs 3 and 4 of section 13 and section 15a.

The railroad companies have a great organization opposing the repeal of section 15a, or in fact any other part of the transportation act. They are causing propaganda to be sent to the Congressmen, and every influence is at work that can be brought to bear by them.

Let me read you a few letters that have been sent out by the Railway Business Association, which is composed of men who own stocks and bonds in the railroad companies and who are engaged in the manufacture of railway materials and equipment, and who are contractors in railway construction and dealers in miscellaneous railway supplies. These people can, under the provisions of the transportation act, sell to the railroad companies, which is nothing more than selling to themselves, materials at any price they care to charge and make just as big profits as their conscience will permit, if they have any conscience.

Under the provisions of the transportation act the Government guarantees to the railroad companies a fair return, which will no doubt be fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission at 6 per cent on the value of their investment, and there is no restriction put on the amount they shall pay for materials, construction work, or anything else. They can waste and steal as much as they like, yet the United States guarantees this return on their investment. No accounting to the Government is required of the amount paid for materials, construction, supplies, or anything else. They can pay their officers any salaries they care to, and yet the Government guarantees a fair return on the investment.

No wonder the railroad companies are opposed to repealing this law. No wonder they are lobbying against it. Listen to these letters:

RAILWAY BUSINESS ASSOCIATION,
Philadelphia.

I inclose a copy of a letter which is going to Railway Business Association members asking their cooperation in efforts to preserve from threatened repeal the rule of railway rate making in the transportation act and the provisions asserting Federal control over State rates.

You are particularly well situated to cooperate in this effort, if you agree with us, because your company maintains a membership in the National Industrial Traffic League. Before addressing you we have discussed with some of the officers of the league the propriety of sending you this letter and the view was expressed no objection could be made to our placing the views of the association before you.

Can you help us? If you do not at present see your way clear to do so, may we present the matter to you at your convenience?

Yours, truly,

ALBA B. JOHNSON, President.

The letter inclosed follows:

MEMBERS: We have dropped everything else to concentrate all available influence upon defeat of the threatened repeal of (1) the adequate income clause in the transportation act, and (2) the Federal jurisdiction over intrastate rates which is essential to administration of the adequate-income clause. To pass this repeal would restore the chaotic irresponsibility and short-sightedness in rate regulation which stopped railway growth and broke the railways down. It would protract and aggravate indefinitely the famine in railroad orders and portend disastrous car shortage and freight congestion when traffic becomes heavy.

Not alone to defeat the railroad funding bill but to accomplish the two repeals above specified, possibly as a rider on the funding bill, such strength has developed in the Senate that a careful check-up fails to disclose a clear and pledged majority opposed to the movement, and similar sentiment is reported to pervade the House.

The repealer is the Capper bill (S. 1150). The Senate committee has heard advocates. The Association of Railway Executives witnesses began yesterday in opposition. There is widespread business and agricultural pressure in favor of the bill or something similar.

The situation calls for effort as great and harder to mobilize than that which our association, with others, put forth in 1920 to enact the provisions now menaced. To fail is to lose the best of what we labored 10 years to attain.

We urge upon Congress:

FUNDING BILL.

1. Prompt and separate passage of the Winslow-Townsend bill (H. R. 2337) to enable President Harding, without appropriation by Congress, to fund, as already authorized by law, sums due the Government from the railways on capital account, and hence waive the set-off and remit to the roads in cash sums due them on noncapital account.

CAPPER BILL.

2. Rejection of the Capper bill (S. 1150) to repeal in the transportation act the adequate-income clause and the clause establishing Federal jurisdiction over all rates of carriers doing interstate business.

PRESSURE ON THE COMMISSION.

3. Cessation of political pressure upon the Interstate Commerce Commission for rate reductions in advance of reductions in railway labor cost.

(Our procedure as to railway labor cost is scheduled for a separate activity later.)

After yourself communicating with the chairmen of the Interstate Commerce Committees (Senator ALBERT B. CUMMINS and Representative SAMUEL E. WINSLOW) and the Senators and Representatives from your State, you are earnestly urged to call a conference of your company staff and ascertain which of them—or of officers at branch plants or sales offices—is best situated to conduct one or more of the following activities in favor of our program:

1. Authorize the traffic manager to urge the program through the National Industrial Traffic League and in freight bureau committees of commercial bodies.

2. Arrange appeals to their members by business organizations, especially national bodies which have contacts in the agricultural States.

3. Enlist individuals politically active to communicate with or see Senators and Representatives whom they know.

It will vitally aid us to receive prompt advice of all efforts and all results, including replies from Members of Congress.

Yours, truly,

ALBA B. JOHNSON,
President.

Another letter from the association follows:

The Railway Business Association very much needs your help in its exertion for preservation of the cardinal principle of railway regulation embodied for the first time in Federal law in 1920. The principle is this: That while protecting the public against discriminations and other improprieties the Government will discharge its responsibility for the financial results of its regulation as affecting net railway income, and hence ability of carriers to provide adequate facilities. Section 15a of the act directs that rates upon each railway group as a whole shall be designed to yield a fair return, giving due consideration to the transportation needs of the country and the necessity of enlarging the facilities in order to provide adequate transportation. Section 13 enlarges Federal control over discrimination by the States so as to include discrimination not only as between persons or localities but as against interstate commerce itself, a provision essential to the administration of the adequate-income clause.

Both these vital provisions are under heavy attack. The agricultural bloc in the Senate is urging the Capper bill (S. 1150), which would repeal both. The proposal is also making some industrial headway.

I have been reading letters from this association, sent out by them, and by which they hope to bring pressure to bear to prevent Congressmen from passing this law.

I will read further:

Among the business organizations which favor preservation of the principles in question besides our own are the Chamber of Commerce of the United States and the National Association of Manufacturers. The National Industrial Traffic League, in annual meeting November 9, relegated the proposed repeals to further discussion.

If it is the policy of your company to promote the preservation of the rule of adequate income and Federal control over State rates, you can aid very much in retaining the cooperation of other organizations for that policy by endeavoring to have your local freight bureaus and shippers' traffic organizations work for it. If you have the slightest doubt about it, will you not give us an opportunity to discuss the question with you?

You know the caliber and diversity of the men who actively lead the Railway Business Association. This organization for 10 years labored to attain the result which it is now sought to overturn. We regard these provisions as the keystone of the arch—not only the arch of railway regulation but the arch of stability for representative government capable of solving business problems.

Your frank and full response will be a substantial contribution to the solution of this most serious problem.

Yours, truly,

ALBA B. JOHNSON, President.

Mr. Chairman, the reason I at this time take the floor in this matter is because the railroad companies and their allies in business are at work to try to perpetuate this transportation act to the great injury of the whole people of the United States.

I believe it will serve a good purpose for some one to make known the activities of the railroads in this matter, as the big newspapers of Washington are favorable to the railroad companies and are giving no publicity of the fact that people are flocking to Washington trying to get the transportation act amended, and very few people know an honest effort is being made by some Members of Congress to try and get relief.

You will see by these letters that the Railway Business Association is preparing to swoop down on Congress to influence it against any change in the transportation act.

Such an insidious lobby as is proposed by these letters I have just read will convince you that the railroad companies do not propose to stop at anything necessary to defeat any effort to amend the transportation act. I trust this lobby will meet with the rebuke such conduct deserves.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the necessary number of words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves to strike out the last three words.

Mr. DUNBAR. I am interested in knowing if any department of this Government has a surplus of automobiles, and I want to know from any Member of the House who has authority to state it whether or not the War Department has a surplus number of automobiles?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will state that they already have a large surplus of 3,500, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] says they have 5,000.

Mr. DUNBAR. What authority have you for the statement?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is stated here they appeared before the committee, and the Assistant Secretary of the Department of Agriculture called it to the attention of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. DUNBAR. That the War Department had a surplus of automobiles?

Mr. HAUGEN. That is general knowledge. Everybody knows about that.

Mr. DUNBAR. But general knowledge, so termed, is sometimes only general belief.

Mr. HAUGEN. I am speaking of the past.

Mr. DUNBAR. I want to know if there is to-day a surplus of automobiles in the War Department, and I want to know the authority for the statement?

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman can ask that question of the War Department.

Mr. DUNBAR. I have.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the gentleman knows, why does he ask the question?

Mr. DUNBAR. Because I do not want false impressions to go out. I do not refer to the gentleman, of course. I do not want any information to go out through the proceedings of Congress that will mislead the people of the United States. This morning we have had a discussion in which it has been declared time and again that there is a surplus of automobiles in the War Department, and if there is I want to know it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption right there?

Mr. DUNBAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Why does the gentleman confine it to the War Department?

Mr. DUNBAR. Because I want one piece of information at a time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Whether the Government has in its possession at this time a surplus of automobiles would be the question, because the Government, being the owner, could transfer them where it pleased.

Mr. DUNBAR. The War Department has had more automobiles in its possession than any other department of the Government. Now, I went down to the War Department to find out and to get information on that subject, and I was informed that there was no surplus automobiles in that department, but that they only had such a number as the exigencies or demands might at any time require.

Mr. HAUGEN. Can the gentleman give the number on hand, or the number that was disposed of, outside of the number that was transferred to the road departments of the States?

Mr. DUNBAR. No, sir; I can not.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. I wish to say to the gentleman that there is a fine distinction between surplus and more on hand than they need. From the standpoint of the War Department, they have no surplus, because they have not declared them surplus, although they may have many thousands of automobiles they have no use for. They may have thousands of automobiles lying around that somebody ought to be using.

Mr. DUNBAR. "Surplus automobiles" means automobiles for which the Government has no use, now or prospectively.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. A department surplus means stock they have declared surplus.

Mr. DUNBAR. The gentleman is making a technical distinction.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. That is what the War Department makes.

Mr. DUNBAR. The gentleman is making a technical distinction.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. That is what the War Department makes when they give you that information.

Mr. DUNBAR. What authority has the gentleman for that statement?

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. I know what they consider surplus.

Mr. DUNBAR. I have their statement that they have no surplus automobiles. Does the gentleman believe the War Department has on hand a number of automobiles they have no use for now or prospectively, and which they can or should dispose of?

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. I know the War Department had on hand a great deal of material of various kinds which they have declined and refused to declare surplus, and until it is declared surplus it is not considered surplus by the War Department.

Mr. DUNBAR. Has the gentleman the statement of any official of the War Department to that effect?

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. I do not need it from the War Department. You have it from me.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that the debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto be now closed. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, Division of Publications, $427,830.
Library, Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses, library: For books of reference, law books, technical and scientific books, newspapers and periodicals, and for expenses incurred in completing imperfect series; for the employment of additional assistants in the city of Washington and elsewhere; for official traveling expenses, and for library fixtures, library cars, supplies, and for all other necessary expenses, $25,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has called my attention to what is evidently a misprint, on line 21 of page 55, where the word "cars" should be changed to the word "cards."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the spelling of the word "cards" be corrected. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For farmers' cooperative demonstration work, including special suggestions of plants and methods for more effective dissemination of the results of the work of the Department of Agriculture and the agricultural experiment stations and of improved methods of agricultural practice, at farmers' institutes and in agricultural instruction, and for the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, supplies, and all other necessary expenses, $1,300,000: Provided, That the expense of such service shall be defrayed from this appropriation and such cooperative funds may be voluntarily contributed by State, county, and municipal agencies, associations of farmers, and individual farmers, universities, colleges, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, other local associations of business men, business organizations, and individuals within the State.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. I want to ask the gentleman from Minnesota the reason for the consolidation of the two previous items in this one item.

Mr. ANDERSON. The division has been an absolute fiction for many years.

Mr. MANN. I know that the division of the cotton boll weevil work has been a fiction. They went ahead with the farm bureau work and did good work in the South, and then we commenced to appropriate money for similar work in the Northern States. I do not know that I have any objection if it is the same class of work, although I do not know what the division may be in the future.

Mr. ANDERSON. Well, I will state to the gentleman that the Secretary has in mind, as I understand it, the reorganization of this entire extension activity. This is only an incident of that reorganization. I think it very badly needs a reorganization, and I hope it will be done.

Mr. MANN. Very well. Heretofore, however, when there was an item in the bill distinctly for the South the Members from the North had a sort of tendency to prevent it being swelled too much, and when similar items were inserted for work in the Northern States there was a tendency on the part of southern Members to prevent them from being swelled too much. Now, with the combined paragraph nobody will be opposed to the swelling of it and everybody will be in favor of increasing it. That is going to be the result. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON. The answer to that is this, that instead of increasing it for this year we have reduced it about $60,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I do that in order to obtain recognition, not because I am opposed to the work or to the consolidation. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that in addition to the total appropriations carried in this bill for demonstration work, amounting to $7,000,000, that fund is supplemented by appropriations from the States and counties amounting approximately to $11,000,000, making a total of $18,000,000 for demonstration work in the country. That large sum is expended under the supervision of the Department of Agriculture, and because I am in favor of this demonstration work I regret exceedingly that there seems to be a tendency in the department to divert too large a proportion of this fund from the purpose for which it was originally intended, namely, the expenditure in counties for demonstration work by county agents, bringing to the farms assistance in solving the problems that daily confront the farmer and the farmer's wife, to the employment of specialists and leaders and supervisors.

The hearings develop the fact that of this $18,000,000 fund almost $7,000,000 is expended to direct the activities of $11,000,000 worth of people, as the chairman of this subcommittee expressed it. The fact is that they are spending for specialists $3,355,000. The specialists make headquarters at the agricultural colleges and necessarily spend most of their time on the train. It was never intended by Congress that so large a sum should be diverted to the employment of specialists. Yet it appears from the hearings that this is the policy of the officials of the department, judging from the statement of Mr. Pugsley, who is in charge of this work. He says:

> I believe that the work would be more effective and the money would be better spent if we would take some of the money that has gone into the poorest agents trained and put into the trained specialists who would be assistants in the field. They would be more highly trained men for special work, and you could get better results among the farmers. The farmers are growing to feel that way also, as they become better acquainted with the work.

The fact is, if they were to take some of the money that they are spending for specialists and spend it for the purposes that Congress intended it to be expended for, for county agents, they would not have so many poor county agents. They would have county agents better equipped to render the service that Congress intended should be rendered in the counties. The employment of some specialists is wise, but the problems of the farm differ in every county, and the best service can be rendered by the county agents. The $2,000,000 spent for specialists would, if diverted to county agents, insure the employment of more capable men. They propose to spend for leaders of clubs and leaders of county agents approximately $2,000,000, which is entirely too much. I have no objection to the amount spent for administration, but I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee, who from the hearings evidently shares the views I have expressed, whether he has any objection to placing a limitation upon the amount that shall be expended for specialists under this item?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think it would be wholly ineffective if it were done, unless it were applied to funds available under the Smith-Lever Act as well as under this.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Well, I agree with the gentleman, but what does he say as to both items?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think, of course, I would have to object to legislation modifying the terms of the Smith-Lever Act.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does the gentleman approve of their spending this large amount for specialists?

Mr. ANDERSON. That is a rather difficult question. I am frank to say that I am of the opinion I expressed in the hearings, that the whole proposition is rather top-heavy. Now, whether that is entirely in the specialists or in the leadership is rather difficult to say; but my understanding is that the Secretary is now undertaking a reorganization of this whole extension work with the idea of coordinating the leadership, so that so large a part of the funds will not hereafter be spent in that way.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the gentleman is of the opinion that the department itself will reorganize the service, they can do it more effectively than we could by placing a limitation upon the expenditure of funds in this bill, and they can do it in such manner that no injury will be done to the demonstration work.

In this connection I want to say something with reference to the home demonstration work among rural women. It has progressed to such an extent that other nations are adopting the plan followed by us. This work was inaugurated officially by Dr. Knapp, but it was originated in the county of Aiken, S. C., by a young woman with brains, courage, and energy—Miss Marie Cromer. She was the pioneer, and because of her enthusiasm she was able to induce Dr. Knapp to undertake this work among rural women. It has developed until now in nearly every county in the United States trained women are engaged in this home demonstration work, assisting the women on the farms in solving the problems of their daily farm life. The story of the origin of this work is well told in the book recently published by Prof. O. B. Martin, of the Department of Agriculture, a most interesting book, reciting the development of demonstration work in this country and very properly giving great credit to Dr. Knapp for his contribution to its development.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Recently I sent out questionnaires to the ex-service men in my district for the purpose of getting expressions of opinion from them on the subject of the bonus. A statement of the results of those questionnaires has been printed in the York (Pa.) Dispatch of March 10, 1922. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk read the article printed in the Dispatch.

Mr. ANDERSON. I shall have to object to that.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. It is very important, and will be of interest to every Member of the House.

Mr. ANDERSON. If we should read everything that would be interesting to Members of the House we would be here a long time; and after what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said a few minutes ago, I shall have to object.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Then I ask unanimous consent that this article be printed in to-day's RECORD, for the benefit of everybody.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the article indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The article is as follows:

[From the York (Pa.) Dispatch, Mar. 10, 1922.]

ABOUT 25 PER CENT FAVOR CASH BONUS—MORE THAN 50 PER CENT DESIRE INSURANCE, CONGRESSMAN BROOKS FINDS—CANVASS OF VETERANS.

Not more than 25 per cent of the rank and file of the World War veterans of York and Adams Counties desire a cash bonus. Fully 50 per cent favor the endowment insurance plan above all others. Twenty per cent prefer aid in the purchase of a home or farm. The sentiment of the remainder is divided between the two other options offered—assistance in obtaining vocational training and land settlement, carrying with it a provision for employment for ex-service men. The proportion that declare themselves against any form of adjusted compensation is negligible.

In an effort to ascertain the views of the World War veterans of his district, comprising York and Adams Counties, Congressman BROOKS recently sent out 5,000 circular letters to that number of veterans, inviting them to express their preferences for his guidance in voting on the measure. From the great number of replies received up to this time the above percentages are given. Just six veterans, the Congressman stated to-day, declared for no bonus at all. Of that number, four are wealthy men, prominently connected with industrial enterprises, to whom adjusted service would mean very little. Probably 5 per cent of the veterans to whom inquiries were addressed expressed a willingness to wait until business conditions in the country are better.

ENLIGHTENED REJECT CASH.

The York Congressman stated to-day that he believed that a campaign of enlightenment as to the advantages of the several options of the adjusted-compensation pay would materially reduce the number of those who express a preference for cash. He is led to this conclusion by collective votes submitted by posts of the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars and also by the disabled veterans to the number of about 200 at Mount Alto. These men, to whom the provisions of the bonus bill have been explained, have in only a few cases requested cash. Improvement in industrial conditions, he stated, will further reduce the number asking for cash. A large number of the veterans who declared for cash wrote explanations to the effect that they are out of work and need actual cash more than anything else at this time.

The letters went out to only about half the ex-service men of the two counties. There is no complete list of World War veterans obtainable. The records of the War and Navy Departments are prepared in such manner that lists of ex-service men of any community can not be had from those sources. That of Congressman BROOKS, composed of the thousands who have obtained assistance of one sort or another through the York congressional office, and including the other lists at various times since the war in this district, is by far the most complete as to names and addresses in existence here. It is believed, however, that the ratio of replies received will hold good for all.

RESULT OF VOTE SURPRISING.

The percentage of requests for cash compensation is less than the most conservative estimates made by experts at Washington. Since the letter went out the loan-certificate plan has been proposed as a substitute for cash. This would have the effect, it is believed, of still further reducing the number who prefer the cash-payment plan.

Reasons given by many of the veterans for their various preferences shed much light on the attitude of the men who fought the war. The argument invariably made for payment of the bonus is that the men who remained at home received pay out of all proportion to that of the soldiers and sailors.

"COMMERCIALIZES PATRIOTISM."

There is, likewise, one argument advanced by the opponents of adjusted compensation. They declare that it would "commercialize patriotism." One of the opponents writes: "I see no reason why any ex-service man has any right to favor a bonus bill when he went into the service for the sole purpose of fighting for democracy. The majority of the men would not have anything to show for it inside of 10 days after it was paid, but the country at large would be struggling with a debt upon their shoulders which would take years to adjust."

A stipulation made by each opponent, that the wounded and other disabled be adequately cared for, is discounted by the fact that liberal provisions are being made for such care, Congressman BROOKS stated, even though many of these men do face discouraging delays until their cases can be adjusted.

MAJOR TAKES OPPOSITE VIEW.

The cause of the man desiring compensation is championed by a major who was at the front. Although his rank would exclude him from the benefits of the measure, he writes: "I am heartily in favor of adjusted compensation under the optional plan now—not some time in the distant future, for 'now' is almost too late. I do not believe that the issue of short-term Treasury notes to make the initial payments will begin to cause the financial chaos that some of our most prominent war profiteers love to predict."

From a soldier's hospital at New Haven, Conn., where he is lying broken in health, one boy who paid an enormous price that others might enjoy peace and prosperity, writes with a bitterness excusable when his condition is considered: "I never expect gratitude for what we did, so if the bill does not pass I will not be disappointed. I gave my position and my health to my country and I am not sorry. Tell them to buy guns for the war profiteers with this money and send them out to fight the next war."

DISABLED BOY BITTER.

Something of the same bitterness is expressed by another disabled veteran who writes: "I would be ashamed of the man who would capitalize his service to his country, but as an American I am more than ashamed of those who refuse to recognize that service with all its hardships and dangers. If we of the American Expeditionary Forces had worried as much about our three meals a day and our night's sleep, not to mention battles and poison gas, as some patriotic Americans who were 3,000 miles away—posing as farmers and hiding behind skirts—are worrying about the effects on their pocketbooks of paying a few dollars toward a just compensation, the money contemplated for a bonus would by this time have been spent many times over. To-day the Hindenburg line might be 'somewhere along the Atlantic coast,' and the Kaiser's collectors might even now be collecting taxes on those $18 silk shirts that were so necessary for the comfort of the slackers who remained at home."

Cancellation of the debt of allied countries which have paid liberal adjusted compensation to their own veterans is cited by some. One letter cites the $1,000 bonus and 250 acres of land given Revolutionary soldiers, and continues, "I think it is a shame that the richest country in the world has haggled over giving the soldier a bonus when all the other countries, even the poorest, two years ago gave a bonus to every soldier and officer in their armies."

A number of men write that they are purchasing homes and that the home-aid plan would go far to set them on their feet.

CONGRESSMAN BROOKS'S LETTER.

The letter sent out by Congressman BROOKS to the veterans, explaining the provisions of the bill, follows:

DEAR FRIEND: An earnest effort will be made to pass a soldiers' and sailors' adjusted compensation bill at this session of Congress.

I voted for the bonus bill in the last Congress, and am now interested in knowing the feeling of the service men toward the pending measure.

Do you desire adjusted compensation at this time or are you willing to wait until the financial condition of the country is more favorable? Please answer in opposite square "Now" or "Wait."

What is your preference among the five leading options contemplated, namely:

1. Adjusted service pay (cash) at $1 a day for home service and $1.25 for foreign service. Maximum, $500 for veteran without overseas service; $625 for overseas service. Payment to be in installments of $50 every three months.

2. A paid-up 20-year endowment insurance policy at no cost; face value, three and thirty-eight one-hundredths times amount of cash allowable under option 1, payable at death to beneficiary named or to veteran at end of 20 years. Loans on policy provided.

3. Vocational training aid of $1.75 a day while in training, amount not to exceed 140 per cent of cash allowable under option 1.

4. Farm or home aid providing payment of 140 per cent of cash allowable under option 1, providing money is used to purchase, improve, or make payments on home or farm.

5. Land settlement, providing reclamation projects to develop and improve vacant land in each State if possible, ex-service men to be employed in project. Adjusted service pay applied as first payments on purchase of this land, remainder in 40 years, at 5 per cent interest.

Please return this letter to my York office with (X) in the box opposite option you prefer, writing any ideas or suggestions on back of letter. As my list of World War veterans is incomplete, would suggest that you show this letter to any of your veteran friends who have not received one and urge them to express their preferences.

Write me at any time concerning this or any other matter that should have attention.

Very truly, yours,

E. S. BROOKS,
Member of Congress.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain agricultural experiment stations in Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, the island of Guam, and the Virgin Islands of the United States, including the erection of buildings, the preparation, illustration, and distribution of reports and bulletins, and all other necessary expenses, $210,000, as follows: Alaska, $75,000, of which $11,800, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be immediately available; Hawaii, $50,000; Porto Rico, $50,000; Guam, $15,000; and the Virgin Islands of the United States, $20,000; and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to sell such products as are obtained on the land belonging to the agricultural experiment stations in Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, the island of Guam, and the Virgin Islands of the United States, and the amount obtained from the sale thereof shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts: Provided, That of the sum herein appropriated for the experiment station in Hawaii $10,000 may be used in agricultural extension work in Hawaii.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words on this subject; but having no desire to take up the time of the House, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the bill which we have under consideration appropriates nearly thirty-five millions for the promotion of agriculture. The amount is large, but it is less than the cost of one superdreadnaught, the building of many of which we shall discontinue if the disarmament pacts are ratified. Agriculture even as a national defense is worth many battleships.

The people of the State of which I have the honor to represent one district here, I need not say, are vitally interested in this legislation. Iowa's premiership in American agriculture will be disputed by none. The 300 miles between the Mississippi and the Missouri are, I believe, all things considered, the richest and most favored lands on the habitable globe. The Department of Agriculture, for which we are making these appropriations, as it now exists and functions, was virtually created by an Iowa man, the late James Wilson, still known as "Tama Jim," because he hailed from Tama County, in which a band of Indians still maintains a precarious but picturesque existence. As a Member of this House, I am proud to say that this great creative man was one of my predecessors in Congress from the fifth district of Iowa.

I have been both pleased and amused by the things that have been said in praise of agriculture during the debates on this bill. As I have listened I have become more convinced than ever that we all love the farmer—at least politically. Love for the man who tills the soil has slipped from the lips of men who represent rock-ribbed Massachusetts, where corn is grown in patches, and it has welled up from the hearts of men who come from black-loamed Iowa, where the tall corn grows mile on mile.

But the affection for the farmers that has been displayed on this floor during these debates has not been mere lip service. On the contrary, I know that it has been more sincere. Farming is not a sectional occupation. It is almost universal. It is the one calling that is of all most national. It is basic. It is fundamental. It is the corner stone in the structure of our prosperity and it is the keystone in the arch of our national greatness. The first command given to man was to till the soil, and when that labor ceases the human race will have run its course.

In the recent months we have learned anew that we not only live by agriculture but that industrially, commercially, and financially we thrive by it. In the autumn of 1920, when farm prices declined until the farmers were no longer able to buy, stagnation soon followed. All industrial, commercial, and financial operations were dislocated and many of them were stopped altogether. The revival of this industry became the first care of the Congress and the first thought of the Nation.

Standing in such a vital relation to life and to business, why should anyone in this House, whatever district he may hail from, want to do less than all he can to promote agricultural welfare and stability? Could any man who sits in the Congress be untrue to this industry and still true to his country and his country's welfare and prosperity?

It has been said on the floor of this House, although not in these debates particularly, that the decline in farm prices came with the return of the Republican Party to power. It is not true that they came as cause and effect, and it is not even true that they came concurrently. I will not say that the fall in farm prices and the universal depression which began in the autumn of 1920 came through the political party that was then still in power. That would be too partisan, too narrow, and too illogical a position to take in even a political debate. Peace deflation had to follow war inflation. Extravagance and speculation had to give way to economy and distress.

But it is not impossible of belief, and it is even susceptible of proof, that the conditions were aggravated by the extravagances which had been encouraged by the party which had been in power and by a lack of confidence in the industrial policies of that party. The country was still under the Democratic version of free trade, and free trade, or even tariff for revenue, in this country has never bred either confidence or prosperity.

It may easily be recalled, although many things have intervened, that in the summer of 1914, just before the outbreak of the World War, there were many evidences of an industrial depression under the Democratic tariff law of 1913. It had come upon us like a creeping sickness. Unemployment was increasing in midsummer and the soup houses of 1893, under another tariff for revenue, with protection left out, were in the offing. During that summer of 1914, under the then newly enacted Democratic tariff, wheat sold in Iowa as low as 55 cents a bushel.

It was the Great War that saved us, such salvation as it was. On the breaking out of that catastrophe there was an immediate demand for all our products and that at rising prices. It was not without reason that some politicians thanked God for the war, not realizing at that time what that war was to mean to us and to the world. The declaration of war in Europe in effect repealed the free trade tariff in America and saved us from the industrial disasters inherent in such tariffs.

For a while even after the armistice was signed the free trade tariff remained inoperative. For a while also prices were buoyed up by wild speculations, and later by some artificial stimulants. The word was whispered, almost as a command, that things must be kept going, at least, until after the then pending election, that of 1920. Through subtle suggestions, and some of them may have been political, even the banks were encouraged to extend undue and unwise credits. Every effort was made to keep prosperity apparent, if not real, until after the votes had been counted in November. But all such efforts proved futile. In September and October the bubble began to burst. The balloon began to descend in the midst of fear and consternation.

And in the months that followed, when liquidation of debts was demanded, it was the farmers who had to pay first and to pay heaviest. They had the visible supplies and they were called upon to sell them for what was offered. The more they sold the more prices declined. We in the agricultural Mid-West believe, and not without reason, that our interests were neither properly represented nor conserved in the operations of the Federal reserve banks. The situation not only for the farmers but for all was made worse by the fact that those who could through organizations and manipulations maintained their prices, unwilling to enter the valley and the shadow to begin over again on a normal basis. As a result, in purchasing power, if not in actual figures, the farmers were worse off than they had ever before been in the history of this country.

The depression and the distress of a nation came to the Republican Party as an inheritance. They confronted the Harding administration on the 4th of March, 1921. Never had a new administration been confronted with such problems. The débris of the war remained to be cleared away. War debts, many of them contracted through waste, extravagance, and even corruption had to be paid. And the taxes to pay these debts had to be collected from people with declining incomes. There followed complaints and disappointments, but the debts had to be paid. The taxes were inevitable. Economy and efficiency became the watchwords of the party which had been returned to power. The scope of these policies was made world-wide when the President and the Secretary of State issued their call for the disarmament conference, which happily did away with many naval expenditures and those vaster expenditures that follow in the recurring fear of wars.

But while reducing the expenditures of the Government the Harding administration also took wise counsel and determined action to increase the earning powers of the people. Through wise policies the country was saved from falling into a panic. Every thought, every action possible was taken to restore the country to normalcy, as the President called it, and to prosperity, as we all understood it.

In due time the President and the Secretary of Agriculture brought forth an agricultural conference which for a season was hardly less significant than the disarmament conference itself. There was free and frank discussion not only by the men of agriculture but of all allied industries and interests. Sane and sound conclusions and policies were reached. To build anew the structure of our national prosperity was the one thought uppermost. Is it too much to say that conditions were visibly stabilized and confidence reestablished?

In the Congress in the meantime we were carrying out reconstructive policies in harmony with the purposes and aspirations of the administration. Here we formulated a program which properly made agriculture its first concern. In the course of a few months we enacted more remedial and more forward-looking legislation than had ever before been passed in any Congress before in like time.

I can not here review all that was done. I can hardly allude to it all. Our legislation touched upon almost everything that most vitally affected the farmers. We made new regulations for the packing industry, placing it under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, where it rightly belongs, and we placed limitations on gambling in grains, and we enacted laws widening the powers and the privileges of cooperative associations among farmers.

We brought forth and passed none of these laws in any spirit of class or sectional consciousness. We made them all national in their scope and in their spirit. We sought and we shall seek to do nothing sectional. We have made and we will continue to make our appeals to the whole Nation and not to any mere part of it. So broad have been our conceptions and our policies that Democrats and Republicans have been able to cooperate in this legislation. For one I can say that I was able to vote for every one of these measures, not only with my voice but with my mind and my whole heart.

One of the last, and perhaps best of all our new enactments, was the law reviving the War Finance Corporation, which came not only with Executive approval but upon Executive initiative and suggestion. In an almost defunct, or at least dormant war-time corporation, we found three or four hundred millions of dollars, and we made these available for use in rural communities to thaw out what were called "frozen credits" and to reestablish confidence. So widely and so wisely have these funds been administered that results hardly less than magical have followed, and that quickly. At least some of the return of prosperity with which we have recently been blessed may be traced and credited to this financing.

But the Congress deserves praise, not only for the many things it has done but for some which it has refused to do. It has had not only the courage to do right but that finer courage to refuse to do what is wrong. In times of stress and distress many wild theories are brought forth and are apt to find not only adherents but promulgators and promoters. Short cuts and cure-alls without end were suggested and advocated. Quack remedies were offered as scientific prescriptions. Often it required courage to resist the appeals and influences that were brought to bear on a body so responsive to public sentiment as this House of Representatives. If we had given way to them, we might have enacted something hardly less baneful and rueful than the conception of the Russian soviet. God forbid that America shall ever give way to the vagaries of Bolshevism. In America let it be hoped human reason will be last to give away.

Some men revived the ancient heresy of fiat money and wanted the Congress to authorize unlimited issues of paper money. If we had done this, we might have had our monetary system reduced to the approximate levels of the German mark and the Russian ruble. Wisely have we maintained the American dollar standard not only at home but standard throughout the world. Our money and our credit thus maintained will not only make a secure foundation for our own new prosperity but they will go far to stabilize the world.

Some wanted us to force the collection of the debts owed us in Europe and to use the moneys so obtained to buy the surplus of our corn at 50 cents a bushel. If we had done this, what would the Government have done with the corn, and what would the people who are now getting, or are going to get, more than 50 cents a bushel for their corn have said about the swindling operations of their Government? Wisely did we resist all such suggestions and bravely did we try to steer the economic ship on an even keel through the troubled waters.

But all the credit for the resistance to economic error does not belong to the Congress. More belongs to the people themselves. They showed patience and they kept the faith of the past and the future. The farmers themselves opposed the advances of radical leaders. In one Iowa county—that of Muscatine—the directors of the farm bureau issued a warning against the propaganda of radical agitators. They called attention to the fact that many wild theories were being foisted on the people by organizers who came from "unknown sources." These "unknown sources" may have been in far-away Russia, for we know that the soviet has sent its disorganizers all over the world.

The fact that under the same basic laws corn has in recent months advanced from 18 cents per bushel to 58 cents per bushel ought to be proof that these basic laws are not wrong and that our industrial system is not at enmity with human well-being. If three months ago these basic laws were blamed for the depression, why shall they not now be praised for the return of prosperity?

But, much as we have done, it is not our purpose here in Congress to cease from well-doing. If happily the worst of our distress is over, we must not and we can not neglect to carry out the policies and the remedial legislation which have been so well begun. There may be other times of distress and we should now prepare ourselves not only to face such times but, if possible, to avert or at least minimize them.

We have left unenacted a part of what I may call a national farm program, and we propose to keep it national, so that all men may help in its completion. I will not here enumerate the things that we still have in mind in connection with rural betterments. But to some I must allude at least briefly.

First of all, we are going to enact a new tariff law to take the place of the emergency tariff with which we temporarily helped, if we did not save, industrial America. Into this new tariff law we intend to write protection for agriculture as well as for the factories. We want protection for hides as well as for shoes. We want wool to receive equal consideration with woolen goods. The name and the cause of the farmer must be written into this new tariff as they have never been written in any preceding tariff.

We are now formulating through proper committees a system of commodity credits directly applicable to rural needs. These credits may be based on the long-time credits now extended through the Farm Loan Bureau. We want to enable farmers to borrow money in times of distress in such quantities as they may need to tide them over, and that at reasonable rates of interest. We want also to make it possible for farmers to hold their own products for the most favorable markets.

We believe also in legislation that will maintain some semblance of "truth in fabrics." The man who keeps a flock of sheep, whether it be on the hills of Iowa or on the plains of the West, must not be made to compete with the ragpickers of European cities. And as one who believes in protection I prefer that the wool in the American garment shall come from the backs of American sheep.

Our program also includes not only lower freight rates than those which now obtain but better shipping facilities. It is to be regretted that our railroad problems have not been solved with the others. Other prices and other rates have approached the pre-war levels, while railroad rates remain abnormally high. At the present time we have one board that fixes railroad wages and another that fixes railroad rates, and between the two the shippers and the people have suffered. In solving this problem we must have due regard for labor while seeking to obtain for shippers reasonable rates and at one and the same time enabling the roads to strengthen themselves for the tremendous demands that are going to be made on them in the new era of prosperity upon which I believe we are entering.

In our transportation program we must include some larger use of waterways. We have made but little progress along such lines. We are far behind Europe, where rivers are crowded with boats and barges. We who represent Mid-Western States that are largely agricultural are at the present time asking for a fair division of the appropriations which we make for rivers and harbors. We are going to be insistent as well as consistent in these demands. We look also with favor on the proposed St. Lawrence route, by which it is hoped to bring ships from the sea to our lake ports. If this route is feasible, as preliminary surveys indicate, then we ought to have it. Transportation rates ought to be cheaper when ships from foreign ports take on their cargoes along Lake Michigan within 200 miles of the heart of Iowa.

These are some of the items in the unenacted part of our rural program. I submit that there is in this program nothing of enmity or even of antagonism to any other class of people or any other section of this country. All the items are based on the broad proposition that when we promote the welfare of agriculture we promote the welfare of all the people. It is not our purpose to do anything that is not for the good of all, and what is less than for the good of all will ultimately benefit none.

If we make laws wisely here, laws that shall be in harmony with the greater economic law, we shall do much to maintain and stabilize the prosperity that is now returning not only to the farms but to the whole country. If we have had a surplus, it has been due not to overproduction but to underconsumption. There is not now, nor will there ever be, enough food to feed the whole world well—as well as it ought to be fed. Depressions in prices and reverses in business are apt to be due to temporary dislocations in industries and transportation. When the law of supply and demand operates normally it is apt to be well with us. Our main concern should be to see that the great natural laws are allowed to operate normally.

I see before me not the past but the future as in a dream. I see another golden age of prosperity ahead. I am an optimist, and any American who is a pessimist is at least foolish. We have in this land of ours the resources and the men. Our progress is irresistible. Our prosperity is inevitable.

In furtherance of these hopes I am going to cast my vote for every appropriation carried in this bill, and my only regret is that we can not make some of them larger while the injunction of national economy rests upon us.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota to line 18, page 55, where the words "including the erection of buildings" appear. I desire to ask the gentleman what is contemplated?

Mr. ANDERSON. There was no estimate for any buildings so far as I am aware. As a matter of fact, the appropriations for these experimental stations are very small, and they are scarcely able to pay the salaries and do the necessary work. They would have absolutely no money under these appropriations carried in this item to construct buildings. There are some places where buildings ought to be constructed, but we did not provide the necessary appropriations. For instance, at the experiment station in Alaska we were advised that the log buildings are rotting out underneath, so that the floors are at an angle and so that it is impossible to close some of the doors. There ought to be new buildings there, but no estimate was made for them and we have not provided any appropriations which will permit the construction of buildings.

Mr. HAUGEN. If no new buildings are contemplated, why insert the words "including the erection of buildings"?

Mr. ANDERSON. That language has always been carried, and I think it should be. The gentleman knows that these experimental stations can not be conducted without the occasional construction of buildings.

Mr. HAUGEN. I also have knowledge of buildings being constructed which cost nearly $200,000 under some such provision as this, buildings maintained at a large expense, which have not been in use for a number of years. Besides, it is hardly fair to divert these funds for the erection of a building, but if the chairman of the subcommittee states that no buildings will be erected, I am satisfied.

Mr. ANDERSON. There is no estimate allowed by the committee for any building.

Mr. HAUGEN. Has the chairman a statement from the department or representatives of the department that none of this money will be used in the erection of buildings?

Mr. ANDERSON. I have no such statement.

Mr. HAUGEN. Then I make the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. On what ground does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. HAUGEN. That there is no authorization for new buildings.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to section 8241 of Barnes' Federal Code, which refers to experimental stations. That section contains this proviso:

Provided, however, That out of the annual appropriation so received by any station an amount not exceeding one-fifth may be expended in the erection, enlargement, or repair of a building or buildings necessary for carrying on the work of such station; and thereafter an amount not exceeding 5 per cent of such annual appropriation may be so expended.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to discuss the point of order further?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think that disposes of it. That is the law.

Mr. HAUGEN. I call the attention of the Chair to volume IV of Hinds' Precedents, section 3606, in which it is held that—

While it is in order on an appropriation bill to provide for the repair of a building, it is not in order to provide for a new building in place of one destroyed.

Mr. ANDERSON. I have read to the Chair a specific law which permits 5 per cent of the appropriations for experiment stations to be spent in the erection and repair of buildings.

The CHAIRMAN. What section does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. ANDERSON. Section 8241 of Barnes' Code, on page 1976, the top paragraph on the page. The proviso is about two-thirds of the way down the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has it. What was the citation given by the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. HAUGEN. Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, sections 3777 and 3778 and 3606.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule. It seems to the Chair that the law (Federal Code No. 8241, relating to expenditures for experimental buildings) specifically provides that if the amount does not exceed a certain percentage of the amount appropriated for experimental work the authorization exists for the "erection, enlargement, or repair" of buildings necessary for this experimental work, and therefore it can not be considered an appropriation unauthorized by law. In the opinion of the Chair, the paragraph is in order.

Mr. HAUGEN. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that there is no limit in the bill on the expenditure, and that the whole amount, which is in a lump sum, might be spent for buildings.

Mr. ANDERSON. The law itself is a limitation.

Mr. HAUGEN. But this later law supersedes the other law, and that makes the difference.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, the percentage in the law would, of course, apply to each particular item of the $210,000, which is the total of this specific allowance in Alaska, Porto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and other places where this total is to be applied. Of course, in each one of these items the percentage would be applicable so that no large amount could be spent in any event for the erection of buildings.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels that the item is in order, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the Chair pardon me, I would like to put this statement in the RECORD: I am very sure that my colleague from Iowa would not feel that this small amount ought to be cut off for the erection of these buildings. Take it in these particular districts with which I am perhaps more intimately acquainted than others—Porto Rico, the Philippine Islands, and islands of that kind. It is almost necessary for them to erect every year some shed—they do not amount to anything else—but they are buildings, of course, and an absolute prohibition against any expenditure for a building in these cases where they have to go out in different places to take charge of a coffee plantation or a sugar plantation, in conducting experimental work, would prohibit them. It is almost necessary that temporary buildings should be constructed, and that is the reason of my particular interest in the matter.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to cripple the service or hinder the construction of buildings. I would object to using $210,000 in putting up buildings where the money was appropriated for other purposes. I have a distinct recollection of buildings constructed at an expense of nearly $200,000 and funds thus diverted. My contention is that there should be a limitation on the cost of these buildings. Without this, $210,000 could be used for the erection of buildings.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For general administrative expenses connected with the lines of work of the States Relations Service, including the offices of the director, the chief clerk, the officers in charge of publications, library, accounts, records, supplies, and property, and for miscellaneous expenses incident thereto, $12,600.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It refers to the publications of the Department of Agriculture. I understand that the department no longer publishes the book on the Diseases of the Horse and the book on the Diseases of Cattle. They publish each year a limited number of the Yearbook for the Department of Agriculture. I have been informed—I do not know whether it is correct or not—that the department has no choice, but if legislation justified it they could just as well publish a book on the diseases of horses and diseases of cattle instead of the Yearbook, which they publish at practically the same expense. I wondered if the gentleman from Minnesota does not think that the books on the Diseases of the Horse and the Diseases of Cattle would be more valuable than the Yearbook?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not think so. I think it is desirable to continue the publication of the book on the diseases of horses and on the diseases of cattle, but I think it would be very unfortunate, indeed, if the publication of the Yearbook was omitted for one year. That is a publication which keeps up all the current, statistical, and research work in a popular form down to date, and it would be very unfortunate if we omitted it for a year.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does the gentleman think it would be more expensive to publish one-half of the number of Yearbooks and devote the other to the publication of the book on the diseases of horses and the diseases of cattle?

Mr. ANDERSON. My recollection is that it has been the practice, by special resolution, to provide for the publication of the book on the diseases of horses and the book on the diseases of cattle every three or four years.

Mr. MANN. It is by a special resolution that comes from the Committee on Printing, which provides for the publication and the distribution.

Mr. JONES of Texas. There has been none published since I have been here.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps they ought to be revised and brought down to date.

Mr. CHALMERS. I am sure the gentleman has had the same experience I have—that the number of agricultural Yearbooks now published will not satisfy the demand for them. The Yearbook is of great general interest, and I have not enough for distribution in my district.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I could use more than I have. I do not advertise the fact that I have them and only supply them to such requests as come in voluntarily, and I have enough to supply those requests. But I do have requests for the book on the Diseases of the Horse and the Diseases of Cattle, which I can not supply, and none has been published for the last four or five years.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman should get after the Committee on Printing.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations of the best methods of road making, especially by the use of local materials; for studying the types of mechanical plants and appliances used for road building and maintenance; for studying methods of road repair and maintenance suited to the needs of different localities, and for furnishing expert advice on these subjects, $77,060.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. At one time before I questioned the advisability of making the appropriation for the purpose of enabling the bureau to experiment in the making of roads. What I had in mind at the time was that there is so much road building, covering the entire country, that almost every locality in the country is getting some kind of a road, and there is so much opportunity for experiments on such a scale and under such a variety of conditions that it is unnecessary for the department to carry on many experiments. There will be opportunity for investigation and experiment under all kinds of conditions in actual work going on in the country.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the difficulty is that in order to determine the effect of traffic or of weather conditions you have to tear the road up, and that is not very convenient in a road that is used constantly.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Is the gentleman correct about that? Does not the quality of the road prove itself? Is not the quality of it determined by the wear? Has the matter not gone far enough so that the department can determine with some reasonable sense and judgment what methods are correct and what materials best, and so on?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not think so. As a matter of fact, I think we are just at the beginning of road-construction knowledge. There are many problems with respect to drainage and the different qualities in the soil that affect road construction, the different wearing qualities of different road materials, different methods of construction, few of which have been worked out with a high degree of scientific accuracy and many of which still remain to be solved.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I have no criticism to make of the bureau. I think it has done splendid work, but where there is so much actual work being done under all kinds of conditions, with every imaginable kind of material, it would seem to me that there is opportunity enough for experiment. I hardly agree with the gentleman from Minnesota when he says that there is a better way of determining the quality of material and the quality of construction than in actual building and using roads. I do not think experiments made by the department are as good as the work done out in the field.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, where are all these experimental roads built? Are they constructed in the vicinity of the District of Columbia?

Mr. ANDERSON. This does not involve the construction of experimental roads at all. The large part of it is expended for experiments in road-making materials and in giving advice with regard to road construction. Some of it is spent for small sections of experimental road sections that are very narrow, upon which certain experiments are made, such as the impact of wheels and the strength of the wearing surface.

Mr. SNELL. What I have in mind is that if they are all built around here, the different climatic conditions in the northern and southern parts of the country might affect them differently.

Mr. ANDERSON. Several years ago some experimental roads were constructed near Washington. One was just beyond the Chevy Chase Club, but we have gradually decreased that appropriation so that now I think it is about $15,000, and no more experimental roads of that character are being constructed at all.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment to ask a question. Are any experiments being carried on in regard to the effects of frost in road construction or repairs and the best means of dealing with it?

Mr. ANDERSON. The Bureau of Public Roads has been decentralized, and it has offices in quite a number of different parts of the country. These studies are largely carried on in cooperation with the States. I am unable to tell the gentleman where frost studies are being carried on, but I know they are being carried on.

Mr. TILSON. Is it under this particular paragraph of the bill?

Mr. ANDERSON. It is rather under the next item.

Mr. TILSON. For those of us who live in States where there is considerable frost, this is one of the most difficult problems with which we have to deal in road construction and repair. Investigation and experimentation along this line, if properly conducted, might prove very helpful, and the money thus expended turn out to be very wisely expended.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations of the chemical and physical character of road materials, for conducting laboratory and field experiments, and for studies and investigations in road design, independently or in cooperation with the State highway departments and other agencies, $175,000, payable out of the administrative fund provided by the Federal aid road act of July 11, 1916, as amended.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph. I make the point of order on the words:

Payable out of the administrative funds provided by the Federal aid road act of July 11, 1916, as amended.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I think that portion of the bill is subject to the point of order. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is somewhat confused as to what the gentleman from Iowa has referred.

Mr. HAUGEN. I made the point of order to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Where are the words which the gentleman from Minnesota refers to?

Mr. ANDERSON. I understood that the gentleman from Iowa made the point of order to the words:

Payable out of the administrative funds provided by the Federal aid road act of July 11, 1916, as amended.

I concede the point of order to that portion of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the part to which the gentleman from Iowa makes the point of order?

Mr. HAUGEN. I made it against the paragraph, but I withdraw that, and make it against the words:

Payable out of the administrative funds provided by the Federal aid road act of July 11, 1916, as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order on those words as indicated in the paragraph.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question about an item on a preceding page. I refer to the item at the bottom of page 57—

For salaries and the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere—

And so forth.

In view of the fact that the matter of raising the maximum amount of salaries is to come up later, so far as the Agricultural Department is concerned, I want to ask the gentleman whether the language in the paragraph to which I refer from which I have quoted, gives the Agricultural Department the power to fix any maximum salaries it may see fit.

Mr. ANDERSON. It does not.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Where is there any limitation on it?

Mr. ANDERSON. Well, the law itself fixes the maximum limit of the salary that may be paid.

Mr. KINCHELOE. And this is under that limitation?

Mr. ANDERSON. It is under that limitation.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating and reporting upon the utilization of water in farm irrigation, including the best methods to apply in practice; the different kinds of power and appliances, and the development of equipment for farm irrigation; the flow of water in ditches, pipes, and other conduits; the duty, apportionment, and measurement of irrigation water; the customs, regulations, and laws affecting irrigation; for the purchase and installation of equipment for experimental purposes; for the giving of expert advice and assistance; for the preparation and illustration of reports and bulletins on irrigation; for the employment of assistants and labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere; for rent outside of the District of Columbia; and for supplies and all necessary expenses, $72,000.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object to this section. I desire to ask the chairman if there has been some real, definite advantage obtained last year in the making of this appropriation. I think we discussed this last year.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman is referring to page 59?

Mr. SNELL. Yes; the first paragraph.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think there has been some very good work done under this paragraph. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this is the only paragraph carried in any bill as far as I know which provides for giving any engineering advice at all in regard to irrigation projects. Taking it from that standpoint——

Mr. SNELL. Are any of the big projects considered in connection with this appropriation?

Mr. ANDERSON. These are largely connected with problems of the user of water, such as the seepage problem, problems connected with overflow, and all that sort of thing. These men are constantly traveling around these small irrigation projects, giving advice and suggestion to these small irrigation-farm owners so they can solve the engineering problems which they have. It is a very small amount, and it ought to be much larger, as a matter of fact.

Mr. SNELL. And there is some real, definite advantage comes from it? If so, I do not want to make the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think they are doing good work.

Mr. SNELL. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Under the authority set forth in this paragraph are conducted some of the most valuable experimental and investigational work of the entire Department of Agriculture. Of the hundreds of millions of acres in the West that are suited to agriculture, except for the lack of water, the last census showed that about 19,000,000 were irrigated. Experts estimate that the known water supply in this region is sufficient to irrigate from 45,000,000 to 50,000,000 acres, the ultimate limit depending upon the economy with which water is used. The land is there for an indefinite expansion; a water supply is the only thing needed to make it productive.

Of the 19,000,000 acres of desert land irrigated in 1920, about 3,000,000 acres, or more than 15 per cent, have become so wet from the use of more water than the crops consume that they must be drained if they are to continue to produce profitable crops. This condition is spreading, and our people have not learned to convey and apply water in such a way as to stop it. We need experiments to develop feasible methods of reducing this danger.

The farmer on irrigated land has not only to pay to get the water on his farm but he must also pay to get it off. In the Salt River Valley, in Arizona, the Department of Agriculture has carried on extensive experiments, and much has been done to limit the injury by teaching farmers to prepare their fields for irrigation so as to require less water. Much good has also been accomplished in determining the most economical methods of lowering the ground-water level below the danger point. Each irrigated region, however, presents a different set of problems, and there is great need for continued research to determine how they can be best met.

In the arid region practically all of the land is valueless without water. The use of more water than is necessary on one tract of land condemns another area to sterility. On the other hand, it is possible to use so little water that crop returns fall below the point where they produce a profit. We need additional research to determine for each type of soil in each community the quantity of water to use for each crop, in order that returns may not be reduced by too limited use, and also that the water needed for other land may not be wasted.

Water is lost and wasted at every step in the process of conveying it to farms and applying it to the fields. Of course, losses in conveyance can be stopped by carrying water in concrete-lined canals or in pipes, but in most places such measures are too expensive. We need research to discover more economical methods of preventing such losses and to cheapen the known methods. Losses in applying water to fields are also large, but they can be checked by adapting methods to soils and crops.

More than 90 per cent of the reclamation of desert land thus far accomplished has been by private agencies. In these projects the United States Reclamation Service does not participate. It is probable that a considerable portion of future irrigation development will be by private initiative. Financial failures of private irrigation enterprises have been so numerous that it is now very difficult to induce capital to invest in such securities. It is only right and proper that the Federal Government, through the research organization of the Department of Agriculture, should endeavor to aid legitimate irrigation schemes by ascertaining the causes of past failures and map out a course which will safeguard future investments in such enterprises. This involves not only a study of the history of irrigation development but an examination of forms of organization, the State and Federal laws under which they operate, and so forth.

Closely related to this subject is that of cooperative community enterprises looking to the utilization of the water supply of an entire stream. The irrigation of every western valley has proceeded by stages, the first works built being of a crude type for the irrigation of land most easily reached by canals. Then more pretentious works were built for land more remote. Under such circumstances there could be no comprehensive plan for supplying water to all the land in the most economical manner or for the conservation of flood waters in large storage reservoirs.

As long as water was abundant and cheap this defect was not felt, but the time has arrived in many communities when further progress can not take place without the cooperation of all interests deriving water from a common source. The organization best adapted to such cooperation seems to be the irrigation district, but the proper carrying out of plans for such large-scale operations as are involved calls for extensive research along such lines as the most economical duty of water, seasonal requirements of different crops, capacities of different soils for water, and the measurement and division of water. The studies thus far made only emphasize the need for more complete information along the lines referred to.

Mr. RHODES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield to my good friend from Missouri.

Mr. RHODES. Is it not a fact that the reclamation engineers in charge of these local projects advise with the people who are interested in irrigation, and are they not just as well prepared to give advice about local projects as the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. HAYDEN. But the gentleman forgets that but about 3,000,000 acres have been irrigated through the United States Reclamation Service out of a total irrigated area of 19,000,000 acres. My friend will also remember that the Reclamation Service deals only with projects where expenditures are made from the Federal reclamation fund. I contend that irrigation agriculture is entitled to the same consideration from the Department of Agriculture as any other kind of farming in the United States. It is no part of the duty of the United States Reclamation Service to engage in scientific research for the benefit of the owners of private land. All the expenses of that service are paid out of the reclamation fund and are chargeable to the several Federal irrigation projects. There is no way in which they could legitimately use that fund for any such purpose.

Mr. RHODES. Will the gentleman permit one further question or observation? I can see the importance of this reclamation work, and I was just wondering if there is not a lot of duplication, a doubling up of effort on the part of the Agricultural Department in conducting this work.

Mr. HAYDEN. I have looked into that matter with some care and find that there is no great amount of duplication of work.

Another field for research which is of great interest to the arid region is the development of the vast underground water supplies by pumping. While water has been pumped for irrigation for many years, a great many failures have resulted from the selection of the wrong kind of equipment, faulty installation, underestimation of the amount of water obtainable from the well, or from other causes which might have been avoided if more definite knowledge of the requirements was available. It is not at present known with any degree of certainty the depth from which water can be pumped economically for the irrigation of a given crop under given climatic and soil conditions. Only a broad, general study of conditions in the entire arid region will make it possible to solve this and other related phases of the problem.

For example, there has been no convenient way for a person planning to develop land by pumping to obtain disinterested advice as to the best type of pump for his use or the most efficient means of operation. If he inquires of a manufacturer he will be told that his pump is the best and should be used, but such advice, of course, is not disinterested. And the same is true with respect to many other irrigation problems throughout the West.

These are the reasons why I rose to address the committee this afternoon. I want to ask the gentleman from Minnesota, in charge of the bill, whether we might hope that this appropriation will be materially increased whenever the other activities of the Department of Agriculture may be enlarged, at such time as the financial condition of the Government shall permit.

Mr. ANDERSON. Of course, the "gentleman from Minnesota" may have nothing to do with it at that time, but I agree that this item ought to be developed along with the rest of the department. I agree that the irrigationists are entitled to as much consideration as any other class of farmers.

Mr. HAYDEN. I am glad to have that assurance from the chairman of the subcommittee, and I am hopeful that in the near future the Department of Agriculture will insist, even more strongly than it has in the past, that larger sums be allowed for this purpose, and that the Congress will authorize the expenditure of the full amount estimated for in the Budget.

Over $700,000,000 has been expended in the construction of irrigation work throughout the West and more than twice that much has been spent by the farmers themselves in leveling land and preparing it for water. At its best irrigation is an expensive process, which, however, yields high returns under favorable circumstances. Some of our large streams—notably the Columbia, the Missouri, and last, but not least, the Colorado—carry out of the arid region immense quantities of water that might serve millions of acres if the water could be brought to the land at a practicable cost. The agricultural salvation of these lands and the economical use of other millions of acres of grazing land depend upon the development of methods of lifting and conveying water that will make it available at a reasonable price. Scientific research into irrigation practices should therefore receive adequate support if the development of the arid West is to be encouraged.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For supervising the preparation, distribution, and use of picric acid, trinitrotoluol, trojan powder, and such other surplus war explosives as may be made available for use in clearing stumps and stones from agricultural land, independently or in cooperation with agricultural colleges and other agencies, and for investigating and reporting upon the results obtained from the use of the explosives, $15,000.

Mr. HAUGEN and Mr. TILSON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] is recognized.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that. It is a matter that was discussed a year ago, and it went out. This is for supervising the preparation, distribution, and use of these explosives. My understanding was that the purpose was to distribute the surplus in the department.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman knows that this stock exists in storage in bulk, and it has to be cartridged and put in such shape that it can be used. This $15,000 does not cover the cost of that preparation, because the actual cost of preparation is carried into the price which is charged to the people who buy the stock. The $15,000 covers supervision only.

Mr. HAUGEN. What is the suggestion? Is it that the surplus shall be distributed or is it to be manufactured?

Mr. ANDERSON. This 12,400,000 pounds altogether was turned over to the Bureau of Public Roads by the War Department without charge. Three million pounds of it was at Sparta, Wis., and the remainder is at Fort Wingate. A large part of that at Sparta has already been distributed, leaving 200,000 pounds at Sparta and something like 9,000,000 pounds at Fort Wingate, N. Mex.

Mr. HAUGEN. There is still a surplus on hand?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. And the purpose is to distribute the surplus?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. And not to manufacture it?

Mr. ANDERSON. No. And enough to include the cost of cartridging, and so forth.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In addition to what the chairman has just said, that there is a large demand for this explosive, I believe that the plan of distribution is practically self-sustaining.

Mr. ANDERSON. It is, except here in Washington and points at which the work is done.

Mr. TILSON. Just a few words as to the nature of this very dangerous explosive. If a heap of it were placed upon this table and a match touched to it, it would only singe a few of those who might be sitting near, but would not do any great amount of damage, whereas if it be restrained and exploded with a high order of detonation it becomes very powerful and effective. The greater the restraint the more powerful and effective it becomes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I take it that the wording of this would permit the manufacture, the supervision, and distribution. But I am satisfied. I doubt the advisability of manufacturing.

Mr. TILSON. It seems to me necessary to prepare the material for use, and this preparation consists not in manufacturing but in making it ready to put the proper restraint upon it, so as to give it force when exploded.

Mr. ANDERSON. This item covers the supervision of that explosive and not the preparation itself.

Mr. TILSON. And a charge is made that will carry a good portion of the expense?

Mr. ANDERSON. All the expense of cartridging and freight and anything else, except what little supervision is necessary.

Mr. TILSON. I would like to ask the gentleman what success they have had with this explosive in blasting stumps and stones?

Mr. ANDERSON. I have not seen the report on it, but I think it has been used very successfully, and there has been a large demand for it.

Mr. TILSON. It may be recalled that at the end of the war there was an enormous quantity of this trinitrotoluol on hand. There was a proposition made at the time that it be shipped out to sea and cast overboard. Then we began to look around for useful purposes to which it might be put, and this was hit upon. I was interested in knowing just how successful it had been.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. While back in my home State recently a complaint was brought to my attention of the inability of farmers to get picric acid from the large plants which the chairman of the subcommittee knows are in our own State; that some discrimination was evidently being exercised against these men who desire the use of this picric acid in favor of the men who were taking it for explosive purposes; that is, I mean in the large munition manufacturing plants.

I am wondering whether the gentleman has any information bearing on that point, whether or not the distribution of this material is open and free to everybody who lays down the equivalent sum of money required?

Mr. ANDERSON. It should be, and I think it is. It is barely possible, however, that the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads has not yet been able to make the necessary cooperative arrangements to enable him to make a distribution in the gentleman's State.

Mr. KETCHAM. May I state that the particular form of the complaint came in this manner: That these men had gone to the proper department having charge, and they were informed that it had been turned over to some subsidiary distributing agency which had charge of it. They could get no further than that, notwithstanding they were willing to pay several dollars a ton more than the ammunition factories were getting it for.

Mr. ANDERSON. The matter has not been brought to my attention at all, and I am unable to answer the gentleman's question.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MANN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2897) to appropriate $5,000,000 for the purchase of seed grain and of feed to be supplied to farmers in the crop-failure areas of the United States, said amount to be expended under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LADD, Mr. NORBECK, and Mr. KENDRICK as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To investigate and encourage the adoption of improved methods of farm management and farm practice, $291,707: Provided, That of this amount $150,000 may be used in ascertaining the cost of production of the principal staple agriculture products.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "agriculture," on line 17 of page 62, and insert in lieu thereof the word "agricultural."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to change the spelling of the word "agriculture," on line 17, as indicated.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For acquiring and diffusing among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with the marketing, handling, utilization, grading, transportation, and distributing of farm and nonmanufactured food products and the purchasing of farm supplies, including the demonstration and promotion of the use of uniform standards of classification of American farm products throughout the world, independently and in cooperation with other branches of the department, State agencies, purchasing and consuming organizations, and persons engaged in the marketing, handling, utilization, grading, transportation, and distributing of farm and food products, $471,200.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph and the two or three succeeding paragraphs have to do with the dissemination of information concerning agricultural and crop conditions and telegraphic news service with reference to markets. During the war a service of this kind was had in the southwestern section of the country, with headquarters at Fort Worth, Tex. Since the war this service has been abandoned in that section, largely, as it seems from a perusal of the hearings, by reason of the fact that the rates for the leasing of the wires have so increased as to make the service practically prohibitive during this time of enforced economy. That section of the country, under normal conditions, certainly is entitled to as good service in this regard as any other section of the country, because it is one of the largest producing areas of the entire Nation.

My purpose in moving to strike out the last word is simply to inquire of the chairman of the subcommittee whether or not, when the economic conditions are better, we may hope in that section of the country for a resumption of this service?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think the service is a very valuable one, and if it could be had at the same cost that we had it for originally I think it would be fully justified. When the time comes when we can have it at a reasonable price, personally I shall be very glad to see it restored.

Mr. LANHAM. I am very much gratified to have that assurance from the chairman of the subcommittee, because our agricultural and live-stock people are vitally interested in getting this service. However, they wish also to do their share in promoting the economy which is necessary now in our governmental operations.,

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that some of the language in this paragraph provides for duplicating work by the Bureau of Markets.

Mr. ANDERSON. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this item now is a combination of three or four items that were previously carried, including the cotton standardization work and the appropriation for State cooperation of $70,000, and also the appropriation for grain standards, which formerly were under the Bureau of Markets.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. In carrying them on, uniting those different items, some language is used here that would permit duplication.

Mr. ANDERSON. No. That language is not carried anywhere else. It is simply carried in this section in the exact terms under which it was previously carried in separate paragraphs.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Here is "For acquiring and diffusing among the people of the United States on subjects connected with the marketing, handling, utilization, grading, transportation, and distributing of farm and nonmanufactured food products," and so on. That is certainly part of the work contemplated by the Bureau of Markets.

Mr. ANDERSON. The Bureau of Markets is a part of this bureau.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. And this language is not carried anywhere else—giving authority to the Bureau of Markets to do this work?

Mr. ANDERSON. No.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I had not noticed the change before, so that the gentleman from Minnesota is no doubt right about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For collecting, compiling, abstracting, analyzing, summarizing, interpreting, and publishing data relating to agriculture, including crop and live-stock estimates, acreage, yield, grades, stock, and value of farm crops, and numbers, grades, and value of live stock and live-stock products on farms, in cooperation with the States Relations Service and other Federal, State, and local agencies, $357,400: Provided, That not less than $65,000 shall be used for collecting and disseminating to American producers, importers, exporters, and other interested persons information relative to the world supply of and need for American agricultural products, marketing methods, conditions, prices, and other factors, a knowledge of which is necessary to the advantageous disposition of such products in foreign countries, independently and in cooperation with other branches of the Government, State agencies, purchasing and consuming organizations, and persons engaged in the transportation, marketing, and distribution of farm and food products, including the purchase of such books and periodicals as may be necessary in connection with this work.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I rise just to inquire of the gentleman from Minnesota whether he thinks this title to this bureau will last for two years?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think so. I do not think, however, that I am entitled to think anything about it in view of the fact that last year I thought the title would last for some time. In other words, "I acknowledge the corn."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and certify to shippers and other interested parties the quality and condition of fruits, vegetables, poultry, butter, hay, and other perishable farm products, when received at such important central markets as the Secretary of Agriculture may from time to time designate, or at points which may be conveniently reached therefrom, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, including payment of such fees as will be reasonable and as nearly as may be to cover the cost for the service rendered: Provided, That certificates issued by the authorized agents of the department shall be received in all courts of the United States as prima facie evidence of the truth of the statements therein contained, $175,000.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SUMMERS of Washington: On page 64, line 4, after the word ".products," insert " when offered for interstate shipment."

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph provides for Federal inspection of fruits, vegetables, and other farm products at the receiving point, the point of final destination. My amendment simply makes it possible for an inspection to be made at the shipping point, before the grower has incurred the expense of several hundred dollars for freight in order to get his products to a distant market and there probably have a question raised as to quality or condition or possibly have it condemned.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Would not this necessitate a great many more inspectors, if we had them at every point where this freight originated?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. This is optional with the department as to whether they shall make the inspections, and whenever it is done the inspection is made at the expense of the shipper. A good many States have a State inspection law, and I am informed by the department that it would be possible for them to cooperate with the State inspectors who are on the ground, and that where freight is offered for interstate shipment an inspector will be permitted to issue a Federal certificate instead of a State certificate.

Mr. SNELL. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the shipper pays all the expense?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The shippers pay the expense. They pay $5 or $6 or $7 a car for the inspections that are made.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. I do not know if I understand the import of the gentleman's amendment. I notice that the language of the paragraph in the bill itself provides for inspections at such important central markets as the Secretary of Agriculture may from time to time designate, or at points which may be conveniently reached therefrom. Now, what does the gentleman's amendment add to that language, if anything?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not think it adds very much; but the language is limited now to farm products when received at important central markets. What the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS] wants, as I understand it, is an inspection at the point of shipment instead of at the point of receipt of the commodity.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Provided it can be made at the expense of the shipper.

Mr. BURTNESS. I think it is very important that that language should be carried if the bill itself does not now provide that an inspection may be made there, when the shipment is received at a central market or at a point convenient to it.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I think the language in the bill might mean that an inspector in New York City could go over to Jersey City and make an inspection there, but I am not sure of its wider application.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I notice in line 2, on page 64, it is provided—

For enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and certify to shippers.

Does not that cover the point the gentleman wishes to cover?

Mr. ANDERSON. No.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What does the amendment do?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Here is a point where there are a thousand carloads of fruit going into interstate commerce. The producers of that fruit have put all their year's labor into it, and are subjected to the added expense of the high freight rate for several hundred miles, and they never know whether it will be received at the other end of the line without a controversy, when it is two or three thousand miles away from the shipping point. Heretofore the inspection has been at the eastern market, where the fruit was received, and not at the shipping point.

Mr. EVANS. If I understand the purpose of the gentleman's amendment, it is to fix the condition of the commodity at the point of shipment, so that there can not be any dispute when the contract is f. o. b. the shipping point.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. That is correct. An inspection at the packing and shipping point is much more thorough than an inspection at the receiving point, where usually a few boxes are opened and an entire car is passed or condemned on the showing made by those few boxes.

This amendment, while equally beneficial to shippers and buyers, is above all in the interest of the consumer; it is the consumer's guaranty that he is getting what he buys and pays for.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Washington. I have no objection to the provision in the bill; but we all ought to understand that this is very widely increasing the scope of the work done by this branch of the service. Under the existing law the inspection can be made only where the property is in interstate commerce and can be made only at a designated central point of shipment. The Secretary of Agriculture designates certain central points, and the inspection force is located at these points. The certificate of inspection can be given only at these points, and on interstate commerce. The language of the bill itself had already made two changes in the law. One was striking out interstate commerce, so that the certificate might be made in intrastate commerce as well as in interstate commerce, and the other providing that the certificate might be made not only at the central markets designated by the Secretary of Agriculture but at any other place that could be reached conveniently from the central markets. And inasmuch as any place in the United States can be reached conveniently from one of the central markets of the country, the bill as reported meant that the Secretary of Agriculture might authorize, within the limits of the money that he had, an inspection at any point; but the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS] in offering his amendment desires to make that absolutely certain, as I understand it. While it is clear to me that it is carried in the original bill, he wants to fix it beyond peradventure that it means that a certificate of inspection may be granted on a shipment from any point where the Secretary of Agriculture is willing to have the certificate made, whether it is at the point of origin or at some other point, or whether it is in interstate commerce or intrastate commerce.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. In cases where there is a long haul might not some of these perishable goods have a clean bill of health when they start and not be in good condition when they arrive at their destination?

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes. The certificate of inspection at the point of origin would simply certify as to the condition of the goods at the time and place of shipment. That does not guarantee that the goods are of the same quality when they reach their destination, especially if eggs have been kept on the way in hot weather for six weeks or three months. But I would ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] whether this is likely to cause any very great increase in the appropriation? I notice there is no increase proposed with this change of scope of the original plan.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think the language proposed by the committee will not cause any considerable increase in appropriation, but the language proposed by the gentleman from Washington, if carried out in the way he intends, I think would require eventually quite a large sum.

Mr. MANN. The language reported by the committee requires inspection not only at the central market but at any point that can be conveniently reached, and that would cover any point in the United States.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman's construction is correct; but what was meant and intended was, for instance, the towns within short distances of the central receiving points, like Omaha or Chicago, where carload lots are shipped to points within short distances which a man can reach and get back in an hour or two.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, if the committee is going to adopt this change of existing law it ought to appreciate what it is doing. As the law now stands it provides for the inspection of perishable farm products moving in interstate commerce, for their inspection at the point of receipt—that is, at the destination—on the theory that the Federal Government has to do only with interstate commerce, the inspection being made only for the purpose of protecting the shipper and to some extent the receiver of perishable goods. The Federal inspector makes an inspection and issues a certificate setting forth the condition in which the goods reach their destination, his certificate to be used in the settlement of disputes, if such may arise, between the shipper and the receiver of the goods.

I have always insisted when this section was being prepared that the inspection should be limited to goods in interstate commerce, because, in my judgment, that kind of a shipment is the only one over which the Federal Government should exercise or has a right to exercise any jurisdiction. If the words "interstate commerce" do not remain a part of the law, it will permit the inspection of intrastate shipment, shipments moving from one town to another within the same State. It will authorize the Federal Government or its agents to interfere with and take part in the transfer or shipment between residents of a State, a duty or a function which the Federal Government ought not to be asked and ought not to be permitted to perform. The Federal Government has no right, in my judgment, to assume to make an inspection of intrastate shipments or take part in a controversy between the residents of a State. If we permit it, we are not only permitting what I conceive to be an improper work, but as it extends, as it surely will, it will involve untold cost and trouble. They say it is going to be self-supporting. I do not believe it; but in any event the work as proposed is not right; it is not the duty of the Federal Government to have anything to do with State business or State disputes. One portion of the section provides for the issuing of a certificate by an agent who makes an inspection, to be delivered to a shipper or any interested party, which certificate shall be prima facie evidence of the truth of the statement which it contains if the matter should arise in the United States courts.

It may be competent for the Congress of the United States to make a rule of evidence of that kind, to be invoked and to be controlling in a United States court, but this Congress can not make rules of evidence to control a State court or have any influence in the trial of a case in a State court. In my judgment, this ought to be limited to interstate commerce, and we are going outside of our functions and jurisdiction if we undertake to make it relate to or include shipments wholly within a State.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I have read the hearings on this item, and it was urged that if a man had a carload of perishable goods anywhere in the country he ought to have an opportunity to have a Federal inspector inspect those goods at his farm or at the first point of shipment before they start on their course. It would provide for an army of men to go over the country representing the Federal Government, inspecting goods at points of shipment wherever they might be. If that is a function of the Federal Government I do not understand our form of government. I feel sure that it is not proper. They say that shippers and receivers of goods inspected will pay the cost of inspections, and that the cost will be covered in that way. That is immaterial to me. I do not want the Federal Government mixed up in any of these strictly local or domestic matters. There is a State jurisdiction and there is a Federal jurisdiction. It may be difficult sometimes to determine between them, but there is a way to determine; there are Federal courts and State courts, and they have their respective jurisdictions. We determine in other matters the respective jurisdictions, we can do the same in these matters. I would confine the State and the Federal Government each to its own jurisdiction; neither ought to be permitted to assume or to invade the jurisdiction of the other.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The gentleman is speaking of the section in general rather than my amendment. My amendment says that when offered for interstate shipment.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman's amendment would permit inspection of goods "received in interstate commerce or at certain important points." That is good, but it would not authorize an inspection at the starting point. The question usually arising will be, In what condition are the goods when they reach their destination? That is the only thing we are trying to settle for the benefit of the shipper and the receiver alike. In what condition were the goods received? That was the idea when provision for inspection was first included in an Agricultural appropriation bill. I remember very well when it was first put in the bill, and it was to determine the condition of perishable goods when they reached their destination.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the gentleman will pardon me, would it not meet the objection to strike out the word "or" at the end of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The amendment as offered is an improvement, because Federal inspection at any and every starting point of shipment all over the country would not be permitted; it would provide for inspection at important receiving points, even if shipment is wholly within a State.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is the object, of course, of the proposed amendment. It is to destroy what the gentleman wants to do and what I think ought to be done.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Does the gentleman think there ought to be inspection of intrastate shipments all over this country?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think when two shipments go into the same market—into Chicago, for instance; one from Peoria, Ill.; and one from Milwaukee, Wis.—both shipments of cabbages, standing side by side on the tracks, that the man who inspects the shipment from Milwaukee ought also to be able to inspect the shipment from Peoria, and that is all that this provides for.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That sounds very well. But suppose there are two burglaries committed in the city of Chicago, one in the post office and the other in a mercantile establishment across the street, as near together as they can possibly be. The man charged with robbing the post office is tried in the United States courts while the one charged with breaking into the private establishment is tried in the State courts. There is a dividing line between the jurisdiction of the Federal Government and of the State government.

Mr. ANDERSON. But the same policemen that arrested one of them could arrest the other.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes; they do that; but I think we ought to be careful how we extend the jurisdiction of the Federal Government in local matters. It is the principle I contend for, and the mere fact that the fees collected will be applied to meet the cost and that the expense will be reduced does not mean much to me.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that while we theoretically inspect the meat at Chicago, in the packing houses, for interstate commerce we inspect all the meat, whether it is used in Chicago or New York or in Washington?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It is not known to what points that meat will be shipped, but so much of it is destined for interstate shipment that it is necessary to have it all examined; in fact, it can not be separated.

Mr. MANN. I am not opposed to it; but the fact is that we do not require it to be used in interstate commerce in order to make the inspection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If the gentleman will read the hearings, he will find that those who advocated striking out the words "in interstate commerce," as they appear in the law now in force, wished to have the privilege of having an individual shipment examined at the point of starting, anywhere and everywhere throughout the country, regardless of where the goods are intended to go. Inspection at important receiving points within a State may be helpful to shippers, but to provide for Federal inspection at every starting point would, in my judgment, be unwise.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I wish I could agree with my distinguished friend from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] in his contentions in respect to State rights. I do not think there is a man on the floor who is more zealous of State rights and who seeks to protect them more than I, but in this question State rights are not involved. It is a purely voluntary service rendered by the Federal Government upon the request of one or more of her citizens. If we are going to furnish this inspection service, why is it that the resident of a State who is shipping to some other point in that State is not entitled to this certificate the same as the resident of the same State who may be shipping goods across the line? That is the question. It is the service rendered to the shippers of the country.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The Constitution of the United States gives Congress exclusive authority over interstate commerce. Where is there a line in that instrument which gives Congress any authority whatever respecting intrastate commerce?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I entirely agree with the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That was the argument made by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But we are not seeking to control this inspection, to force it upon any citizen of any State. We merely say that the Federal Government agents will inspect their products, if they want them to. If they do not want them to, they will not.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But it is provided that the certificate of the intrastate shipment shall be admitted in court.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Oh, no; the certificate will be prima facie evidence in the Federal courts. We let the State court rule upon whether it is admissible in the State court or not. We have no concern with that. The judges of the State courts can rule upon that matter. If they want to exclude it, let them exclude it, and let the supreme court of the State determine the question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Can we by congressional enactment make a law respecting intrastate shipments?

Mr. BUCHANAN. We have not done that. We make the certificate prima facie evidence in the Federal court in interstate shipments. We propose by this to extend the inspection to intrastate shipments, that is all. This service has become valuable to the people of the United States, not because the certificate is prima facie evidence in a Federal court but because a certificate of this department adds to the marketable value of the product inspected. They want it to aid them in procuring a market for their products, because the purchasers say that if they have a certificate of the Federal Government the product is sound and good and they will buy it. You are depriving the residents of a State who may be shipping to another point in the State of this privilege and of a service that you rendered to those who ship beyond the line.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What is the reason that the State can not provide for inspection of intrastate shipments?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I assume the State could, but the State inspection service perhaps does not enjoy the splendid reputation that the service of the Federal Government does.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That means that all the State service and the people in the State will have to do in order to get Federal money is to be dishonest and refuse properly to perform their duties, and that the more dishonest and neglectful they are the greater claim they will have upon the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Oh, I am not prepared to go as far as that. I am one of those who have an abiding confidence in the integrity of the residents of the different States. I do not think they will practice dishonest methods in order to get a few paltry dollars from the Government.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. But the gentleman himself has just reflected upon them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I have spoken before and if the time is limited I do not care to take time in preference to those who have not spoken.

Mr. ANDERSON. If the gentleman wants to take time I am perfectly willing that he should do so. If he does not, then I will ask for a vote.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, we find in the hearings statements similar to those made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] that State certificates are not reliable and therefore it is necessary to have Federal inspection. Those who made the statements are reflecting upon the people of the States, and I think the statement of the gentleman from Texas is a reflection upon officials of the States, that they do not issue correct certificates, or that their reputation is such that the country at large is not willing to accept them.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Just to make a correction in the gentleman's statement. I did not say they were not reliable——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman said they did not enjoy a good reputation.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I said the public had more confidence in the certificate issued by the Government.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will let the gentleman's statement stand as he made it, that Federal certificates inspire more confidence. I have only a word more, just in reference to the State rights matter. The gentleman says he is a firm believer in State rights and yields to nobody in his devotion to the doctrine of State rights. A few years ago a very distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture told us that he was a firm believer, as the gentleman from Texas is, in State rights, but he said, "I never let that idea interfere with an appropriation for South Carolina." [Laughter.] That is the idea the gentleman from Texas has in his mind. He believes in State rights until there is a chance to get an appropriation from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BUCHANAN) there were—ayes 38, noes 7.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do that for the purpose of asking the chairman of the subcommittee a question as to the construction of the language in line 12, page 64, in reference to the words relating to where the certificate shall be received as prima facie evidence. The language is "in all courts of the United States." I take it that it is limited to the Federal courts?

Mr. ANDERSON. That is my understanding.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does the gentleman know of any objection to including language so as to make the certificate on interstate shipments receivable as prima facie evidence in all courts within the United States?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think if that were going to be done it ought to be done by the State legislature.

Mr. BURTNESS. I know in many cases from personal experience and observation that there is enormous expense entailed in getting the evidence that is required from the man who makes the inspection, and so forth, and unless the gentleman knows of any valid objection to it I would be disposed to offer an amendment to change, in line 12, the word "of" to "within," and insert after the word "department" in line 11 the words "on interstate shipments."

Mr. ANDERSON. I hope that will not be done. Nobody can tell what a snap judgment of that kind on a piece of language like this is going to do, and I am frank to say I do not know what its effect would be, and I very much hope it will not be done.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman think we have any power to say what shall be prima facie evidence in a State court?

Mr. BURTNESS. It is a doubtful question, but if you limit your action to shipments in interstate commerce that we take cognizance of and provide inspection for and give certificates for, I think there are two sides to the question. But in view of the fact that this has not received careful consideration, and recognizing that a snap judgment might be a mistake, I am not disposed to press the question at this time, but simply brought it up so that it may be more carefully considered in the future.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter the powers conferred and the duties imposed by law on the Bureau of Markets, Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates, and the Office of Farm Management and Farm Economics of the Department of Agriculture shall be exercised and performed by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I refer to the word "hereafter" in line 1. Has it been definitely determined to make this permanent?

Mr. ANDERSON. I understand so; as a matter of fact the reorganization is practically completed now.

Mr. HAUGEN. The reorganization is completed?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I withdraw the reservation.

The Clerk read as follows:

ENFORCEMENT OF THE UNITED STATES COTTON FUTURES ACT.

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the United States cotton futures act, as amended March 4, 1919, including all expenses necessary for the purchase of equipment and supplies; for travel; for the employment of persons in the city of Washington and elsewhere; and for all other expenses, including rent outside of the District of Columbia, that may be necessary in executing the provisions of this act, $146,540: Provided, That any moneys received from or in connection with the sale of cotton purchased for the preparation of practical forms of the official cotton standards and condemned as unsuitable for such use may be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, for the purchase of other cotton for such use.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order or rather I make it, to the proviso, line 15 to line 21, inclusive, that it is legislation unauthorized.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Iowa understand this has been carried for quite a while? There is no doubt it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. HAUGEN. Well, it is bad policy to make it a revolving fund.

Mr. MANN. Here is the point about it. Certain of this cotton that has been used a while may become too old, or something happens to it, for use for standard purposes. Now, if that is the case no one knows just what it will be, and is it not better to sell it and buy some cotton that can be used for standard?

Mr. HAUGEN. The proviso can be framed so as to provide for selling, but what I object to is to make it a revolving fund. I think there should be an accounting.

I think Congress has determined definitely that there should be accounting in every division. For instance, we had in the Forest Division and other bureaus revolving funds. I think it is bad practice. We ought to know exactly what money is received and what it has been appropriated for.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the general principles I fully agree with.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not contest the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, it is a limitation on an appropriation bill, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "$146,540," and insert in lieu thereof "$175,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON: Page 65, line 15, strike out the figures "146,540," and insert in lieu thereof the figures "175,000."

Mr. ANDERSON. I do that for the purpose of separating the funds the department would be deprived of on account of the action which is taken on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. MANN. They can not sell any of it. There is no authority under this to condemn it. They have got to continue to use it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ENFORCEMENT OF THE UNITED STATES GRAIN STANDARDS ACT.

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the United States grain standards act, including rent outside of the District of Columbia and the employment of such persons and means as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $536,223.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

There is something wrong about the enforcement of the grain standards act. Just exactly what it is would take me too long to explain. Some people are disposed to blame Congress for this difficulty, but the grain standards act only authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to prescribe standards in grains, and Congress had a right to believe when it passed this act, and did believe, I have no doubt, that the act would be administered in the interest of agriculture, the very purpose for which the whole department exists. The farmers in the spring-wheat region of the Northwest have complained about these regulations covering grain-standard grades ever since they were promulgated in 1917. The act was passed in 1916 and the regulations completed in August, 1917. Notice had been given beforehand to the farmers of the Northwest, and the inspection bureaus of the different States—Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Montana—sent representatives to protest against the regulations. But they were adopted with very little modification. Every year since that time we have held hearings either before the Secretary of Agriculture or before the Committee on Agriculture in an effort to get these regulations changed, but without avail. Secretary Houston held that he would not change them during the war. There was some good reason for that. After the war was over Secretary Meredith came in, and he said they had not been tried long enough under peace conditions and he did not want to change them. When the new administration came in the farmers of the Northwest had great hopes. So about a year ago they came down here by special committee representing the State Legislature of Minnesota and representatives from the States of North Dakota and South Dakota, and a protracted hearing was held before the Secretary. However, no change resulted. Seeing that we had exhausted every remedy before the department, I introduced a bill prescribing changes in the spring-wheat regulations. It came before the Committee on Agriculture, and the representatives of these three States and farmers were heard exhaustively. Samples of all kinds of spring wheat and all grades were produced, the flour made from this wheat was exhibited, and the bread made from these different kinds of wheat was shown. We had the professors from the agricultural colleges and the chief inspectors and examiners and chemists, besides the farmers, and as a result of that hearing the bill was reported favorably with quite a number of amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEENERSON. And these amendments were reported, and the bill is on the calendar. In order to simplify the procedure on the floor of this House I introduced a new bill, including these amendments and some changes that had been found necessary, and the other day when that came up the representatives of the millers appeared in opposition, and they were heard. I am not going into the details. But within the last two or three days the Secretary of Agriculture has announced that he had appointed a committee headed by Dr. Coulter, of the agricultural college of North Dakota, and Prof. Fitz, of Kansas, who investigated the market conditions in the country last season.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I noticed in this morning's paper a statement that the Secretary of Agriculture announced that he was considering some change in the regulations within the next two weeks.

Mr. STEENERSON. He announced that this committee had made a report, and based upon that report he proposed to make certain changes in these regulations governing this spring wheat. And the changes he proposes to make concern test weight, foreign material, moisture, and the classification. Those are the very points that were considered before the Committee on Agriculture, of which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] is an able and active member, and it is hoped that these changes that the Secretary of Agriculture outlines will accomplish the very purpose for which we are seeking a remedy in this bill that I introduced.

The evidence is sufficient to justify the statement, and the people of the Northwest believe that by the existing rules and regulations governing the spring wheat grades the farmers have actually lost from 20 to 40 cents a bushel on every bushel that they marketed. The representative of the Washburn-Crosby Co., Mr. Bell—and they are the biggest millers, I believe, in the world—in a letter which I will print with my remarks, if I get permission, says that the range between the lowest and highest price paid by the buyers in Minneapolis of spring wheat of the same grade is from 20 to 40 cents a bushel, and they all admit that that difference between what the grade sells for at the lowest price and what it has sold for by sample, where they pay more than the grade price, does not go to the farmer but to the middleman. And if you take it on the 50,000,000 bushels annually sold in Minnesota, it amounts to $10,000,000. In my judgment, in the last five years the enforcement of the grain standards act in the United States has cost the spring-wheat farmers at least $50,000,000.

We had a good inspection system in Minnesota. The Minnesota grades were recognized in the markets of the world as most reliable. That system was in force for more than 20 years, but was superseded by the Federal grades, with the result that the farmers have been penalized to the tune of millions and millions of dollars. The man that boasted that he had laid down the principle upon which these Federal grades were framed had for years been employed by the mills and elevators in Buffalo. He volunteered his services to the Department of Agriculture, and stayed here three or four years and then, after he had completed the preparation of the rules governing the grades, he resigned; and he testified the other day that he was now employed by the big millers, mentioning them, in Buffalo, and he stood by the work that he had done here.

The farmers were never heard. They never were consulted. The head of the Bureau of Markets, in explaining the grades, said they would never be put into effect until they were submitted to and approved by the grain trade. But never was a farmer consulted until recently, when the Secretary of Agriculture did send Dr. John Lee Coulter, who was born and raised in Polk County, Minn., out to investigate and report on the administration of the grain standards act in the Northwest. That was the first time that a practical agriculturist had anything to do with grades. I think the same thing may be said of Mr. Fitz, who was connected with an agricultural college in Kansas. I am glad they have at last permitted somebody who knows something about the producer to have something to say in regard to the preparation of these rules respecting the grades. This legislation, when enacted, was supposed to be in the interest of the producer; but here in the case of wheat the grades have been established in the interest of the buyers. I hope when the new grades are promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture in the near future some regard will be given to the interests of the man who raises the wheat. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, at every hearing, whether before the department or the committee, the millers and terminal warehousemen have opposed the Steenerson bill—H. R. 7401, H. R. 9668—on the ground that it would injure the farmer. They readily admit that present grades are faulty; that they buy wheat at the terminals by sample without regard to grade; that on the same day No. 2 or No. 3 will sell for more than No. 1; and that different lots of No. 1 will sell at prices varying from 20 to 40 cents per bushel. In a recent letter written by James F. Bell, of Washburn-Crosby & Co., millers of Mineapolis, it is said:

"It is a matter of record that the range of price of wheat of the same Federal grade as paid by millers at terminal markets and based on the commercial value of them is most of the time 20 cents, and as high as 40 cents."

That is to say, 5 carloads arrive in Minneapolis, and according to Federal rules are all graded No. 1, and yet each sells on the same day at a different price by sample, the highest 40 cents per bushel more than the lowest. The high price is not reflected back to the farmer, for the price in the country is determined by the closing price the day before for the grade, which is telegraphed each morning to the country elevator. This closing price is for the grade, and seems invariably to be the lowest for the day. See daily market report published in the papers.

The millers profess to desire that the price they pay should be reflected back to the farmer, but the remedy they suggest is the raising of all grade requirements, which would make things worse than they now are. The first proposal is to raise the test weight of No. 1 to 59 pounds. That is higher than Canada requires for Manitoba hard red spring, for they require 60 pounds per imperial bushel, which is equivalent to our 58 pounds. Test weight of wheat varies in different varieties. Hard red spring wheat has a comparatively small berry. It is only in rare cases that it will weigh more than 58 pounds. There are other wheats of much larger berry that weigh up to 63 or even 64 pounds, but that is winter wheat. Those familiar with that variety of wheat when they first see the hard red spring think it seems small, but yet it may be the choicest milling wheat in the world. The flour made from it brings the highest price.

The imperial bushel in use in Canada contains 2,218.92 cubic inches and will hold 80 pounds of water. The Winchester bushel, in use in the United States, contains 2,150.42 cubic inches and will hold 77.63 pounds of water. (Standard Dictionary, "bushel.") The imperial bushel will hold 60 pounds of No. 1 wheat, and yet when the loose wheat is thrown in water it sinks, showing that the specific gravity of loose wheat is greater than water. If we could have a kernel of wheat that contained the same number of cubic inches as a bushel, it would weigh more than 80, probably 90, pounds. Why? Because when you weigh wheat that is loose in a bushel measure or other container it has so many air spaces between the kernels, so many interstices, that it reduces the weight to 60 pounds. Logically, therefore, the test weight of wheat per bushel is affected by the size of the kernel or berry, and the large-size wheat weighs more than the wheat of smaller berry. This is overlooked by those who want the test weight applicable to winter wheat used in grading hard spring. Washburn & Crosby propose to raise the test weight to 59 pounds, and the result would be that 90 to 95 per cent of all the wheat in Minnesota and the Dakotas would be graded below No. 1.

The trouble now is that the farmer receives a lower grade when he sells than the value of his wheat requires, and lower by 20 to 40 cents per bushel than it sells for at the terminal on sample. It sells for what it is worth and regardless of grade when it is inspected and examined by the miller who buys it to make flour.

The present grades fail to indicate the real value of the wheat, and owing to this defect it is impracticable to deal in this commodity on grade. There are now 5 grades and sample grade, making 6 in all, and spring wheat is divided into two classes, hard red spring and durum; and class 1 is divided into three subclasses, dark northern spring, northern spring, and red spring; and class 2 is divided into three subclasses, amber durum, durum, and red durum, which makes six subclasses, and really 6 grades of each, so we have 36 grades. My bill proposes to leave out one subclass, namely, red spring, from class 1 and to omit grade 5 in each class so as to make the total grades four and sample in each subclass.

The requirements under present regulations for grade 1 are as follows: (a) Bright, cool, and sweet; (b) test weight at least 58 pounds to the bushel; (c) 14 per cent moisture; (d) 1 per cent foreign material, including not more than five-tenths of 1 per cent matter other than cereal grains; (e) 2 per cent damaged kernels, including not more than one-tenth of 1 per cent of heat-damaged kernels; (f) 5 per cent of wheat other than hard red spring, including not more than 2 per cent common white, white club, and durum wheat; (g) 5 per cent of humpback wheat in No. 1 dark northern or No. 1 northern. These requirements vary according to the grade, except the first, cool and sweet, which apply to the first four grades. The second requirement, test weight, is for grade 1, 58 pounds; grade 2, 57 pounds; grade 3, 55 pounds; grade 4, 53 pounds; and grade 5, 50 pounds. The third requirement is 14 per cent moisture for grade 1, 14½ per cent for grade 2, 15 per cent for grade 3, 16 per cent for grade 4; also 16 per cent for grade 5.

Another requirement relates to foreign material, which is divided into two classes, separable and inseparable, including rye. The separable material is such that can be taken out in an ordinary fanning mill and is called "dockage" and does not affect the grade, but is taken out of the total weight. The so-called inseparable foreign material, such as wild peas, kinghead, or other like seeds, however, reduces the grade as follows: One per cent or less is ignored, but in excess of 1 per cent, of which more than five-tenths of 1 per cent is other than cereal grains, it reduces the grain to No. 2; an excess of 2 per cent, of which more than 1 per cent is other than cereal grain, reduces it to No. 3; an excess of 3 per cent, of which more than 2 per cent is other than cereal grain, reduces it to No. 4, and an excess of 5 per cent, of which more than 3 per cent is other than cereal grain, reduces it to No. 5; and an excess of 7 per cent, of which more than 5 per cent is other than cereal grain, reduces it to sample grade.

The way this operates in practice, so far as the farmer is concerned who brings his wheat to the country elevator, is as follows: He may bring in perfect wheat weighing more than 58 pounds to the bushel, but if it has 14.1 per cent moisture it goes to grade 2, or it may have a fraction over 14.5 per cent and it goes to grade 3, or it may have 16 per cent and it goes to grade 4. This carload is perfectly clean and the wheat is so plump and sound that it can be shipped without spoiling to the terminal, and when it arrives there it can be run through the elevator and the moisture will be so reduced as to make it No. 1, and this operation will cost about 1 cent a bushel. If it is too damp for shipment the local elevator can spout it a few times through different bins or run it through a fanning mill which will reduce the moisture, raising the grade from No. 4 to No. 1, making a difference when wheat is $1.20 of 22 cents a bushel, or $220 on a thousand-bushel car.

As the test weight of wheat can not be changed by manipulation we ignore that requirement for the purpose of this argument.

The next requirement is foreign material, which at present is divided into two kinds—separable and inseparable—as explained above.

It was conclusively established before the committee that by modern machinery and processes which are found in large elevators and mills, practically all of the foreign material can be removed at an expense of from 2 cents to 5 cents a bushel. Therefore the middleman here would get on this thousand-bushel car a profit of $170 over and above the expense of separating the foreign material, which foreign material might also be of some value for feed.

Another requirement is the number of damaged kernels allowed, but as these do not injure the wheat and can not be removed by machinery they are constant and need not be discussed. Test weight, also being constant and not materially changed by handling, need not be considered here.

The most important elements in grading wheat are: First, test weight; second, moisture; third, foreign material; fourth, condition. The practical operation of the present system is as follows:

One farmer comes in to an elevator with a load of wheat that is plump, bright, cool, and sweet, and tests more than 58 pounds to the bushel, but unfortunately it has 16 per cent of moisture and 10 per cent of damaged kernels, and it is graded down to No. 5.

A second farmer comes in with a load of wheat that has all the faults; that is, it weighs only 50 pounds, it is only cool, but is slightly sour, has 16 per cent of moisture. This is graded just the same as the previous load, and it must be so graded in order to be in accordance with the regulations.

The third farmer comes in with a load which is in every instance strictly graded according to the rules, and he finds that, although the kernels are plump and sweet and weighs more than 58 pounds, and has only 10 per cent to 12 per cent of moisture, but it has 3 per cent of inseparable material in the shape of wild peas or kinghead, and it must be graded down to No. 5.

The fourth farmer comes in with a load of grain which is graded No. 2 because of a slight excess of moisture.

The fifth farmer comes in with a load which is also graded down to No. 5 because it has 10 per cent of damaged kernels.

The sixth farmer has a load which would grade No. 1 in every respect, except that it has 3 per cent of rye, and it is graded down to No. 5.

These six loads are all put into an elevator and spouted out and thoroughly mixed into a car and shipped to a terminal. This is then unloaded there and put through spouts again, thoroughly mixing it, and as of these six cars only two had too much moisture, and being mixed with one that contains only 12 per cent moisture, it reduces the amount of moisture of the whole lot to less than 14 per cent. Assuming there were 133 bushels in each load, making 1,000 bushels in the car, it would give a profit to the mill or elevator that handled it of $300, less the cost of cleaning, which would not be more than $50; besides he will get all the separated foreign material free.

At the hearings before the committee more than 20 samples taken from farmers' wagons were produced, illustrating by actual cases this kind of grading at Fargo, and each grading was absolutely according to the rules, and the inspector had no discretion to do otherwise.

When a country elevator sends this kind of wheat, he may not get the profit involved in raising the grade by mixture, for if he has a carload of the same kind of wheat as came in each wagon load with the faults specified above, these cars would be graded down on him as well as on the farmers' wagon loads, but there the terminal elevator or miller who mixes it and cleans it gains the entire profit, because in these supposed cases the wheat is sold on grade. It is admitted that where the shipper has an agent that is faithful on the board of trade he may, and often does, overcome this disadvantage by selling on sample for more than the grade price. At Minneapolis this is so common that on one day, as appeared before the committee hearings, the price of Nos. 2 and 3 was higher than No. 1 in some instances, because the wheat having been graded down for one fault only possesses practically all the merits of No. 1. In fact, most of the transactions of the chamber of commerce at Minneapolis in spring wheat are not made in reliance on any grade, but on the examination and test of each car itself and the price fixed according to the merits without regard to grade, and this fact demonstrates that the grading is faulty and in fact mostly worthless.

A good illustration of this occurred as testified to at the hearings. Over a year ago Washburn & Crosby, desiring to buy wheat for future delivery, bought 1,000,000 bushels of No. 1 at a certain price. One of the rules of the board of trade at that time permitted the delivery of No. 1 and No. 2 in place of the grade contracted for by deducting the difference between the price of those grades and No. 1. The individual who sold this wheat had guaranteed the wheat that just came up to the requirements in each respect of No. 3; that is, it was cool and sweet, had a test weight of 55 pounds, contained 15 per cent of moisture, contained only 3 per cent of foreign material, of which 1 per cent was matter other than cereal grains. It is a well-known fact that the light-weight wheat, or shrunken wheat, can carry less moisture without spoiling than good wheat, and this being in the heat of the summer the wheat that was tendered was in danger of spoiling and was not fit to grind, and the purchaser had to dispose of it at a loss. All future trading must be made on grade, and where the buyer does not know when he buys what he is going to get when the delivery time comes it is impossible to approximate the right price. In order to make future trading practicable the grade should indicate what the article will be which is to be delivered, and the more accurately this can be known the better will be the price that the producer gets, because whatever the margin of error may be it is always calculated against the producer.

There might be a number of cars shipped from country elevators to a miller and graded down for different reasons, but when mixed it would be more valuable than the grade indicated, and in that case the miller profits, but the minute these cars reach the terminal or hospital elevator they can be graded up by mixing and manipulating, so they will contain just exactly the highest grade that this combination will bear, and they will be sold at the grade price. The farmer has not one chance in five of getting the real value of his wheat under this system. This uncertainty also injures the small miller outside of the terminal point who orders wheat from there, because before it is shipped it is so manipulated as to just fill the requirements, and nothing more, whereas the miller at the terminal point who gets the wheat from the country elevator very often gets wheat graded down for one fault that possesses other merits that bring it up in value, and if sold in sample instead of grade will bring a higher price than it does. It is often said that country elevator men do not get rich, but if this is so the reason is that they are bound to grade according to the rule, notwithstanding the fact that the wheat is better than the grade indicates, but when it comes to the terminal where there is an opportunity to mix it, then the wheat is graded up because if shipments contain merits other than required for the grade the profit in mixing and grading up all goes to the miller or elevator men at the terminal. If the miller buys at a premium over the grade price, then the elevator or mixer makes the profit.

What is the remedy? The two principal changes in grade requirements in this bill are: First, all foreign material in wheat, except rye, shall be classed as dockage, and all dockage shall be designated on the grade certificate, specifying the kind and quantity, but shall not affect the grade. Second, all moisture in excess of 14½ per cent shall be designated on the grade certificate, but shall not affect the grade.

Under present rules foreign material is classified into two kinds, separable, such as dirt, sand, weed seeds, and grain other than wheat, which can be readily removed by appropriate sieves, cleaning devices, or other practical means. This is called "dockage," and is deducted from the total weight. Less than 1 per cent dockage is disregarded, and over 1 per cent shall be added to the grade designation. Inseparable material is limited in the grade requirements, so that No. 1 "may contain not more than 1 per cent of foreign material other than dockage, which 1 per cent may include not more than five-tenths of 1 per cent of matter other than cereal grains." Under this rule six-tenths of 1 per cent of wild peas, kingheads, or other like seeds will lower the grade to No. 2, and 1 per cent of such seeds to No. 3; 2 per cent of such seeds to No. 4; 3 per cent of such seeds to No. 5.

This one defect puts wheat, otherwise No. 1, in the lower grade, which may contain other serious defects of quality, such as No. 5, which is required to have a test weight of only 50 pounds per bushel; may contain 16 per cent of moisture; may contain 15 per cent of damaged kernels, of which 3 per cent may be heat-damaged kernels.

Hon. EDWIN F. LADD, Senator from the State of North Dakota, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Senator, in your opinion will the proposed changes provide a remedy for this situation?

Senator LADD. They will. They will give the farmer of the Northwest better returns and fairer returns and do no injustice to any honest concern, and I am not concerned about the speculators.

The CHAIRMAN. You have examined this bill, H. R. 7401, introduced by Mr. STEENERSON.

Senator LADD. I have. I have a copy in my pocket, and I have examined it carefully.

The CHAIRMAN. And you approve of it?

Senator LADD. I approve of it. (Hearings, p. 192.)

Mr. STEENERSON. Senator, in connection with your work as head of the Agricultural College of the State of North Dakota, did you have a flour mill there?

Senator LADD. Yes, sir. We had a flour mill and we had chemists and we had millers and we had bakers, and we kept the investigations going for some time. We have a 44-flour mill with a capacity for making 44 barrels of flour in 24 hours. It is one of the Allis-Chalmers mills, which is just the same as they have in these large mills, only it is made on a smaller scale, and our investigations were carried on in exactly the same way and checked up with the practical operation of the mills themselves.

Mr. JONES. Senator, there has been a good deal of testimony here to the effect that by technically grading down some of this wheat they have varied the price 30 or 40 cents a bushel. Now, in your judgment, for the most part, who gets the benefit of that spread where wheat is technically graded down because of a little excessive moisture or a little foreign matter getting into it?

Senator LADD. The farmer loses it all, the speculator makes it, and the consumer pays for it. (Hearings, p. 193.)

O. P. B. Jacobson, chairman of the State railroad and warehouse commission, testified that wild peas were separated by the mills in Minneapolis and that his records showed that from September, 1917 to 1918, 21 carloads of wild peas were shipped as mill feed. Hearings, "Grades for spring wheat (H. R. 7401)."

Closing cash forms basis for paying farmer. Note that closing cash follows the lowest price paid quite closely, so that most of what the wheat brings above the low price does not go to the farmer. This varies from 22 to 44½ cents per bushel on Nos. 1 to 3 dark northern spring for June 15, 16, 17, and 18, 1921.

The present Federal standards put wheat with this wide variation in price in the same grade; so that when the wheat is sold by sample some of the wheat that grade No. 3 brings more than a good deal of the wheat that grades No. 1 and No. 2.

Note the wide variations in prices paid for wheat within the same grade when sold by sample. This shows how the Federal standards put wheat of widely different value in the same grade; in other words, the grades do not adequately reflect milling value. Much of the wheat grading No. 2 sold for more than a great deal of that grading No. 1; and a good deal of the wheat grading No. 3 sold for more than that grading No. 1 and No. 2. The grade does not at all place the wheat in any definite place in the price scale.

[1] H. R. 7401 will allow payment at local elevator on basis of clean wheat. Prices on wheat average for June 15, 16, 17, and 18, 1921. Prices on mill products average for week ending June 15, 1921, Minneapolis market.

Dr. W. C. Palmer, State inspector for North Dakota, in referring to the above chart, which indicates different values in the same grade, had this to say:

Mr. PALMER. I would like to take up the other chart for a few minutes. These figures in these columns here represent the number of carloads. This red line here represents the closing cash. These figures over here [indicating] represent, for instance, there is $1.90. The figures above here indicate that closing sale over $1.90, and many figures between the next two lines indicate the sales for over $1.80. Now, if you go back here to June 15 again, why, we find that of the No. 1 dark northern spring 15 carloads sold for over $1.80, 5 carloads sold for over $1.70, and 9 carloads sold for over $1.60, while the closing cash is $1.62. That is taken from this chart over here. Then we have the No. 2 dark northern spring, 3 carloads for over $1.80, 6 carloads for over $1.70, 2 carloads for over $1.60, and 5 carloads for over $1.60, closing cash $1.50. And here we have No. 3, and you see the same as it is. Mr. Sullivan has just called your attention to—here you will see we have a lot of carloads of No. 3 selling for a good deal less than carloads of No. 1, and here we have some carloads of No. 2 selling for more than carloads of No. 1. In other words, here is what it means: It means that the Federal grades place wheat of widely different values within the same grade. If the grade should do anything, it should classify wheat on the basis of its value. But the fact that this wheat is graded No. 1 out of the country elevator is no indication of what it is going to bring down on the Minneapolis market. It may vary anywhere up to 30 cents.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Those tables indicate that they actually vary from about 22 cents to over 40 cents.

Mr. PALMER. The variation is from 27⅜ to 44½ in four days.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The grades actually mean nothing then in actual practice, do they?

Mr. PALMER. The grades do not mean anything down on the Minneapolis market. They do mean everything out on the farmer's market, because he is paid on the basis of whatever the wheat grades, and then when they go down on the terminal market they do not pay any attention. They look at the wheat in this pan and they see the grade. It may be No. 3 wheat, and if they want it they may pay more for it than they will pay for No. 1 wheat. (Hearings, pp. 78–79.)

WHOM DOES THE FEDERAL STANDARDS ON WHEAT PENALIZE?

[By W. C. Palmer.]

The Federal standards provide that so-called foreign inseparable material in wheat shall lower the grade but be paid for at wheat prices, the contention being that this will force farmers to cut out allowing these things to get into the wheat. This means that the farmer gets paid for material that replaces wheat. The farmer may in this way get up to 7 cents for his material, but he is cut in price up to 40 cents or even more per bushel by having the grade reduced. But it does not stop here, as this results in degraded grades, and consequently lower prices, for the low in the grade. But only a small proportion of the wheat has these foreign materials—perhaps less than 1 per cent. Then all the growers of wheat are penalized in an attempt to penalize the growers of this 1 per cent.

Moisture is also made to degrade the grade. Sixteen per cent of moisture, for instance, puts the wheat in grade No. 4, as well as many other factors. Wheat with 16 per cent of moisure is not a storable wheat. It is not a wheat that a miller would buy, nor would an exporter buy it, so the legitimate market for No. 4 wheat is shut off on all No. 4, even though it contained but 10 per cent moisture, unless it is bought on sample. The party buying on contract then does not buy No. 4 nor No. 5 wheat. The millers' representatives stated at the hearings before the Secretary of Agriculture in April, 1921, and the same statement was made before the House Committee on Agriculture in the hearings on the Steenerson bill, that they had bought a million and a half bushels of wheat on contract and could not use it. This was No. 3 wheat by the Federal standards.

These same representatives stated that they could not buy wheat for their mills by grade, but that they bought on samples. If the millers in Minneapolis can not buy by grade, then what is the miller at a distance or the importer to do? He is limited to buying No. 1 and No. 2 wheat, and the rest he will have to let alone. Now, what effect will that have on the price of Nos. 3, 4, and 5 wheat? And the price paid the farmer is on the basis of what the lowest in each of these grades will bring. Then a system that allows the grades to be degraded so that some of them are not fit for buying, what price can the farmer expect? And what justification is there for grades that make it possible for a large part of our wheat to be put in such condition that it can not be bought on grade, or any other way than sample, and that penalizes the grower? The Steenerson bill will prevent this grain degrading and cut out penalizing all of the wheat growers for what a few do. (Hearings, pp. 270–271.)

The Canadian grades are prescribed by statute. A copy of section 107 of the Canadian grain act is appended hereto for comparison:

107. SPRING WHEAT.

No. 1 Manitoba hard wheat shall be sound and well cleaned, weighing not less than 60 pounds to the bushel, and shall be composed of at least 75 per cent of hard red Fife wheat.

No. 1 hard white Fife wheat shall be sound and well cleaned, weighing not less than 60 pounds to the bushel, and shall be composed of not less than 60 per cent of hard white Fife wheat, and shall not contain more than 25 per cent of soft wheat.

No. 1 Manitoba northern wheat shall be sound and well cleaned, weighing not less than 60 pounds to the bushel, and shall be composed of at least 60 per cent of hard red Fife wheat.

No. 2 Manitoba northern wheat shall be sound and reasonably clean, of good milling qualities, and fit for warehousing, weighing not less than 58 pounds to the bushel, and shall be composed of at least 45 per cent of hard red Fife wheat.

Any wheat not good enough to be graded as No. 2 Manitoba northern shall be graded No 3 Manitoba northern, in the discretion of the inspector.

No. 1 wheat rejected for smut and scoured shall be graded as scoured of the wheat to which it belongs.

No. 2 wheat rejected for smut and scoured shall be graded as scoured of the wheat to which it belongs.

No. 3 wheat and lower grades rejected for smut and scoured shall be graded as scoured of the grade to which it belongs: Provided, That wheat which is inspected No. 3 northern scoured, or lower, may be graded in such regular grade, not higher than No. 3, as the inspector determines.

No. 1 wheat inspected as "No grade" for moisture and dried shall be graded as dried of the grade to which it belongs.

No. 2 wheat inspected as "No grade" for moisture and dried shall be graded as dried to the grade to which it belongs: Provided, That on the written order of the owner any No. 1 dried or No. 2 dried wheat may be graded as No. 3 northern.

No. 3 wheat and lower grades inspected as "No grade" for moisture and dried shall be graded as dried of the grade to which it belongs: Provided, That wheat which is inspected No. 3 northern dried, or lower, may be graded in such regular grade, not higher than No. 3 northern, as the inspector determines.

The following letter analyzes the proposition for amending my bill submitted by Washburn-Crosby & Co., millers, of Minneapolis, and advocated at the last hearing by Mr. Mills, their buyer, and by the other representatives of the millers. It appears unanswerable:

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, N. DAK., March 3, 1922.

Congressman H. STEENERSON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. STEENERSON: Your kind favor of the 25th received, also copy of amendments to your grain grading bill, submitted by Mr. J. F. Bell, of Washburn, Crosby & Co., millers of Minneapolis.

I have talked this matter over with our men and we find that there are a number of provisions in these amendments that would work a hardship on the farmers. For instance, subclass (a) calls for 90 per cent of dark-colored kernels, whereas your bill calls for 75 per cent, which is also the present requirement. And then again at the present time and in your bill the classification is based on the texture and color of the kernels, but in these suggested amendments the classification is based on color entirely, so it would likely result in considerable wheat going into a lower subclass than its flour-producing quality would place it and where it is placed when judged by texture and color. This change in method of classification and higher percentage of dark kernels would likely result in practically none of our wheat going into this highest subclass where most of our wheat is being graded at the present time. A good deal of wheat raised in Minnesota in some years is mottled, yet of the highest milling quality, as in Ottertail County, for instance.

These amendments also call for raising the test weight on No. 1 hard red spring to 59 pounds, which would mean that there would be practically no No. 1, and we can not see why we should require a nigher test weight than they do in Canada. You know from your investigation that 58 pounds test weight, our bushel, corresponds with 60 pounds Canadian bushel.

No mention is made of rye, so I suppose it would be classed as inseparable when amounting to over 1 per cent, and this would not be fair, as rye, up to certain amounts, has a value, and I believe the fairest way to handle it is as in your bill—that is, H. R. 9668.

In the durum provision is made that the class (a), which would correspond to our amber durum, must contain 90 per cent of hard and vitreous kernels, while at the present time 75 per cent is all that is required, and also it would take only 5 per cent of red durum or kernels of a distinctly red color to throw it into red durum. This would throw a considerable part of our durum wheat into red durum, and it would make it so that there might very little of it go into the highest subclass.

I think that 14 per cent is too low for moisture. The amendments would make the designation of excess moisture and excess foreign material a part of the grade. The wording in your bill is more definite. It states that dockage and excess moisture shall be designated on the grade certificate but shall not affect the grade.

We certainly think that your bill as it stands at the present time—that is, H. R. 9668—will work out much more satisfactorily and is not such a big departure from our present system, as it continues the same basis for making the classification into subclasses, and it will also remove the very objectionable features of having moisture and the so-called inseparables acting as grading factors. The result of having these two serve as grading factors has been to reduce the price reflected back to the farmer to the lowest that is paid for wheat made to grade by putting in everything that it will stand, while the farmers' wheat is usually only down on but one factor. And another result has been that grades Nos. 3, 4, and 5 allow so much stuff in them that they can not be bought by grade but have to be bought on sample, which cuts out a lot of competition, and the farmer secures a lower price.

Please send me a few copies of H. R. 9668.

Sincerely,

W. C. PALMER, State Inspector.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota press his amendment?

Mr. STEENERSON. No; I will withdraw my amendment. I will let them have their half million this year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ADMINISTRATION OF THE UNITED STATES WAREHOUSE ACT.

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the United States warehouse act, including the payment of such rent outside of the District of Columbia and the employment of such persons and means as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $120,000.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what work is this department doing under this warehouse act?

Mr. ANDERSON. They have licensed 264 cotton warehouses, with a capacity of 1,250,000 bales; 274 grain warehouses, with a capacity of 14,000,000 bushels; 18 wool warehouses, with a capacity of 33,000,000 pounds; and 6 tobacco warehouses, with a capacity of 3,820,000 pounds.

Mr. STEENERSON. How many grain warehouses did the gentleman say?

Mr. ANDERSON. Two hundred and seventy-four.

Mr. STEENERSON. Where are they located?

Mr. ANDERSON. All over the United States.

Mr. STEENERSON. As I understand it, these warehouses are owned by private individuals?

Mr. ANDERSON. They are.

Mr. STEENERSON. Do they become public warehouses when they are licensed?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not know what the gentleman means when he says "when they are licensed."

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, the State of Minnesota has a law prescribing where a warehouse receives promiscuously from customers grain to be stored they must be licensed as a public warehouse. For instance, if they simply store their own grain they are not a public warehouse.

Mr. ANDERSON. No.

Mr. STEENERSON. Does this apply to public or private warehouses?

Mr. ANDERSON. Public. I thought, when the gentleman asked the question, that he meant to ask whether they were privately owned or not.

Mr. STEENERSON. No.

Mr. ANDERSON. They are all privately owned, as I understand it, but the privately owned warehouse may be a public or a private warehouse.

Mr. STEENERSON. These are all public warehouses?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. You do not license a warehouse unless it is a public warehouse?

Mr. ANDERSON. No.

Mr. STEENERSON. So that it is open to everybody to store their grain there?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes. That is my understanding.

Mr. STEENERSON. Has the United States any grain warehouses that it owns?

Mr. ANDERSON. I presume there are some left over from the war, but none, so far as I know, is licensed under this provision.

Mr. STEENERSON. Do they make any reports of their business, these licensees?

Mr. ANDERSON. They do.

Mr. STEENERSON. I wonder where they are to be obtained?

Mr. ANDERSON. I imagine they can be obtained from the division that enforces this law.

Mr. STEENERSON. Two years ago I tried to get some statistics from the Department of Agriculture about the amount of grain stored in these warehouses. I was interested to know how many million bushels they had received as Nos. 2 and 3 and shipped out as No. 1. I was informed that practically all that had been received was No. 2 or 3, and that when it went out it was No. 1.

Mr. HAUGEN. The act was amended two or three years ago, not requiring Federal inspection in order to make the receipts negotiable.

Mr. STEENERSON. That is news to me. But I could get no informattion from them or from any other source.

Mr. ANDERSON. There never has been any complete survey of the elevator resources of the country. The most nearly complete one was made by the War Industries Board during the war. That is not available now.

Mr. STEENERSON. Does not the chairman think it would be a wise thing to have a law requiring statistics of these warehouses?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think it would be.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMPLETION OF WOOL WORK.

To enable the Bureau of Agricultural Economics to complete the work of the domestic wool section of the War Industries Board and to enforce Government regulations for handling the wool clip of 1918 as established by the wool division of said board, pursuant to the Executive order dated December 31, 1918, transferring such work to the said bureau, $15,000; and to continue, as far as practicable, the distribution among the growers of the wool clip of 1918 of all sums heretofore or hereafter collected or recovered with or without suit by the Government from all persons, firms, or corporations which handled any part of the wool clip of 1918.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to ask the chairman what progress this organization is making, and about how much longer it will be necessary to carry this appropriation?

Mr. ANDERSON. Everything has been done now, I think, on this, with the exception of the payment of the money to the people entitled to it in case some of the actions now pending are determined in favor of the Government.

Mr. SNELL. But the expense has to come out of the Government? It does not take the expense of carrying on the work out of the amount of money collected?

Mr. ANDERSON. No; but, as a matter of fact, this proposition yields a profit to the Government, owing to the fact that a lot of the money can not be distributed to the people entitled to it, because they can not be found.

Mr. SNELL. Is it expected to be closed up this year?

Mr. ANDERSON. That is very doubtful. It is up to the Attorney General now, and no one can tell when these suits will be terminated.

Mr. MANN. The law proposed that this should be concluded during the present fiscal year, and this proposes that it shall be finished during the next fiscal year, but no guaranty goes with it as to when it will be finished.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman is correct, as usual.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, agriculture is the greatest industry in the United States. It produces an estimated annual wealth of $18,000,000,000 and employs over one-third of our population. It is the oldest industry and has increased in importance ever since the dawn of civilization until the present day. It was said that food would win the war. And whether that statement was true or not, it is absolutely certain that without the aid of agriculture no war could have been carried on, much less won.

In the creation of national wealth agriculture takes first rank. We are more dependent on agriculture for national progress and development than on any other trade, craft, or art. It benefits all mankind. I make mention of its importance to show that it should be fostered and encouraged. The welfare of agriculture is the concern of us all, whether we acknowledge it or not. If it were a manufacturing plant, there is no question but what it would be highly organized. If that were the case, overproduction might be regulated and waste prevented. In many instances there is too much slack between the producer and the consumer. One of the purposes and benefits of the Federal reserve banking system was that money needed in one district might be shipped from another where it was plentiful. We have seasons of fruit and crops scarcity in one section and plentiful in another, and when that is the situation a highly developed organization could provide a means of transportation where an individual could not. An individual has only a comparatively small quantity to ship where large shipments could be made more economically. Cooperation and organization can be of much value to the farmer. He would not be expected to ship a single load of live stock, a single load of grain, or one clip of wool, but shipment in quantities benefits both producer and consumer. We are fast approaching such an increase in population where all crops, fruits, and other cultural products should be harvested, saved, and stored. It has often occurred to me that there is as much reason for farmers to organize as there is for the steel men, the sugar men, manufacturers, merchants, bankers, lawyers, or doctors. But organization can not do it all. It may be advisory only. Much good has often resulted from an exchange of views. When a crop is unprofitable, or more likely to produce a loss than a gain, there is no question but what it ought to be avoided. This can be illustrated by the wheat crop. I wish to illustrate this by my own State—Michigan. The average yield of wheat in Michigan for the last 16 years has been 16.7 bushels per acre. This is shown by a letter from the Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates, United States Department of Agriculture.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF MARKETS AND CROP ESTIMATES,
Washington, October 25, 1921.

Hon. J. M. C. SMITH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Complying with your request of October 22, we give below our figures of the estimated average yield per acre of wheat in Michigan for a series of years:

Wheat yield per acre in Michigan.

	Bushels.
1906	13.1
1907	14.5
1908	18.0
1909	20.0
1910	18.0
1911	18.0
1912	10.0
1913	15.3
1914	19.7
1915	21.3
1916	16.6
1917	18.0
1918	14.2
1919	19.6
1920	15.2
1921	15.9

Very truly, yours,

H. C. TAYLOR, Chief of Bureau.

From very good authority, derived from actual experience, the cost of growing and marketing an acre of wheat in the State of Michigan is approximately $25. Of course, some land produces a larger yield than other land and some is easier to work and less expensive to plow and cultivate than other. Twenty-five dollars for growing and marketing an acre of wheat will be found to be a fair average. The following are estimates taken from actual experience:

Estimated cost of raising and marketing 1 acre of wheat in Eaton County, Mich.

These estimates could be multiplied indefinitely, but the above are sufficient to show cost price. Cost sheets are kept by every successful business firm and corporation. The practice of keeping books ought to be followed by farmers, as well as by other business concerns. It will pay. From the above estimates, where the average yield is only 16.7 bushels per acre and the cost is $25 an acre, the farmer must receive $1.50 per bushel to come out even. If he has a lesser yield, he must get a greater price for his wheat, and where he receives a greater price the cost may be covered by a lesser yield. I incorporate an article published in the Detroit Free Press showing that the North Dakota Farm Bureau Federation are recommending bookkeeping to their farmers:

COST OF WHEAT RAISING SIFTED—NORTH DAKOTA FARMERS KEEP BOOKS TO HELP DETERMINE FAIR PRICES.

FARGO, N. DAK., May 20.

How much does it cost to produce a bushel of spring wheat? Nearly 300 farmers throughout North Dakota have taken to keeping books to answer this question.

"The farmer should know what his products cost him and should make his prices accordingly," says H. B. Fuller, secretary of the North Dakota Farm Bureau Federation. "Then there would be fewer farmers who fail."

With costs determined and with the national sales agency established, prices fair to both producer and consumer can be put into practice, he believes.

The present campaign to establish wheat-production costs is being directed by the federation and by the State agricultural college. In each of the 32 counties in North Dakota which have county farm agents, from five to ten, and in some cases more, farmers are noting the cost of all labor and material and all overhead expense of producing wheat. These figures will be turned over to the agents and assembled at the college here.

Mr. Fuller emphasizes the importance of correctly estimating overhead expense.

"A horse, for example, must be fed all winter to have him on hand during the seeding and harvest time," he explained. "If you want to hire a team at that time of the year you can not do it. Yet many farmers figure the cost of their teams on the basis of team hire during the dull season."

Some people do not like to keep books or accounts, because it too frequently brings them out on the wrong side of the ledger, but they ought to know whether they are succeeding or losing out, and the only way is to keep track of the business. The same is true of live stock. It is estimated that a bushel of corn will grow about 10 pounds of fat on a swine, 5 pounds of fat on a fair grade steer, and 5 pounds on a lamb or sheep. It frequently happens that there is more profit in selling the corn than in feeding it. It is sometimes more profitable for the farmer to sell the cattle and lambs off the grass than to fatten them on corn. Everyone can be guided by his own experience. I have had mine.

On the 28th day of December, 1921, the Department of Agriculture gave out the following estimate:

CROP VALUES DROP BILLIONS—FINAL GOVERNMENT ESTIMATE PLACES TOTAL AT $5,675,877,000 AT DECEMBER 1 PRICES.

WASHINGTON, December 28.

The important farm crops of the United States this year were valued at $5,675,877,000 to-day by the Department of Agriculture in its final estimates of the year. That is almost $3,400,000,000 less than last year's crops were worth and $8,000,000,000 less than the crops of two years ago, when high prices prevailed for farm products. The values are based on prices paid to farmers on December 1, and the crops comprise about 90 per cent of the value of all farm crops.

There were only two $1,000,000,000 crops this year—corn and hay—while last year four crops were valued at $1,000,000,000 or more. Production was below last year for almost every crop, although the acreage of the important crops was slightly larger, except cotton.

AREA LESS THAN 1920.

The area devoted to the important crops this year was 348,336,000 acres, compared with 349,067,000 acres last year.

Final estimates of production and crop values are:

Corn production, 3,081,251,000 bushels; acreage, 103,850,000; bushels for acre, 29.7; value, $1,305,624,000.

Winter-wheat production, 587,032,000 bushels; acreage, 42,702,000; bushels for acre, 13.7; value, $558,725,000.

Spring-wheat production, 207,861,000 bushels; acreage, 19,706,000; bushels for acre, 10.5; value, $178,343,000.

All wheat production, 794,893,000 bushels; acreage, 62,408,000; bushels for acre, 12.7; value, $737,068,000.

Oats production, 1,060,737,000 bushels; acreage, 44,826,000; bushels for acre, 23.7; value, $321,540,000.

Potato production, 346,823,000 bushels; acreage, 3,815,000; bushels for acre, 90.9; value, $385,192,000.

Cotton production, 8,340,000 bales; acreage, 31,427,000; pounds for acre, 126.9; value, $674,877,000.

Barley production, 151,181,000 bushels; acreage, 7,240,000; bushels for acre, 20.9; value, $63,788,000.

Rye production, 57,918,000 bushels; acreage, 4,228,000; bushels for acre, 13.7; value, $40,680,000.

Rice production, 39,653,000 bushels; acreage, 1,022,000; bushels for acre, 38.8; value, $38,189,000.

All hay production, 96,802,000 tons; acreage, 74,225,000; tons for acre, 1.30; value, $1,090,776,000.

Tobacco production, 1,117,682,000 pounds; acreage, 1,473,000; pounds for acre, 758.8; value, $207,070,000.

Cottonseed production, 3,704,000 tons; value $107,972,000.

Orange production (two States), 30,700,000 boxes; value, $63,850,000.

Buckwheat, 14,079,000 bushels, and $11,438,000.

Flaxseed, 8,112,000 bushels, and $11,732,000.

Sweet potatoes, 98,660,000 bushels, and $86,910,000.

Beet sugar, 2,024,764,000 pounds.

Cane sugar, 534,000,000 pounds.

Peanuts, 816,465,000 bushels, and $32,288,000.

Beans, 9,118,000 bushels, and $24,298,000.

Apples, 96,881,000 bushels, and $163,215,000.

Peaches, 32,733,000 bushels, and $52,176,000.

We hear a great deal about the bumper wheat crop and the shortage of the wheat crop, whenever there is one. That is entirely proper. The farmer is entitled to know of agricultural productions and the condition of the markets. The farmer, however, is working to an uncertainty until his crop is secured, and he must take a chance on the price of his product. His industry is subject to chance and risks not assumed by other industries. The climatic condition affects his product, and it is also subject to the ravages of insects, drought, wet weather, storms, and seasons. An estimate made by the United States Department of Agriculture gives the value of dairy products in 1909 as $1,175,000,000, divided as follows:

Value of butter	$595,000,000
Value of eggs	580,000,000

The value of these products compares commercially favorably with the value of the winter-wheat crop raised in the United States. The wheat crop is estimated at 587,000,000 bushels; and yet we seldom hear complaints about the production of butter or eggs, although commercially together they exceed the total value of the wheat crop.

Mr. Chairman, while the district I represent is usually considered an agricultural district, the population is fairly evenly divided between the country and city. I give the population from a table prepared by the Census Bureau:

Population, by counties, of the third congressional district of Michigan, 1920.

County	Total population.	Urban.	Rural.
The district	225,678	117,034	108,644
Branch	23,997	6,114	17,883
Calhoun	72,918	48,788	24,130
Eaton	29,377	8,169	21,208
Hillsdale	28,161	5,476	22,685
Kalamazoo	71,225	48,487	22,738

Mr. Chairman, some may state that Michigan is not an average agricultural State. To show something of the character of our State, I wish to conclude my remarks by incorporating a short excerpt issued by the State Department of Agriculture of Michigan, dated January, 1922. In mentioning the various products it states:

Products—agricultural: Beans, wheat, corn, oats, rye, hay, seeds, sugar beets, honey, celery, onions, potatoes, and other vegetables. Fruits: Peaches, cherries, apples, grapes, plums, pears, and berries. Minerals: Iron, copper, coal, salt, gypsum, gravel, clay, marl, and limestone; fish. Manufactured products: Automobiles, furniture, drugs, chemicals, paper, beet sugar, clothing, machinery, refrigerators, flour, cereals, leather goods, dairy products, furs, canned goods, fishing tackle, and limestone products.

Michigan's rank among States: Ranks first in United States in salt, chemical products, drugs, automobiles, engines, thrashing machines, refrigerators, beans, rye, chicory, mint, and peas. Ranks second in hay, iron, live stock, apples, potatoes, nursery products, and small fruit. Ranks third in dairy products, sugar beets, poultry, dairy cows, buckwheat, and gypsum. Ranks fourth in copper. Ranks seventh in population. Ranks tenth in education.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. There is one thought that I want to suggest to the committee and to the country with regard to the sale of agricultural commodities by grade. I am thoroughly convinced that we will never be able to standardize agricultural commodities so that they may be sold for use by their descriptive grade terms, until we get away from the idea of applying in their sale for use the grade classification restrictions which are necessary in transactions on the future boards. It is necessary to have a very limited number of general grade classifications in these future board transactions where delivery is not contemplated, but when we come to sell commodities by grade for use we must have separate grade classifications for each considerable quantity of the commodity possessing distinctive characteristics which are determinative of the use to which it is best adapted.

In the testimony before the Commission on Agricultural Inquiry it was shown that those who want to buy grain to grind in their mills can not depend on the purchases made by grade on the grain exchanges. For instance, a man who is making a certain sort of flour will need for his blend a wheat belonging to a general grade classification, but having characteristics determinative of its use which can not be included in these general classifications, and which is not described by them. The same thing is true with regard to cotton. When we undertake to establish enough grades to be able to include by proper description the various qualities of wheat making up the great wheat crop, for instance, we find we have so many grades that it will not work in the future board transactions. And when we undertake to apply to the actual purchase and sale of commodities for use the future board grading classification we find that will not work there, because the miller is not able to know whether or not he can get through the future board transactions the grain that he wants. They are not sufficiently descriptive. For that reason I suggest that those who are charged with the responsibility of formulating the grades that ought to be formulated for the sale of agricultural commodities for use must get away from the limitations imposed by future board transactions. The objective and the use are fundamentally different. For instance, in Kansas, we will say, they produce No. 2 wheat of a certain sort which has a peculiar quality desirable for making a certain sort of flour.

Now, in order for those farmers to have the market advantage of the particular wheat they produce and for all who desire that wheat to have a chance to buy at the source of the supply, it ought to be possible to offer that wheat by a proper descriptive grade term, to offer it on some sort of an exchange where everybody who wants to buy that kind of wheat can get into trading contact with it.

I know full well the difficulties involved in working this out, but the quicker we come to realize that grade classifications which are all right for future board transactions are all wrong for sale for use and start to work to establish grades sufficiently descriptive to enable sales for use to be made by grade the quicker we will do that which is necessary to be done before the business end of agriculture can be properly organized.

I do not like to be continually hammering away at this thing, as the expression goes, but I am convinced that in order to give to those engaged in the business of agriculture the possibility of establishing their business upon a basis of relatively permanent economic strength and of bringing about economy and uniformity in the sale and distribution of their commodities it is necessary—

First. That agricultural commodities be standardized with reference to requirement for use as distinguished from requirement for "future board" transactions, so that each considerable quantity possessing distinctive characteristics determinative of the use for which best adapted shall be given a specific grade term. That is the first step of fundamental importance.

Second. To have a warehouse system under uniform regulations where these commodities may be graded, stored, and have receipts issued therefor which will carry a general assignable guaranty as to physical protection, title, quantity, grade, etc.

Third. To have a marketing agency through which these commodities thus standardized, warehoused, and guaranteed to all purchasers as to title, quantity, grade, and physical protection may be sold by their respective grade classifications and delivery effected from the warehouse of original or secondary storage.

Fourth. An adjusted credit system supplementing, but not supplanting, existing credit-extending facilities, so as to make possible a longer time credit at a fair interest rate when necessary to carry commodities for orderly marketing.

Fifth. The coordination of all of these so that they may function as a unit in facilitating the sale and distribution of farm products.

Practically all of the machinery required may now be found in the Federal and State agricultural departments, farmers' cooperative marketing associations, and private business organizations. Relatively unimportant expansion and development and adjustment is all that is required.

I am not in favor of the Government doing any part of this which individuals can do, and this clearly would not require the Government to enter a new field of activity. It would only require it to adjust its activity in a field long occupied by it to meet new conditions which have developed there; not to do that which is required, but to bring the doing thereof within reach of the ability of the people.

Some of the definite advantages would be—

First. Commodities could and would move largely under prior sale from points of first and of secondary concentration to points of use by the cheapest and most direct route, in quantity and quality in accord with requirement for use, reducing transportation charges, unnecessary intervening profits and charges, and physical waste in congested markets.

Second. The additional transportation facilities made necessary by "crop movement" periods and used for only a few months each year could largely be dispensed with.

Third. While that which is suggested would not operate against fair distribution charges and profits, by creating a practical, easy of access, available to all route around the privately controlled avenues of distribution, it would tend to hold the total of intervening charges and profits to the basis of the economic value of the service rendered. Everybody, including merchants in agricultural products, could buy and sell through this agency.

Fourth. By broadening the market the tendency would be toward greater stability of prices, thereby reducing the hazard of agriculture.

These standardized, physically and morally protected agricultural commodities, in general trade contact with all markets while still at points of first concentration, would constitute the best possible basis for a real chattel credit system, and such a chattel credit system would in turn contribute toward and facilitate the operation of each of the other three requirements suggested.

It is not contemplated that the Federal Government shall do in these matters what the States can do, or that either the Federal or State Governments shall do what individuals, or groups of individuals acting in cooperation, can do with relative efficiency. These matters, however, have to do with public market facilities, are each of general public interest, fall within the scope of governmental concern, and bring to Government a definite share of responsibility. To aid in the establishment and regulation of public market facilities has been recognized since the establishment of manorial markets in England and on the Continent as early as the twelfth century as an important duty of Government. The future board exchanges can not be made to function directly in the sale through them of farm products. The quicker we realize that the better.

No attempt is made to analyze, further than to indicate the desirability and the practicability of what is suggested, and to show that the things which are suggested sustain a natural relationship to each other which under coordination, possible to bring about, would enable them to operate as a marketing unit, supplying for agriculture what is required in order to afford those engaged in that business a chance to reduce the physical and economical waste in distribution, insure adequate quantity and reasonable prices to consumers, and a relatively stable market with fair profit to producers, a chance to organize their business on a basis of economic strength and stability.

Let it be understood that no business can be more stable than the market in which it sells, and no market has in it, or can have in it, more elements of instability than the agricultural market has. We must create the possibilities of system in distribution before we can hope to have relative stability in price, economy in distribution, and change the pursuit of agriculture from a gamble to a business which can be protected by the application of rules of business. Stability of prices and uniformity of profit, and not the average of price or of profit, determines the strength and general prosperity of every business.

The Clerk read as follows:

Secretary of the board, $2,280; 2 executive clerks at $2,000 each; clerks—2 at $1,980 each, 4 of class 4, 5 of class 3, 1 $1,560, 2 at $1,500 each, 3 at $1,440, 2 of class 2, 2 at $1,260 each, 8 of class 1; 2 messengers or laborers at $720 each; messenger boys—1 $600, 4 at $480 each; charwoman, $240; in all, $53,440.

Mr. MANN. This paragraph does not carry the salary of the secretary of the Horticultural Board. Does the gentleman happen to know how the chairman of the board gets his pay? I ought to know myself, but I do not happen to recall.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not know, Mr. Chairman. Of course, the gentleman understands how the board itself is made up.

Mr. MANN. I understand that.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not know how the chairman gets his pay.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERCHANGE OF APPROPRIATIONS.

And not to exceed 10 per cent of the foregoing amounts for the miscellaneous expenses of the work of any bureau, division, or office herein provided for shall be available interchangeably for expenditures on the objects included within the general expenses of such bureau, division, or office, but no more than 10 per cent shall be added to any one item of appropriation except in cases of extraordinary emergency, and then only upon the written order of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky reserves a point of order.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I want to ask the chairman of the subcommittee this question. This matter has been before the Committee on Agriculture, and the Secretary of Agriculture has been before the committee, and on the 9th of this month the Committee on Agriculture reported a bill modifying this provision. This appropriation bill provides:

And not to exceed 10 per cent of the foregoing amounts for the miscellaneous expenses of the work of any bureau, division, or office herein provided for shall be available interchangeably for expenditures on the objects included within the general expenses of such bureau, division, or office, but no more than 10 per cent shall be added to any one item of appropriation except in cases of extraordinary emergency, and then only upon the written order of the Secretary of Agriculture.

It is the judgment of the Committee on Agriculture that the latter part of that paragraph would give the Secretary of Agriculture too much power, and the committee reported their bill with this provision—

That upon the written approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, and then only in the case of extraordinary emergency, not to exceed 10 per cent of any amounts appropriated by Congress in the annual appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the miscellaneous expenses of the work of any bureau, division, or office in the Department of Agriculture shall be available, interchangeably, for expenditure on the objects included within the general expenses of such bureau, division, or office: Provided, That there shall not be added to any one item of appropriation more than 10 per cent of such item.

Mr. ANDERSON. With all due respect to the gentlemen of the Committee on Agriculture, who I know have given very careful consideration to the question, I do not think they fully appreciate the object of that emergency provision. Take, for instance, the outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease. There was a case where the expenditure of a few hundred thousand dollars immediately saved the country millions upon millions of dollars. If we had had a limitation which prevented the transfer of appropriations to the item for disease control in the Bureau of Animal Industry the Secretary would not have had anything anywhere nearly approaching the amount necessary to meet that emergency.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes; but under this provision of the bill as reported by the Committee on Appropriations in case of extraordinary emergency, and upon the written order of the Secretary of Agriculture, he might divert any amount of any fund from any division wherever he pleased.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think he ought to have that power.

Mr. KINCHELOE. But the Secretary came before the committee, and we learned from him that he was perfectly willing that the limitation which we propose should be provided.

Mr. MANN. What is the difference between the item in the bill and the provision reported by the Committee on Agriculture?

The bill reported by the committee gives him authority to divert 10 per cent, and then in an emergency 10 per cent more, making 20 per cent that he can divert.

Mr. ANDERSON. No; it does not; he can in no case take more than 10 per cent from any appropriation. Under the language in the gentleman's bill he can not add more than 10 per cent in a case of emergency. Under this provision he can add more than 10 per cent to an appropriation already existing in case of an emergency.

Mr. KINCHELOE. He can add any amount.

Mr. ANDERSON. Within 10 per cent of the total amount for any bureau in the bill.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I think he can divert all of it.

Mr. MANN. He can take 10 per cent from the amount appropriated.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The chairman of the subcommittee has had more experience than I have. I do not wish to make the point of order, but I wanted to get the judgment of the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. My recollection is that this sort of an item has been in many bills before, practically in the same language of the bill. If an extraordinary emergency arises and the appropriation is $25,000, he may need more than $2,500.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the item carried several million dollars and he added 10 per cent, that would make quite a sum.

Mr. MANN. If the item carried several million dollars, the extraordinary emergency is not likely to arise to require the 10 per cent. It might arise; fire protection is one thing where it might be considered.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is covered by another item.

Mr. MANN. This is merely for the smaller items, where there may be an extraordinary emergency where we make a small appropriation.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, in view of what gentlemen have stated, I will withdraw my reservation of a point of order.

Mr. GERNERD. Mr. Chairman, in regard to this particular section I wish to emphasize the statement brought out by the chairman of the committee. Year before last potatoes were imported from Ireland into a township in my district. They had the wart disease. They located that, and with a small appropriation the whole thing was quarantined and we restricted it to that particular section. It did not go outside the township, and yet townships all adjoining were theratened with it. But by the relief we got from the Department of Agriculture at that time we wiped that thing out by restricting it. I want the committee to know how important it is and how dangerous it is; if that thing had got to going, it would have destroyed the entire potato crop of the whole district. I do not think the appropriation amounted to $500, and yet we prevented its spreading. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

PRINTING AND BINDING.

For printing and binding, including the Annual Report of the Secretary of Agriculture, as required by the act approved January 12, 1895, and in pursuance of the joint resolution No. 13, approved March 30, 1906, and also including not to exceed $275,000 for farmers' bulletins, which shall be adapted to the interests of the people of the different sections of the country, an equal proportion of four-fifths of which shall be delivered to or sent out under the addressed franks furnished by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, as they shall direct, $800,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON: On page 70, in line 12, after $800,000 strike out the period and insert a colon and the following:

"Provided, That not to exceed $200,000 may be used for a weekly publication giving information with respect to weather, crops, and markets, a semimonthly publication which shall be a record of experiment-station work, a weekly journal of agricultural research, a monthly publication which shall be a review of weather and meteorological investigation, a monthly publication devoted to the building and maintenance of public roads in connection with the administration of the Federal aid road act, a weekly clip sheet carrying brief progress reports and department news to the press, a weekly information service to the press reporting in popular form the results of the investigations of the department, and a weekly official record in the nature of a house organ containing administrative information about the activities of the Department of Agriculture."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to authorize the issuance of the publications of the departments which have been stopped as a result of the provisions in the sundry civil appropriation act, in order that the public may have the benefit of the information gathered by the department. It is perfectly senseless to spend thousands and millions of dollars in scientific research, in gathering information which is of incalculable value to the public, if no means are provided for getting that information to the public. The object of this provision is simply to authorize the publications of the department which it seems to us should be authorized and are clearly within the scope of the official business of the department and its proper activities.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. CHALMERS. If it is so important, why did not the committee put it into the bill?

Mr. MANN. They did not want to call attention to it.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is perhaps as good a reason as I could offer.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. How many publications are there?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think there are seven or eight altogether.

Mr. MANN. How many serial publications has the Department of Agriculture been publishing in the past?

Mr. ANDERSON. Oh, I think there was a time when it ran very much beyond that number. I can not give the gentleman the maximum.

Mr. MANN. Have they, in fact, ceased these publications, or do they issue them in some other way?

Mr. ANDERSON. Some of these publications have not been dropped. I think of these publications, the only one being held up is the Journal of Agricultural Research, which is the most important of all in my judgment.

Mr. MANN. I notice that there was a great to do in the House when we had under consideration another appropriation bill, concerning the publication of the Reclamation Record, and we heard much of what a dire thing it was that it had ceased publication. Of course, they have not ceased publishing it. They have not even changed the style of the publication, although they say it is now published as statistics, which is a lie on its face.

Mr. ANDERSON. There has been a great deal of difficulty about the matter, and in this case a number of the publications have been combined and a great deal of economy has resulted from the action which the Congress took in stopping these publications.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows perfectly well that I have always favored the publication of scientific information. I am willing to let the Agricultural Department publish a good many things. I do not know what this Housewife business is, if that is one of them. I could not quite reach it from the reading of the amendment. I think the Committee on Printing intends shortly to bring in a proposition covering publications of all of these departments. We all know what a great abuse grew up in the Government in respect to publications. Nearly every bureau of the Government was seeking serial publications, and it got to be so bad that notwithstanding every effort Congress made in the way of limitation in appropriation bills, it had no effect on the publications at all. They went ahead just the same, and they would spring a new one every little while.

Every time we passed an order designed to stop a publication they would keep that one going and put in a new one. Then we passed a positive law stopping it all. Then we extended that for a year. Then we passed a law permitting their publication, and the President vetoed it. Then we passed a law extending the time. Now the time has run out. If they follow the law, they will stop until they get authority. I am willing to give them authority in a proper way, but I do not think the proper way is to solicit the committee which reports the appropriation bill in each department and get it all back again in the way it was before.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think, in fairness to the department, I ought to say that they did not solicit this amendment. If I had been able to satisfy myself that there was any reasonable prospect of the Committee on Printing reporting a bill dealing with this matter, I would not have offered the amendment. That was the real reason why it was not put into the bill. We understood at that time that there was some prospect of the Committee on Printing reporting such a bill, but I do not think there is any now. In view of that fact I felt justified in offering the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I hope there is a prospect of the Committee on Printing, composed of three very able Members of the House, reporting the measure. The committee is not so large but that they ought to be able to get a quorum occasionally. There is the same situation in the Senate. At any rate at this time, Mr. Chairman, sympathizing with the desire of the public for this valuable information, I am going to insist upon the point of order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve it for two or three minutes?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am very much in sympathy with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], and I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not press this point of order. I desire in my time to have read a letter which I received to-day from the secretary of the College of Agriculture of the University of Kentucky with reference to the resumption of the publication of the Journal of Agricultural Research.

Mr. MANN. Of course, he is in favor of it?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. All of these people who get something for nothing are in favor of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield for that purpose?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the letter, as follows:

UNIVERSITY OF KENTUCKY,
COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE,
Lexington, Ky., March 8, 1922.

Hon. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
Representative, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At the regular March meeting of the Research Club of the University of Kentucky the following resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas the Research Club of the University of Kentucky realizes the great value of the Journal of Agricultural Research, published by the United States Department of Agriculture; and

"Whereas it has come to our knowledge that publication of this journal has been suspended for want of definite authorization: Therefore be it

"Resolved—

"1. That it is the opinion of this club that the publication of the Journal of Agricultural Research should be continued.

"2. That we hereby request our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their influence in favor of suitable provision for the publication of this journal; and

"3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each Senator and Representative from Kentucky and to the Secretary of Agriculture."

Respectfully,

DANIEL J. HEALY, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have been hoping for some time that we could secure an understanding in respect to the necessary legislation with regard to certain publications which were suspended by action of law a short time ago. At one time I thought that an agreement had been reached satisfactory to all concerned with regard to the publications of the Department of Agriculture. I had an interview with some of the officials of that department who had to do with the publications, and their attitude seemed to me to be reasonable. Personally, I felt that we could probably approve what they suggested. They seemed to be entirely satisfied with a reduction in the number of their publications and with provisions under which the volume of the matter published would be greatly reduced, but my understanding is that when the Committee on Printing discussed the matter with the officials of the department, their attitude changed somewhat.

At least, members of the Committee on Printing did not receive the same impression with regard to the attitude of the Agricultural Department that I had, and so the matter has been hanging fire. I think it is highly important that we shall make definite arrangements in regard to these and other publications. No one familiar with the facts but believes that the Federal Government has been indulging overmuch in publications, some of them in the nature of propaganda, many of them valuable, many of them, if it were proper for the Federal Government to go into the magazine business, interesting and instructive, but we all realize that the Federal Government can not or ought not to publish magazines carrying ordinary information, articles, and essays, opinions which are ordinarily printed in privately published magazines, and I hope that very soon we can reach an understanding whereby we shall continue that class of publications, information which we are fully justified in printing and which we should print in order to give the people the benefit of our governmental activities, experiments, and investigations.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. GARNER. Is this just one more case where the legislative committee of Congress having charge of the matter is in disagreement with the Executive, and therefore we can get no action whatever?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman just stated that the Agricultural Department had not made the same impression on the Printing Committee that it made upon the gentleman and therefore we have no bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, well, the gentleman from Texas has been here quite a long time and he knows that in governmental affairs there are many men of many minds.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows further that under the Democratic administration the committee only asked what they wanted and did what they were told.

Mr. GARNER. It is perhaps better to do that than to do nothing, like the present administration.

Mr. MANN. That is what you always do.

Mr. GARNER. Well, we did something, and you do not do anything.

Mr. MANN. We do the work.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, in this matter of publications you expended the people's money in the sum of millions; you had so many publications that it was difficult even to catalogue them. The Government became the greatest publisher far and away under the flag. We had magazines on every known subject. We were publishing at great expense to the taxpayers magazines and bulletins of every conceivable sort and kind. Now, we have cured that very largely, but it happens in a very few cases we have not yet fully solved all the problems. It takes quite a while to solve all the problems we inherited from the late unlamented Democratic administration. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order against the paragraph. In the opinion of the Chair it is legislation on an appropriation bill, and therefore he sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

COOPERATIVE FIRE PROTECTION OF FORESTED WATERSHEDS OF NAVIGABLE STREAMS.

For cooperation with any State or group of States in the protection from fire of the forested watersheds of navigable streams under the provisions of section 2 of the act of March 1, 1911, entitled "An act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the protection of the watersheds of navigable streams, and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purpose of conserving the navigability of navigable rivers," $400,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I am not sure myself that it is subject to the point of order. The act of March 1, 1911, authorized an appropriation of this sum beyond what has already been appropriated?

Mr. ANDERSON. Well, I contended so last year, and the Chair sustained the contention.

Mr. MANN. What is it for—fire protection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Fire protection outside of the national forest, particularly in the Appalachian region.

Mr. MANN. Not outside the national forests?

Mr. ANDERSON. It applies particularly in the Appalachian Mountain region, but it does include protection of private land.

Mr. MANN. We bought that forest at an expense of ten or eleven million dollars and it now costs $400,000 a year to keep it from burning up.

Mr. ANDERSON. No; it covers the protection of private land as well as the national forest.

Mr. MANN. And the Chair held that was in order?

Mr. ANDERSON. The Chair held that was in order. If the gentleman does not have the section and would like to have me read it, I will read it to him.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I will look it up hereafter. I withdraw the reservation.

Mr. BLANTON. Did the gentleman make the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. He withdrew it.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that it is legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, this item in a smaller amount has been carried in this bill for several years; ever since the Weeks Act was in force.

Section 2 of the Weeks Act provides:

That the sum of $200,000 is hereby appropriated and made available until expended, out of any moneys in the National Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with any State or group of States, when requested to do so, in the protection from fire of the watersheds of navigable streams; and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, and on such conditions as he deems wise, to stipulate and agree with any State or group of States to cooperate in the organization and maintenance of a system of fire protection on any private or State forest lands within such State or States and situated upon the watershed of a navigable river: Provided, That no such stipulation or agreement shall be made with any State which has not provided by law for a system of forest-fire protection: Provided further, That in no case shall the amount expended in any State exceed in any fiscal year the amount appropriated by that State for the same purpose during the same fiscal year.

Now, it is perfectly obvious that while this particular section makes an appropriation for a single fiscal year that the latter part of the section, which refers to the cooperation between the Federal Government and the States, contemplates that such cooperation shall be continuous, because in the last proviso it says:

Provided further, That in no case shall the amount expended in any State exceed in any fiscal year the amount appropriated by that State for the same purpose during the same fiscal year.

Now, a further reading of this act will indicate that the commission appointed under this act was a permanent commission and that its life did not expire with the expiration of the appropriation specifically authorized in the Weeks Act itself. And I contend under this provision, which clearly contemplates the creation of a permanent organization—the creation of a permanent cooperation between the States and the Federal Government for the protection from fires on public lands—this appropriation is in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. It is merely an appropriation in that bill?

Mr. ANDERSON. It is not under a regular supply bill at all.

Mr. BLANTON. What act is it that the gentleman was reading from?

Mr. ANDERSON. The so-called Weeks Act, approved March 1, 1911. The title of that act is as follows:

An act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the protection of the watersheds of navigable streams, and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purposes of conserving the navigability of navigable rivers.

It is perfectly clear from the title, as well as the text, that this was a piece of continuing legislation, intended to authorize and fix a permanent line of cooperation between the States and the National Government in fighting forest fires on public lands, and that it does authorize an appropriation for such purpose.

Mr. BLANTON. I submit to the Chair that this is not permanent legislation.

Mr. ANDERSON. I call attention to the fact that the Chair ruled on this question last year and ruled it in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Of course, the gentleman means that as a finality, I presume. I want to submit that this act referred to is not permanent legislation such as would authorize this Congress to vote in an appropriation as large as $400,000 to fight fires on public lands. I submit to the Chair it is clearly legislation on an appropriation bill and subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the Chair understand the gentleman from Minnesota to say the Chair ruled on this last year?

Mr. ANDERSON. I will say in that I was in error. It was a million-dollar item that the Chair ruled on last year, which I think was much more doubtful than this one.

Mr. BLANTON. And the Chair ruled against the contention of the gentleman, as I understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, this item would seem to be in order, and the Chair is going to rule that it is in order, and overrules the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ACQUISITION OF ADDITIONAL FOREST LANDS.

For the acquisition of additional lands at headwaters of navigable streams, to be expended under the provisions of the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. L., p. 961), as amended, $50,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph, although I am just now told that the Chair last year held the item to be in order. However, the original Weeks Act provided an authorization of an appropriation up to a certain limit, $10,000,000 or so. That limit has been reached and all the money appropriated. Since that time a further appropriation was made under a new authorization, but the authorization given by law—and there was a specific authorization—for the purchase of land in these forests has all been exhausted. I think no one will contradict that. They can not do it successfully because it is so.

Now, so far as I am concerned, while the point of order is being considered by the Chair, I do not know that I would make the point of order on the item of $50,000, except that if this goes into the bill it is subject to amendment by the Senate. When the amendment comes back and goes to conference the conferees can report it. But if the Senate inserts a new item the conferees can only agree to it by a vote of the House. I think myself that just at this time, when we are endeavoring to be economical, we can afford to wait a few days on the purchase of more forest land in the East that will not disappear tomorrow or the next day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to be as brief as I can in the discussion of this point of order. I am willing to admit that it is a rather close one.

The act under which this appropriation is made provides for the creation of a commission which is still in existence. Section 4 of that act provides:

That a commission, to be known as the National Forest Reservation Commission, consisting of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, and two Members of the Senate, to be selected by the President of the Senate, and two Members of the House of Representatives, to be selected by the Speaker, is hereby created and authorized to consider and pass upon such lands as may be recommended for purchase as provided in section 6 of this act, and to fix the price or prices at which such lands may be purchased, and no purchases shall be made of any lands until such lands have been duly approved for purchase by said commission: Provided, That the members of the commission herein created shall serve as such only during their incumbency in their respective official positions, and any vacancy on the commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

Section 7 of that act provides:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to purchase, in the name of the United States, such lands as have been approved for purchase by the National Forest Reservation Commission at the price or prices fixed by said commission: Provided, That no deed or other instrument of conveyance shall be accepted or approved by the Secretary of Agriculture under this act until the legislature of the State in which the land lies shall have consented to the acquisition of such land by the United States for the purpose of preserving the navigability of navigable streams.

The only point that I wish to make in this connection is that there is nothing in it that specifically limits the power that is granted to the Secretary of Agriculture to the period of appropriations provided in the act. If Congress had desired to make this act expire and the power granted by it to the Secretary of Agriculture and this commission expire at the time when the appropriation provided by it expired, it could very easily have done so. But it did not make that provision, and the whole text of the act, it seems to me, indicates the intention of the Congress to create a permanent commission, and the fact that the commission is continuing to-day, although the appropriations originally provided have expired, seems to me to be sufficient evidence of the fact that the authority conferred by this act has not expired with the appropriation which it made originally.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman did not read section 3 and the proviso under section 3.

Mr. ANDERSON. I will be glad to read it. I assure the gentleman that I did not omit it with a desire to deprive the Chair of any information that it contains.

Mr. MONDELL. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. ANDERSON. I read:

SEC. 3. That there is hereby appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, the sum of $1,000,000, and for each fiscal year thereafter a sum not to exceed $2,000,000, for use in the examination, survey, and acquirement of lands located on the headwaters of navigable streams or those which are being or which may be developed for navigable purposes: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall expire by limitation on the 30th day of June, 1915.

Note that the proviso provides that the provisions of the section, not the provisions of the act, shall expire by limitation on the 30th day of June, 1915.

Now, can it be contended that Congress was so incompetent to say what it meant that if it had intended that this act should expire by limitation on the 30th of June, 1915, it was incapable of saying so?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit the Chair to interrogate him?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman say that subsequent to the passage of this act in the Fifty-first Congress there were other acts passed which changed this law?

Mr. MANN. No; there have been other acts of appropriation since the limit of the appropriations provided by this act was reached. The original act made an appropriation of $1,000,000 for the fiscal year, I think——

Mr. ANDERSON. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. And $2,000,000 a year for each year thereafter, with the provision that that should cease with the fiscal year of 1915. That made an authorization of $10,000,000 or $11,000,000. That was the only authorization for the purchase of lands.

Mr. ANDERSON. The only appropriation.

Mr. MANN. They were authorized to purchase the land, and that was what it was for—for the examination, survey, and acquirement of the land. I think it is shown by the law, and, of course, as a matter of fact nobody will deny, that at the time it was expressly stated by everybody in favor of the bill, of whom I was one, that the only authorization for the purchase of this land so far as the expenditure of money was concerned was the amount carried by the bill. Now, the commission has continued, and may well do so in the future. The commission has been kept alive, if for no other purpose, for the expenditure of money which Congress has since appropriated. The money was not all exhausted until very recently—two or three years ago, I think. It was a continuing appropriation, and then we appropriated more money. Last year we appropriated $1,000,000 more. But there can be no authority to appropriate money for this purpose until that authority is given by Congress. The original authority given was for the expenditure of so much money, and that was all, and the commission knows it. The gentleman from Minnesota claims he does not know it, but the commission knew it. The commission reported to Congress asking for more money, saying that all their authority in that regard was exhausted. I have taken a keen interest in these forests, and everybody interested knew it except the gentleman from Minnesota, who probably does not remember the original act very closely——

Mr. ANDERSON. I was not here.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman was not here, and the gentleman from New York was not here at that time and perhaps does not remember the original act. That was a keen and a long fight and everybody knew about it at that time. I think to construe it otherwise would be a misconstruction of the statute. I think it would be a violation of the plain statement of the statute itself.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit the Chair to ask him whether or not in his opinion section 7 of the act by which the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to purchase this land is not still the law?

Mr. MANN. Within the limits of any appropriation that Congress makes it probably is the law; but the Secretary of Agriculture under that can not go around and buy up the universe.

Mr. ANDERSON. He can if we appropriate for it.

Mr. MANN. And there is no authorization for the appropriation. That was in connection with the original appropriation, and the Secretary of Agriculture had no authority by the original act to make any purchase except such as was provided by that original act. He could not go head and make a lot of purchases. He knew it. He did not pretend to do it, and the commission never pretended to have such authority.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, last year when this matter was under consideration I was not in the House. I regretted it very greatly.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman made a long speech on it.

Mr. MONDELL. I mean when the point of order was under consideration. I made a speech after the point of order was passed upon. I remember very well the history of this legislation. I was not entirely favorable to it as it was at first presented, and I was very much afraid that unless we were careful we would have very great expenditures under the act.

Section 3 was the provision which led me to give my support to the legislation. Except for that section the law in the ordinary form of an organic act authorized certain things to be done, authorized certain things to be done, of course, always within the appropriation and never otherwise and without an authorization for appropriation no expenditures could be made after the expiration of the authority in section 3.

The gentleman from Minnesota attempts to prove altogether too much. If it were true that section 7 authorized the expenditures of money whenever and to the extent the Secretary of Agriculture desired to expend it why was section 3 placed in the bill? If section 7 gave authority for the expenditure of money without regard to appropriation or further authorization why was it necessary to provide a continuing appropriation in section 3? It would not have been necessary at all. The Secretary would have gone on and made his purchases and Congress would have made the appropriations and there would have been no necessity for a continuing act authorizing expenditures within the given amount.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman is perhaps aware of the fact that section 3 has been amended, the amounts appropriated have been made available until expended, and all amounts have not been expended. Now, if there is no authority for the purchase of land the gentleman's argument falls to the ground.

Mr. MONDELL. There have been other appropriations which are still available, and within the amount of those appropriations the Secretary can expend the money. But nothing was ever more clearly understood on this floor than the intent of this act when it was passed. Without some provision like section 3 the act could not have secured a majority here. The present Secretary of War was the author of this act. He fought for it faithfully and earnestly for a long time. He only secured support for it when it was clearly and definitely understood that the act fixed and provided a limit within which expenditures could be made. There was no doubt in anyone's mind at that time in regard to it, and right now there are bills before the Committee on Agriculture—one introduced by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. WASON]—proposing an additional authorization under this act.

Mr. WASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. WASON. Has the gentleman read the bill to know whether it authorizes an appropriation or makes an appropriation? It has been reported out by the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. MONDELL. I presume the gentleman has introduced a bill in accordance with the rules of the House, and as the Committee on Agriculture has no authority to appropriate, I assume that his bill was an authorization. Is not that correct?

Mr. WASON. It has both.

Mr. MONDELL. Then it was not in accordance with the rules of the House. The committee can not report it out under the rules of the House.

Mr. WASON. It has reported it out.

Mr. HAUGEN. It authorizes the money to be expended under the provisions of the act of March 1, 1911.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, one word more. The importance of this matter runs far beyond any appropriation that may be made under this act. It raises the whole question as to whether the Committee on Appropriations is to have complete control of the policy relative to the expenditure of public money. Is there to be nothing left to the legislative committees of the House? Is the Congress to have no debate and discussion except on appropriation bills?

Mr. ANDERSON. The Committee on Agriculture can report a bill repealing the whole act to-morrow if it sees fit.

Mr. MONDELL. I realize that after a man has been a member of the Committee on Appropriations for some time and has been earnest, faithful, and useful as the gentleman from Minnesota, he is likely to get an exaggerated notion of the authority of the committee, and it is proper that the gentleman should have. But while maintaining the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations, with the tremendous power and authority that that jurisdiction gives it, it is highly important that we shall also preserve the jurisdiction of the legislative committees. They are the committees through whose action, through whose consideration, through whose proposals for legislation, the House shall determine questions of policy—how much shall we expend in certain lines, what shall be our policy for the future. It is in this as it is in the legislation on roads. The Committee on Roads recommends to the House, and the House determines, and the Appropriation Committee appropriates. This legislation was intended to be in line with the policy of giving to the legislative committee the power to determine what the policy of the House should be.

Mr. TILSON. Is not the gentleman a little unfair to this committee to state that this is an attempt to get jurisdiction? The very terms of the paragraph which we are considering——

Mr. MONDELL. I do not want the gentleman from Connecticut to misinterpret me.

Mr. TILSON. I do not wish to misunderstand the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. My attitude is exactly that of the gentleman from Illinois. I have no criticism of the committee for bringing in the $50,000 appropriation, and if that was all there was to it I would not say a word. But we all know that if this point of order is overruled amendments will be offered here greatly increasing this item—a million, two million, nobody knows how much.

It is to prevent that that we are now discussing this very important question. If the item of $50,000 is to remain in the bill, it would authorize an increase in another body, as the gentleman from Illinois just suggested. It was never contemplated that the Committee on Appropriations should appropriate except within the provisions of section 3 and the modifications and extensions of that section. If we are to preserve any field of activity for our legislative committees; if we are to determine policies here in debate upon bills brought from legislative committees rather than on items brought in by the Appropriations Committee, here is one of the places to determine that important matter, and it is important. It is important far beyond any question of the amount that might be appropriated here.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. MANN, having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HICKS, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10730, the Agricultural appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

RESIGNATION FROM A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication, which was read:

THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I herewith tender by resignation as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Very truly, yours,

WALTER F. LINEBERGER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

H. R. 9597. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the President to provide housing for war needs," approved May 16, 1918.

PURCHASE AND DISTRIBUTION OF SEED GRAIN.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2897) to appropriate $5,000,000 for the purchase of seed grain and of feed to be supplied to farmers in the crop-failure areas of the United States, said amount to be expended under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, insist upon the House amendments thereto, and agree to a conference.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, March 13, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

566. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of Newark Bay and Hackensack and Passaic Rivers, N. J. (H. Doc. No. 206); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

R. 10864) to authorize an appropriation to enable the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau to provide for the construction of additional hospital facilities and to provide medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for persons who served in the World War and are patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. OSBORNE: A bill (H. R. 10865) authorizing and empowering the President of the United States, within his discretion, to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to the grade of brigadier general on the retired list, any officer of the Regular Army, either on the active or retired list, who entered the volunteer service in April, 1861, and so continued until November, 1865, and attained the grade of major of Volunteers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10866) to increase pensions in certain cases; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 10867) for the relief of Charles M. Tibbetts; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. REECE: A bill (H. R. 10868) granting a pension to Matilda A. Runnions; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10869) granting a pension to Sarah C. Croxwell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10870) for the relief of J. L. Summers; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

4564. By Mr. COLE of Ohio: Petition of farmers and dairymen of the vicinity of Ada, Ohio, favoring the passage of House bill 8086; to the Committee on Agriculture.

4565. Also, petition of M. Martinson and others, of Findlay, Ohio, favoring the passage of House bill 7 and Senate bill 1252; to the Committee on Education.

4566. By Mr. GALLIVAN: Petition of the Lend a Hand Society of Boston, Mass., urging the adoption of the proposal made by Gen. Pershing in regard to reduction of Army officers; also, that the appropriations in regard to the Army and Navy be made as low as possible; to the Committee on Appropriations.

4567. By Mr. HAYS: Petition of L. G. Hummel and 63 other citizens of Taney County, Mo., protesting against the passage of certain bills now pending in the Sixty-seventh Congress as follows: House bills 9753 and 4388 and Senate bill 1948; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

4581. Also, a resolution adopted by H. O. Hofman, Laura M. Kendrick, and others of Brookline, Mass., urging special and immediate legislation that Austria's debt to the United States be suspended for at least 20 years; to the Commitee on Ways and Means.

4582. By Mr. VARE: Memorial of City Council of Philadelphia, Pa., petitioning the Navy to maintain the Philadelphia Navy Yard as a repair and supply base; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

SENATE.

MONDAY, March 13, 1922.

(Legislative day of Thursday, March 9, 1922.)

The Senate met in open executive session at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	France	Myers	Simmons
Ball	Glass	Nelson	Smith
Borah	Hale	Newberry	Spencer
Brandegee	Harris	Nicholson	Sterling
Broussard	Harrison	Norbeck	Townsend
Bursum	Heflin	Norris	Underwood
Cameron	Johnson	Oddie	Wadsworth
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Caraway	Kellogg	Page	Walsh, Mont.
Colt	Kendrick	Pepper	Warren
Culberson	King	Phipps	Watson, Ga.
Cummins	Lenroot	Poindexter	Weller
du Pont	Lodge	Pomerene	Williams
Edge	McCormick	Ransdell	Willis
Ernst	McKellar	Robinson
Fernald	McKinley	Sheppard
Fletcher	McNary	Shields

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to announce that my colleague, the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SMITH. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] are detained from the Senate on account of committee work.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to state that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELING-

HUYSEN] are detained from the Senate in attendance on a session of the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

As in legislative session,

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the executive committee of the World Alliance for International Friendship Through the Churches favoring prompt ratification of the treaties prepared by the Conference on Limitation of Armament, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. EDGE presented a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of New Jersey, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, as follows:

STATE OF NEW JERSEY,
ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-SIXTH LEGISLATURE.

Concurrent resolution passed by the general assembly March 6, 1922, and concurred in by the Senate.

Whereas the recent conference on disarmament held at the city of Washington, D. C., decided that two of the six contemplated battle cruisers being built by the United States could be converted into airplane carriers; and

Whereas one of said battle cruisers, namely, the Saratoga, is now under construction at the plant of the New York Shipbuilding Co., at Camden, N. J., and is 35 per cent completed, and can be converted into an airplane carrier at less expense and with greater benefit to the United States, by reason of the fact that our Navy would secure a vessel of 33,000 tons instead of a 27,000-ton airplane carrier, the limit fixed by the conference of disarmament for new vessels of that type; and

Whereas the selection of the battle cruiser Saratoga for completion as an airplane carrier by the President and the Navy Department would give employment to thousands of workmen for two years at the plant of the New York Shipbuilding Co.: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Assembly of the State of New Jersey (the Senate concurring), That the President of the United States, the Navy Department, and the Congress of the United States be respectfully requested to select the Saratoga as one of the battle cruisers to be converted into an airplane carrier; and be it further

Resolved, That the Navy Department be urged to finish other naval work on which conditions will permit continuing construction, with the view of providing employment for the unemployed of the State of New Jersey.

T. HARRY ROWLAND,
Speaker of the General Assembly.
WILLIAM B. MACKAY, Jr.,
President of the Senate.

Attest:

UPTON S. JEFFERYS,
Clerk of the General Assembly.
W. H. ALBRIGHT,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS (for Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN) presented a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of New Jersey favoring the selection of the Saratoga as one of the battle cruisers to be converted into an airplane carrier and the finishing of other naval work on which conditions will permit continuing construction, with a view of providing employment for the unemployed of New Jersey, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

(See concurrent resolution preceding, presented by Mr. EDGE).

Mr. JONES of Washington presented a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Franklin County National Farm Loan Association, of Connell, Wash., protesting against proposed amendments of the Federal farm loan bank act, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. NELSON presented petitions of sundry citizens of Clearbrook, Hoffman, Kensington, McIntosh, Brooks, Oklee, High Landing, Hazel, Kratka, and Paynesville, all in the State of Minnesota, praying for the revival of the Government Grain Corporation so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WILLIS presented a resolution adopted by the Kiwanis Club of Athens, Ohio, favoring prompt ratification of the treaties prepared by the Conference on Limitation of Armament, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions unanimously adopted by the Men's Club of the First Congregational Church, of Sandusky, Ohio, favoring ratification of the so-called four-power treaty, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BURSUM presented a resolution adopted by the congregation of 500 or more of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, of Albuquerque, N. Mex., favoring ratification of the treaties prepared by the Conference on Limitation of Armament, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented telegrams in the nature of petitions from the Kiwanis Clubs of Albuquerque and Raton, both in the State of New Mexico, praying for the ratification of the treaties prepared by the Conference on Limitation of Armament, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. NORBECK presented six memorials of sundry citizens of Montrose, Sioux Falls, Doland, Turton, Frankfort, Huron, Redfield, Hitchcock, Agar, Murdo, Madison, Winfred, Bowdle, Tolstoy, Loyalton, and Hosmer, all in the State of South Dakota, remonstrating against the enactment of Senate bill 1948, providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented six petitions of sundry citizens of Gregory, Dallas, Summit, Watertown, South Shore, Plankinton, White Lake, Crooks, Sioux Falls, Renner, Baltic, Ellis, Hartford, Mount Vernon, Letcher, Woonsocket, Lane, and Cuthbert, all in the State of South Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the Government Grain Corporation so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. LADD presented the petition of Robert Johnson and 15 others of Beulah, N. Dak., and vicinity, praying for the passage of Senate bill 2604, the so-called Ladd honest money bill, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a memorial of members of the Myosotis Club, of Sanborn, N. Dak., remonstrating against increased tariff duties on women's leather gloves, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of Karoline Lima and 37 others of Hannaford and vicinity, Fred Jauss and 26 others of Lefor and vicinity, Andrew P. Pedersen and 10 others of Juanita, C. B. Olson and 16 others of Marmon, H. W. Voight and 14 others of Bismarck, Ed. A. Olson and 3 others of Oriska, S. Estvold and 17 others of Manfred and vicinity, John W. Foss and 95 others of Arnegard and vicinity, and C. H. Pederson and 111 others of Marmon and vicinity, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the revival of the Government Grain Corporation so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BURSUM, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 2014) to provide for the settlement of small holding claims on unsurveyed land in the State of New Mexico, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 552) thereon.

Mr. WALSH of Montana, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 3176) for the relief of Fred Sumpter, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 553) thereon.

Mr. NORBECK, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9710) authorizing extensions of time for the payment of purchase money due under certain homestead entries and Government-land purchases within the former Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian Reservations, N. Dak. and S. Dak., reported it without amendment and submmitted a report (No. 554) thereon.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8342) to empower the Attorney General of the United States to fix the compensation of clerks of the United States district courts, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 555) thereon.

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9859) making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 556) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BURSUM:

A bill (S. 3275) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican Wars and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to widows of the War of 1812; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ELKINS:

A bill (S. 3276) granting an increase of pension to Orlando R. Brand; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 3277) to extend the franking privilege to the Prisoners' Relief Society, of Washington, D. C.; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 175) relative to the purchase of aircraft from any foreign nation, citizen, or corporation; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGES.

Mr. CUMMINS (for Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of United States courts, to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside of their districts, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

REVENUES AND EXPENSES OF RAILROADS.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, as in legislative session and out of order, I submit the resolution which I send to the Secretary's desk, and I ask that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 257) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed as a Senate document volumes 3 and 4 of the hearings before the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the United States Senate held pursuant to Senate resolution No. 23, Sixty-seventh Congress, relative to the revenues and expenses of railroads which report to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that 2,500 additional copies be printed for the Senate document room.

Mr. KENDRICK. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

BOULDER CREEK CANYON PROJECT.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, a week or more ago I asked unanimous consent to have printed as a public document the report of the Secretary of the Interior concerning the Boulder Creek Canyon project. That consent was accorded. I am advised, however, by the Public Printer that it will be necessary to obtain consent as well to the printing of the illustrations accompanying the report, and I ask unanimous consent that the illustrations may be included in the order for printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

FOUR-POWER TREATY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole and in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty submitted by the President of the United States between the United States, the British Empire, France, and Japan, relating to their insular possessions and insular dominions in the Pacific Ocean.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to article 1 of the treaty.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, for the second time the Senate is asked to change the foreign policy which has prevailed in the Republic since we became a Nation. The old familiar arguments ring out again in this Chamber. The country hears repeated the perfervid emotional appeals. The sacrifices and sorrows of the late war, the horror of their recurrence, are invoked with most artistic word painting, that we may be forced to-day to accept what yesterday we rejected. The hopes and idealism of good and well-meaning people, the insidious propaganda of some who are neither good nor well-meaning, create a mass opinion demanding again the surrender of patriotic, independent judgment, and the acceptance without demur of whatever may be demanded in the sacred name of peace. The stage with its setting is not dissimilar from that upon which was enacted the tragedy of the League of Nations. The drama is not far different. Many of the claquers' faces are familiar. Only the actors have changed their parts. As we look upon the new scene, memory vividly recalls the old. We see again the stage crowded with besiegers, the banners of internationalism proudly borne by those who cry a new era. Before them is the old national citadel of sympathy and helpfulness but of independence of action and freedom from entanglements, the old citadel under whose beneficent protection a Nation has grown from its uncertain small beginning to the richest and most powerful on earth. At first the assaults are but feebly resisted, but with time the forces of the besieged are augmented; from behind the scenes come unknown and unheard-of reenforcements—rank upon rank until they swell into a mighty army—of those who have lived in the shadow of the protecting citadel and know its necessity and its safeguard. And the curtain is rung down, to the utter rout of the assailants, with the national citadel unscathed and the old banner proudly waving.

The curtain rises again to-day. The stage is as of old. Again the battle rages. The old citadel still stands, but some of its defenders now lead the attack. The issue will not be determined by the actors in the calcium light nor by the claquers whose shouting alone is heard. Just as in the past struggle, the issue will be decided finally by the great inarticulate mass behind the scenes, the men and women who are neither seen nor heard, but who, living under an American policy, have become the greatest of all the peoples of the earth.

TREATY MAKING.

The League of Nations contest did not materially differ from that in which we are now engaged. Though the quadruple alliance is in many respects quite as important as the old league there is less interest and less understanding concerning it here and with our people. There may be an excuse for lack of understanding on the part of our people. There can be none for either lack of interest or understanding on the part of ourselves. The Senate, no less than the executive branch of the Government, has its duty to perform in respect to treaties. When advocates of the League of Nations and the new alliance rail at the Senate because it moves cautiously and with prudence and care, their shafts in reality are directed not at the Senate but at the Constitution. There can be no treaty, under our system, until that treaty is ratified by the Senate. They have little comprehension of the design of the framers of the Constitution and of its plain intent, who assume that the Government of the United States acts finally and consummates a binding contract when the President negotiates a treaty. The framers of the Constitution, recognizing this as a representative government with ultimate sovereignty in the people, with the utmost precision denied the Executive full power in treaty making, and that the people should know what engagements with foreign countries might deal with them, our forefathers provided that a treaty became such only when ratified by the Senate. So very careful were the founders of this Government, apparently so distrustful of rulers, that not only was a coordinate power given to the Senate but a two-thirds vote of the Senate was required before a treaty could become the engagement of the Nation. The Senate but does its duty when, pursuing the policy of the Nation as embodied in the Constitution, it moves warily and demands full information before action. It is nonsense to say that a treaty may be negotiated by the Executive and then that it shall be acted upon by the Senate without adequate information or knowledge. Intrusting the Senate with final determination concerning treaties presupposes, of course, that it shall act upon the facts and shall pass upon the reasons. To say that a treaty may be negotiated by the Executive, thrown into the Senate without explanation, and that the Senate may be denied all information respecting it, is to deny the Constitution itself. It is to ask, just as is asked concerning this treaty, that the Senate accept, without consideration, without information or knowledge, that it sign simply upon the dotted line. If this is desired, and is the better rule, then amend the Constitution; but so long as the Constitution places upon the Senate the obligation finally to pass upon treaties the Senate is entitled to the fullest information. But there is a graver question than this. Those who insist that the Executive has the sole power of treaty making, and that the Senate should immediately acquiesce in what the Executive does, forget the very essentials of our system. The people are entitled to know why their future is mortgaged, and while we continue a democracy they will know. It may not be to-day nor to-morrow. It may not be within this generation, but just as certainly as finally they understood, and finally in overwhelming numbers they rendered their verdict in November, 1920, just so with this treaty, there will come a time when a people kept in ignorance and hastened into a treaty at variance with American traditions and American philosophy of government will have their reckoning.

FOR AN INTERNATIONAL FORUM.

From the beginning of the contest concerning the League of Nations some of us have endeavored to make plain that our position was not one of aloofness or isolation for the United States. We neither expect nor wish to live a hermit nation. We ask only to live our own life in our own way, in friendship and sympathy with all, in alliance with none. Repeatedly I have stated, and I reiterate it now, that I believe in consultations and conferences among the nations of the earth, consultations and conferences open and free, so peoples as well as rulers may be informed. A righteous public opinion is the best rule of mankind. We would welcome an international forum meeting at stated intervals and as occasion required, where international questions could be discussed in the open, where all the world could see and understand. At once, in international disputes, the most potent factor would be the public opinion of the world. Let this public opinion operate under such circumstances and there would be no future wars. No leagues are required for this, no alliances, no engagements to devise efficient means to meet aggression, no freezing of the status quo by ambiguous treaties, so that wronged peoples will be forever without redress. Openness, frankness, the sunlight of publicity alone are required.

In such an international forum, with its members bound to nothing but frankness and publicity, no statesman would run counter to his people, and no people would wish for war. This constitutes real conference, real consultation, and means the era of peace. To just this sort of thing we looked forward in the Limitation of Armaments Conference. In just this way that conference opened. The President himself really thought, when he addressed the Senate and presented the treaties, that the conference had been conducted in this fashion, for he said:

Accompanying the treaties I bring to you the complete minutes of both plenary sessions and committee meetings and a copy of the official report made to me by the American delegation to the conference. Both the complete minutes and the official report of the American delegation are new accompaniments to the Executive report of a treaty or treaties, but they are fitting testimonials to that open and simpler diplomacy for which the world has asked and the practice of which contributed largely to the success of the conference so recently adjourned.

He doubtless thought that open and simpler diplomacy had prevailed in relation to the four-power treaty, one of the most important presented, and that this open and simpler diplomacy, as he said, had contributed largely to the success of the conference. In the multiplicity of his duties he could not know all that transpired, and, of course, was dependent upon his representatives. He evidently was not aware that in all the minutes presented there is nothing concerning the quadruple alliance. Indeed, there has never been greater secrecy concerning any document submitted to our people. It is true that two distinguished members of the Senate, the leader upon the Republican side and the leader upon the Democratic side, were members of the conference. Both here advocate the treaty. It is obvious from their statements upon the floor that they know little or nothing concerning its making. I do not say this in criticism or invidiously, because I realize that they, much more keenly than we do, feel their position. They are unable to explain much that requires explanation. Indeed, the usual course in matters of this sort has been quite reversed.

The treaty is presented to the Senate without word or explanation, with a denial of any information, without any report by its proponents, and without any exposition for a considerable period by either of the Senators who were signatories to the document. I pass this phase with a mere expression of regret. It will not do to answer to the request for information, as the Senator from Massachusetts did, that negotiators of treaties can not go about with shorthand reporters at their elbows. Apparently this is just what they did with the unimportant treaties, and if in matters of little consequence the most detailed explanations and conversations are given, why in a matter of the utmost importance is all information denied? If it were appropriate to have communiques, statements, minutes, explanations, and information regarding agreements concerning aircraft and gas, and treaties relating to China, why should every scrap of information be carefully concealed concerning the all-important quadruple alliance?

Under the circumstances the Senate is compelled to take the treaty as written, and from the historical facts which are known to us, analyze and construe it. The paucity of information makes difficult, but not impossible, accurate conclusions. And at the very beginning of the discussion, the fact that such a treaty was unnecessary to a limitation of armaments can not be overemphasized. After the first day, when Mr. Hughes made his brilliant address, who can doubt that if the conference had continued for a brief period with the one subject before it, the limitation of armaments in accordance with the Hughes plan would have been compelled by the peoples of the world? Apparently the conference immediately turned aside from the limitation of naval armament to the execution of a new alliance.

Because I will not change the foreign policy of this Nation, I decline to be put in the attitude of opposing a just and fair limitation of armaments or anything that makes for peace. I yield to none in the desire for peace. I will go as far as the most pugnacious pacifist justly to obtain permanent peace. I will not, in the name of peace, entangle my country in the policies of foreign nations, which mean only war. And I decline to subscribe to any document which underwrites or even indirectly involves the United States in territorial exploitation or the subjugation of any people.

THE NEW QUADRUPLE ALLIANCE AND ITS MAKING.

The advocates of the quadruple alliance agree that its principal accomplishment and the main object it achieves is the termination of the Anglo-Japanese alliance. The Senator from Massachusetts, in the beginning of his address, says:

The chief and most important point in the treaty is the termination of the Anglo-Japanese alliance. That was the main object of the treaty.

The first completed work of the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments was this treaty. The subject of the treaty was not in the agenda, and its execution was not hinted at as a necessary part of limitation of armaments. In all of the discussions, and there were many, before the meeting of the conference and before the announcement that this treaty had been entered into, there was no suggestion that the treaty was either a part of the work to be done, or essential to an agreement in relation to disarmament. It may be that it was a condition precedent to the acceptance of the Hughes plan. It is possible that our representatives were compelled to accede to this contract in order to obtain what was put forth as the American plan for disarmament the day the conference so auspiciously met. It may be, as Mr. John Dewey says in an article published a month or more ago in the Baltimore Sun, that we had something to sell, our five, five, and three naval ratio, and that we were compelled by those to whom we were to sell it, to accept the price they fixed. All these things may be so, but those who are able to tell us whether they are so or not are strangely silent. Judging from the events and the happy initial meeting of the conference, the Anglo-Japanese alliance need not have been mentioned nor touched upon in order to have obtained what we desired—what we desired both from the humanitarian and the economic standpoint—a just limitation of armaments. If the four-power treaty were deemed of such transcendent importance by Great Britain and Japan that they declined to consider any measure of disarmament until we should enter into it, no asseverations upon the floor or elsewhere can minimize its importance. It is incredible that this treaty superseded a hard and fast, tried, and demonstrated offensive and defensive alliance, that it was insisted upon as the necessary first step in a world conference called ostensibly for disarmament, and yet is of such small consequence and means so little as its advocates now insist.

For 20 years there had existed between Great Britain and Japan an alliance, the latest expression of which was consummated at London July 13, 1911, wherein it was provided that in case of unprovoked or aggressive action against either party the other party would come to its assistance. The alliance undoubtedly was first directed against Russia and subsequently against Germany. The World War left neither power a menace to either party to the contract. Throughout the British Empire there was a demand for the abrogation of the treaty. Its term was 10 years, and its expiration therefore, unless automatically extended, fell in the month of July, 1921. Just prior to the expiration by limitation, the British imperial conference was held in London in June, and there the Anglo-Japanese alliance was most earnestly considered. The suggestion came out of the conference, and subsequently from the prime minister, that the existing alliance should be enlarged to include the United States. Those of our people who were following the proceedings abroad, and particularly what was being done with the British-Japanese alliance, were startled at the suggestion of participation. A local periodical published press comment from all over the Union, the consensus of which was quite in opposition to our entry into the British-Japanese arrangements. Thereafter, we find the Prime Minister, Lloyd George, reporting to Parliament, in answer to questions asked concerning the Anglo-Japanese treaty. On July 7, 1921, he said:

I hope soon to be in a position to make a statement on these important subjects. I am fairly hopeful of being in a position to make a statement on Monday. It depends upon whether replies are received from the United States, Japan, and China; but premature declarations would interfere with the success of the negotiations now proceeding.

On July 11 the Prime Minister said to Parliament (and at this time he referred as well, in most complimentary fashion, to President Harding's call of the conference):

When I told the house last Thursday that I hoped to be in a position to make a statement on Pacific and far eastern questions to-day I was waiting, as I explained at the time, replies to conversations which had taken place between the secretary of state for foreign affairs and the representatives of the Governments of the United States, Japan, and China, as the result of our discussions in the imperial cabinet. I am very glad to be able to inform the house to-day that the views of the Government of the United States reached me last night and are extremely satisfactory.

It is obvious from these statements that Great Britain and the United States were negotiating concerning the Anglo-Japanese alliance, and the inference is irresistible that the United States was consenting to some treaty with Japan and Great Britain. It will be observed that the prime minister on July 4 speaks of the negotiations with the United States, Japan, and China, and on July 11 he advises Parliament that to the proposition, whatever it might have been, presented by Great Britain the reply of the United States was "extremely satisfactory."

I listened with attention to the Senator from Alabama. I heard his interesting references to the Anglo-Japanese alliance, observed the extraordinary importance he attached to the new treaty, an importance out of all proportion to an instrument so lacking in strength and efficacy as he described it. The conclusion I reached from his remarks was that the Washington conference after all was not primarily for disarmament but to consummate a new agreement to supersede the British-Japanese alliance. A people were wrought to the highest state of exaltation, of emotional idealism, by panegyrics on peace and apostrophes to disarmament; and yet, as I gather from what has been said here, the great object to be attained, although no mention of it was made, was the substitution of something, of which we were to be a part, for the Anglo-Japanese alliance. Apparently this, too, was the view of Mr. Lloyd-George.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In the letter from the Secretary of State, read by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] on Saturday, there appears the statement that the views of this Government as to the importance of the termination of the Anglo-Japanese alliance had been communicated long before the conference met. Is the Senator able to tell us whether the views thus expressed have ever been made public?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know of it, if they have been. I have no knowledge of it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Can the Senator advise us as to whether the Foreign Relations Committee have ever been made acquainted with the communications?

Mr. JOHNSON. No; so far as I am aware, the Foreign Relations Committee have not been made aware of anything of the character mentioned by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I had no recollection, when the letter was read, of ever having learned that the State Department had ever expressed any view on the subject either one way or the other.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know as to that. My information I have derived from a search of the parliamentary debates of Great Britain.

In order that there may be no misunderstanding as to how the British-Japanese alliance was viewed by the parties to it, and its importance alike to both countries, I quote the prime minister's statement on the imperial conference to the House of Commons August 18, 1921.

Then, in a very notable speech, the prime minister said:

The two questions, I think, which occupied most of our time—

Let me digress a moment there to recall to the Members of the Senate that just prior to this speech, for the first time in the history of the British Empire, the premiers of the Dominions met to consider not only internal matters but really foreign policies, and that in the meeting of the premiers of the Dominions and of Great Britain, held prior to this time, the Anglo-Japanese alliance was a subject of the most earnest consideration.

Said the Prime Minister of Great Britain to Parliament in August, 1921:

The two questions, I think, which occupied most of our time apart from foreign policy were the questions of the Anglo-Japanese alliance and the Pacific. Egypt was also discussed, and we also discussed the naval defense of the Empire. They were all agreed, when we came to the question of naval defense, that at any rate the Empire must have a naval force which is equal to that of any other country in the world. Upon that they were all agreed, but when it came to a question of contribution there was a general feeling—I think I can go to that extent—that it was unfair to leave the whole burden of the naval defense of the Empire with the mother country. The extent to which the Dominions should contribute—the best method of contribution—that must be left to each Dominion and to India to consider themselves. We can not dictate, we can not direct, and I am not sure that it will be very helpful if we even make suggestions, because they are each naturally very, I will not say resentful, because that would not be a fair word, but they are each very anxious to guard their own independence in these respects. There are some who would like to contribute in one form and some in another—some by means of naval stations, some by means of oiling stations, some by means of having a fleet of their own. Each of these questions must be considered by the Dominions with their own Parliaments, and it is not a matter where we could presume in the least to dictate or prescribe, and where it would not be wise even to suggest. The proposals must come from themselves, and they are consulting their own Parliaments upon that particular question.

On the question of the Pacific there was a good deal of discussion of the Japanese alliance. Upon that our feeling is this: The alliance is an existing alliance, and until 12 months' notice is given that alliance continues, and when you come to the question of whether you will give notice, you must consider how that alliance has operated. There was a real test in the late war of that alliance, and no man who watched what happened can come to any other conclusion than that it was loyally and faithfully interpreted and carried out by our Japanese allies. Just see what happened. There you had the Pacific raided by fast German cruisers and our ships sunk. We had to depend upon the help of New Zealand and Australia.

Between them they sent between 500,000 and 600,000 first-class troops to our assistance. India sent more than 1,000,000 across seas which it would have been difficult for us to guard. We had to guard the Atlantic. We had to guard the Mediterranean very largely. We had to guard the North Sea—a gigantic operation even for our immense fleet. It was strained to the very last ship, new and old, in guarding our own shores against submarines, and against possible attack from every German craft, and there was that immense ocean, the Pacific, the Southern Atlantic, and the Indian Ocean—the greatest seas of the world.

How were we to guarantee that 500,000 troops could cross thousands of miles of seas and 1,000,000 troops from India could cross the Indian Ocean and that no raider would sink them? How could we have done it? We could not have done it but for the fact that our Japanese allies came to our aid. The Australian prime minister said so and the New Zealand prime minister said so. They said, "We could never have sent our troops into that vast ocean at that time unless we had had that guaranty."

We could not have given the guaranty, certainly at the beginning of the war, had it not been for the Japanese fleet giving their assistance in chasing the raiders. It was invaluable. It was one of the determining factors of the war. They loyally, faithfully, in the letter and in the spirit, carried out their obligation. Is it to be suggested that we should now turn around and say to them, "You stood by us in trouble, but we do not need you any longer, so good-by"? Would anyone behave like that in business? The British Empire must behave like a gentleman, and when you come to deal with a country that has stood by you in trouble, stood well by you, are you to bring the alliance to an end when trouble is over? I say that that would not be becoming to the British Empire in dealing with a faithful ally. And let me say this: I do not believe there is any country in the world, whether it likes the Japanese alliance or does not like it, that would think any better of the British Empire if we broke off the alliance; not one. They might appear to be glad for the moment that we had done it, but in their hearts they would despise us for doing it. That does not mean that we are to continue an alliance of this kind against anyone else, and certainly not against the United States of America. It is a cardinal principle of British policy, and must be, that we should act in as complete accord with the United States of America as any two countries can. I do not know of any country in the world with whom it is more important that we should act in concert than with the United States of America. So much so that it is very difficult to get an Englishman to regard an American as a foreigner. There is a different feeling; there is a sense of fraternity.

It is cardinal that we should act in concert with the United States of America; but I do not see why it is impossible to remember your obligation to Japan, preserve your friendship for that great country, and at the same time preserve a spirit of fraternity with the United States of America. This is one of the questions upon which I had hopes it would have been possible, and still hope it will be possible, to have a discussion. If an alliance with Japan could merge in a greater understanding with Japan and the United States of America in all the problems of the Pacific, that would be a great event and it would be a guaranty for the peace of the world, because the problems of humanity may be to-day in the Atlantic Ocean, yesterday in the German Ocean, and they may pass to-morrow into the Pacific; and when they do the powers that are most greatly concerned in Pacific matters are the United States of America, Japan, and the British Empire.

Those four great countries are primarily concerned in having a complete understanding with regard to the Pacific, but the surest way to make a success of any disarmament conference is, first of all, to come to an understanding upon the Pacific. I do not myself believe that you will attain the same measure of success in a disarmament conference until you have attained that complete understanding. I believe disarmament would be much easier if you could get that clear understanding first, and I am still hopeful that that view will be taken. The British Empire as a whole were all agreed in the desire to have complete friendship with the United States of America and to make arrangements which would remove every conceivable prospective obstacle to such friendship. Nothing would please the British dominions, as well as the mother country, more than a settlement which would make them feel that the British Empire and the United States of America could work side by side in a common partnership for the restoration of the peace of the world, for guaranteeing the peace of the world. I do not know of any guaranty that would be equal to that of the United States of America and the British Empire in agreeing upon the great principles upon which world policy ought to be based. That is an absolute guaranty of the peace of the world, and I am still hopeful that such an understanding as would establish a scheme of that kind will ensue as a result of the coming conference in Washington. Those are some of the great problems which we have discussed.

Lloyd-George's plan, therefore, was, first, to settle the problems of the Pacific, by which it is plain he meant merging the Anglo-Japanese alliance into an Anglo-Japanese-American alliance. He did not see how it was possible to succeed in a disarmament conference until this had been done, and as you look back upon the conference this is exactly what was done.

THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE TREATY.

The advocates of the treaty in construing it do not begin with the beginning and end before the ending. Under the Yap treaty, which has just been ratified by the Senate, by article 1 the United States for the first time recognizes and acquiesces in the shameful secret treaties, the stealthy bargains carefully concealed from us, and by which German possessions in the Pacific were divided between Great Britain and Japan. By this Yap treaty, in the first article, we assent to the mandate of Japan in the Caroline, Marshall, and Ladrone Islands under which Japan administers these islands as an integral part of the Japanese Empire. In the minutes given to us as evidencing the new open diplomacy we are told, at page 567, by Mr. Root, that there was an old English nursery rhyme which ran, "Leg over leg the dog went to Dover." When all of us have passed from the scene, when the armaments conference shall have become a mere historical memory, there will yet remain a musty tome preserving for posterity "Leg over leg the dog went to Dover." We might, as we read the Yap and this treaty, paraphrase Mr. Root's carefully preserved illustration, "Leg over leg the dog went to Tokyo." First, by the Yap treaty we recognize what before we have repudiated—the secret bargains concerning the German islands in the Pacific. Now, by this treaty, we undertake to maintain Japan's rights in those islands.

The purpose of the new quadruple alliance is distinctly stated in its preamble. This purpose is twofold. First, the general purpose, always written into the most iniquitous of treaties, the preservation of the general peace; and then the specific and definite purpose of the maintenance of the rights of the parties in relation to their insular possessions. The argument upon the treaty commences, therefore, with its avowed purpose and intent to maintain the rights of the parties in their insular possessions. With this intent in view of maintaining their rights the parties agree to certain things. Do you observe how in the discussion of this treaty what scant attention is given by its advocates to its specific design? Have you noticed how lightly they have passed over it and how their newspaper protagonists seldom suggest it? Indeed, nearly all those who dissect this treaty begin with the two articles, omitting the avowed purpose described in the preamble.

Article 1, after agreeing that the parties will respect the rights of one another, provides for controversies arising among themselves. If such controversies arise which can not be satisfactorily settled by diplomacy, a joint conference is to be held, to which the whole subject will be referred for consideration and adjustment.

Article 2 undertakes to meet the aggressive action of other powers. In case of such aggressive action—

> The high contracting parties shall communicate with one another fully and frankly in order to arrive at an understanding as to the most efficient measures to be taken, jointly or separately, to meet the exigencies of the particular situation.

We are told that this means no more than mere consultation among the parties. The answer is obvious. If the purpose were to provide merely for consultation, the masters of English who wrote this treaty would have said so. If just ordinary men were writing an agreement to consult, they would have no doubt of the phraseology to be employed and there could be no misinterpretation or misconstruction of their language. If they were agreeing to consult about differences, in plain language they would say so. If they employed language capable of other interpretations, which might be otherwise construed, the conclusion would not be inapt that their purpose was not alone that of consultation but that it embraced whatever else the language might import. Remember that those who wrote this treaty were experts in treaty writing, learned in the use of the English language, with keen vision of future possibilities of construction and interpretation. If such men had but a single thought, to write a contract for mere consultation, there can be no possible justification for the language used in article 2. And, I might add, there could be no possible justification for not affording the American people the opportunity of discussion of the words and phrases so meticulously employed. The same gentlemen who indulged in the mystic phrases of article 2 wrote other treaties at the same time. One of these was a treaty in regard to China, a purpose of which was "to respect the sovereignty and independence and the territorial and administrative integrity of China."

This Chinese treaty designed to respect the territorial integrity of China provides for consultation; and here is the language used by the gentleman who wrote article 2, asserted here to mean only consultation, used by them when they had in mind only consultation:

> ART. 7. The contracting powers agree that whenever a situation arises which, in the opinion of any one of them, involves the application of stipulations of the present treaty and renders desirable discussion of such application there shall be full and frank communication between the contracting powers concerned.

There can be no misunderstanding this. Why, if the new quadruple alliance provided merely for communication and consultation, was not article 2 written in like vein?

Now, let us follow the provisions of article 2. If there is an aggressive action by another power, the parties shall communicate with one another fully and frankly, just as in article 7 of the Chinese treaty, which provides for consultation alone. In the new alliance, however, after the communication among the parties, there is yet something to be done. The communication is for a definite purpose, and that purpose is "to arrive at an understanding."

Now, assume an aggression from an outside power. Communications pass among the parties. The communications are not mere felicitations, but for the purpose of arriving at an understanding. What understanding? Why, "The most efficient measures to be taken, jointly or separately, to meet the exigencies of the particular situation." Now, around the council table sit Great Britain, Japan, France, and the United States. There is an aggressive action against the insular possessions of one of the parties. There is open, full, and frank communication. The parties reach an understanding, and if the aggression be an armed aggression, of course, there can be but one conclusion, to meet it and defeat it. The parties thus sitting about the council table agree that the aggression must be met with armed force. Our friends on the other side say, after thus agreeing, any one of the parties may "quit" or "scuttle and run"—oh, don't you remember the terms of the recent debate upon a cognate question? They pretend that there is no legal or moral obligation for subsequent action. There may be no legal obligation. The obligation may be vague, indefinite, inchoate, but when nations agree to respect one another's rights, when they solemnly contract to maintain those rights, when they go further and covenant that if those rights are attacked they will determine the most efficient measures to meet the attack, surely there is some obligation, call it what you will, upon the parties to the contract to execute the means agreed upon.

Take a homely illustration: Four neighbors with adjoining property rights in a particular area, fearing attack, agree among themselves most solemnly to maintain one another's rights, and in case those rights are questioned, to determine among themselves the most efficient measures to be taken by one of them, or by all of them, to meet the exigencies of the situation. The attack comes, and the four neighbors obligated as they are to maintain the rights of one another, determine they can only meet the attack by joint action in repelling it. Then one of the neighbors locks himself in his cellar, or skulks in the dark to the minions of the law and shelters himself behind their technical protection. The whole world would scorn the man who agreed to maintain another's rights, who agreed to decide how to meet the attack upon them, and who, when the attack came, and an agreement had been had to repel the attack, sheltered himself behind a technical defense of the law. I am not losing sight of the fact that it is Congress alone can declare war. We did not forget it in the discussions of the past few years concerning the League of Nations. Of course, Congress alone can declare war. But a situation may be created by the contracts of the nation, when national honor requires action on our part, and if such time ever comes, the propaganda with which you have been familiar in the past, the arguments which ought yet to ring in your ears, will swell into an international chorus again, demanding we play our part and keep our faith.

The construction which I place upon this article, singularly enough, is that which was placed upon it by the most prominent newspaper supporters of the treaty. I quote from the New York Times and the New York World, not necessarily as importing verity to their statements, but as lawyers might say, as declarations against interest. They were foremost in advocating the League of Nations. They lead the hue and cry in a demand for the ratification of this pact. On December 12, 1921, the New York Times said concerning article 2—and I will ask you to follow this language, my friends, if you please—

> This is a clumsy paraphrase of the second sentence of article 10 of the covenant. * * *
> Mr. LODGE and other enemies of the league covenant have undertaken a deal of explaining to make it appear that under article 2 the use of power is not provided for. Their protestations are futile. The use of power is implied quite as clearly in the new treaty as in the old.

The New York World designated this treaty as an Asiatic article 10, and in the course of an editorial December 12, 1921, said:

> We can not expect Democrats wholly to forbear reminding their party adversaries that the Hughes four-power project is in effect an Asiatic article 10, carefully phrased to meet senatorial scrutiny, yet imposing a moral obligation which a nation jealous of its honor must ever hold sacred.

By a singular coincidence, on March 11, 1922, the Japanese prince repudiated his former construction of the proposed alliance, and the New York Times, without mention of its former utterances, indulged in a like repudiation.

There is no misunderstanding the statements I quote from these newspapers, which, day in and day out, are bludgeoning the Senate and demanding ratification of this treaty. They demand it because its only efficacy is its moral obligation for us to do whatever may be necessary if aggression ever occurs, because we are in honor bound to do what the exigencies of the occasion may require. The very reason which enlists their advocacy is the reason which dictates my opposition. The premier of Japan was under no illusion about this treaty. It is true that immediately following the speech of the Senator from Arkansas another interpretation has come to us from Japan, but shortly after the promulgation of the treaty the premier of Japan, according to press dispatches, described it thus:

The quadruple entente, which for Japan replaces the Anglo-Japanese alliance, is much wider in bearing and removes all chances of war. The Washington conference has opened a new epoch in the Pacific and the world. I believe the entente will result in making the Japanese people happier, because it will lighten their burdens, and that by reason of the guaranty we obtain the position of Japan is strengthened in the Far East.

There is no doubt in Great Britain, there is no doubt in Japan, of the meaning of this treaty. Its meaning is only doubted here.

When we agree to maintain the rights of Japan we must keep faith. The proponents of the treaty would have us believe that in one provision we agree to maintain Japan's rights and in the next we agree to do as we please or do not agree at all. They insist that we would determine under our contract how to meet an aggression concerning those rights and then not meet it. This kind of bad faith would not be tolerated in individuals. We can not tolerate it nationally. No matter what imperialistic course any other nation has pursued, despite exploitation and brigandage by other countries, notwithstanding their breaches of faith or duplicity, our proud boast has ever been that in letter and in spirit we have maintained our faith and have ever redeemed our pledges. Whatever the pressure, we can not and we must not pledge our faith with a mental reservation. I quote the eloquent language of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts when he so effectually warned against assuming under the League of Nations a moral obligation such as here he insists we accept:

There is to me no distinction whatever in a treaty between what some persons are pleased to call legal and moral obligations. A treaty rests and must rest, except where it is imposed under duress and securities and hostages are taken for its fulfillment, upon moral obligations.

Let that, if you please, sink into your minds, my Republican friends. The treaty rests not upon its language, says our distinguished leader; the treaty rests not upon the binding clauses of the contract printed in cold type; but the treaty rests—and he is everlastingly right—upon the moral obligations that are contained within it.

He said:

No doubt a great power impossible of coercion can cast aside a moral obligation if it sees fit and escape from the performance of the duty which it promises. The pathway of dishonor is always open. I, for one, however, can not conceive of voting for a clause of which I disapprove, because I know it can be escaped in that way. Whatever the United States agrees to, by that agreement she must abide. Nothing could so surely destroy all prospects of the world's peace as to have any powerful nation refuse to carry out an obligation, direct or indirect, because it rests only on moral grounds. Whatever we promise we must carry out to the full, "without mental reservation or purpose of evasion." To me any other attitude is inconceivable. Without the most absolute and minute good faith in carrying out a treaty to which we have agreed, without ever resorting to doubtful interpretations or to the plea that it is only a moral obligation, treaties are worthless. The greatest foundation of peace is the scrupulous observance of every promise, express or implied, of every pledge, whether it can be described as legal or moral. No vote should be given to any clause in any treaty or to any treaty except in this spirit and with this understanding.

THE AUTHORSHIP OF TREATY.

There has been some discussion as to what individuals or nation fame should ascribe this document. Until Saturday its authorship was shrouded in mystery. Perhaps its authorship was of little consequence, but it is by no means wholly immaterial. While I do not think the Secretary of State has said that he wrote this particular treaty, if that is the understanding of my colleagues, I accept it without question, but let me suggest to you that you look at your copy of the treaty. It bears 19 signatures, beginning with Messrs, Hughes, Lodge, Underwood, and Root. Immediately underneath these 19 signatures appears:

In signing the treaty this day between the United States of America, the British Empire, France, and Japan it is declared to be the understanding and intent of the signatory powers:

1. That the treaty shall apply to the mandated islands in the Pacific Ocean: Provided, however, That the making of the treaty shall not be deemed to be an assent on the part of the United States of America to the mandates, and shall not preclude agreements between the United States of America and the mandatory powers, respectively, in relation to the mandated islands.

2. That the controversies to which the second paragraph of article 1 refers shall not be taken to embrace questions which, according to principles of international law, lie exclusively within the domestic jurisdiction of the respective powers.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 13, 1921.

The understanding and intent of the treaty itself are in the particulars mentioned thus explained and then the same 19 signatures are again subscribed. These two reservations were insisted upon by Mr. Hughes and made at his request.

From these reservations it appears that before the ink upon the treaty was dry, Mr. Hughes, its creator, deemed it essential to annex explanatory reservations to it. If Mr. Hughes, who wrote the treaty, deemed its language so ambiguous or doubtful as immediately to require written explanation by him we, of less ability and less knowledge, may be pardoned if we proceed with studious caution and care and prudence.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is an unimportant point, but the declarations which the Senator has just been reading were signed first.

Mr. JOHNSON. The reservations were signed first?

Mr. LODGE. They were signed first.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is so much the worse, Mr. President. We signed first the correction of the treaty. Just think of it! The American delegation were so uncertain about this treaty, it was so ambiguous, and it was of such mystic character that they first executed the reservations to it. I proceed——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, it is even worse than that.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should not wonder.

Mr. LODGE. The reservations were stated by me when I presented the treaty before it had been signed at all or was even offered for signature.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator from Massachusetts deemed that necessary, did he not?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; I thought it proper to make that declaration.

Mr. JOHNSON. But the Senator would not have written those reservations, would he, unless he deemed them essential?

Mr. LODGE. I did not write the reservations, but I thought they were desirable.

Mr. JOHNSON. I mean the American delegation would not have written the reservations unless they deemed them essential?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; they thought it most desirable to leave no doubt upon that point.

Mr. JOHNSON. Who left the doubt originally in the treaty itself?

Mr. LODGE. Nobody else suggested the declarations; we suggested them.

Mr. JOHNSON. But I ask the Senator if he wanted to leave no doubt about the meaning of the treaty, who wrote the treaty with the doubt in it? That is the point.

Mr. LODGE. There was not any doubt in the treaty, in our judgment, but we thought there might be people who would find fault with it and express doubts; and they are now being expressed.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is an answer, my friends. Just catch that. In this important matter our leader on the Republican side, with the prestige of his position, now says that the reservations were made by the Secretary of State to this treaty because he or the other delegates feared there would be some statements made in this body concerning that treaty. That is what the intimation is.

Mr. LODGE. No. It was directed against anybody having any doubt or raising the point that domestic questions were involved.

Mr. JOHNSON. Did the Senator from Massachusetts have any doubt about it?

Mr. LODGE. No; I had none.

Mr. JOHNSON. Did Mr. Hughes have any doubt about it?

Mr. LODGE. I do not think so.

Mr. JOHNSON. Did any member of the American delegation have any doubt?

Mr. LODGE. About the interpretation of the treaty?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. Not the least in the world; they had no doubt; but it is necessary sometimes to guard against the doubts of other people.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Let me suggest that in a letter written by Mr. Hughes, which was read on Saturday last by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], it was stated that Mr. Hughes wrote this treaty, but it now appears that there came a time when the American delegates felt that somebody might raise a question in reference to it, and they would forestall it by reservation. That is the way I understand it. The question which is of interest now is, Why did not that idea come to Mr. Hughes when he was originally writing the treaty?

Mr. JOHNSON. That is exactly the point.

Mr. BORAH. And why did he not put it into that treaty as he wrote it? As the Senator from California has suggested, that explanation would furnish the most conclusive proof that somebody else wrote this treaty, but the American delegation at last had to scan it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, before the ink was dry upon the treaty it is obvious that somebody was questioning the language of the treaty. Let us not speak of Mr. Hughes, for whom we have the highest respect or of our distinguished leader upon this side, or of the distinguished leader upon the other side. Let us assume a contract among just ordinary people. If such a contract were written by a single individual who had in mind certain things, he would insert them in the particular instrument. There can not be any question about that. If Mr. Hughes, who wrote the treaty, deemed its language so ambiguous or doubtful as immediately to require written explanation by him, we of less ability and less knowledge may be pardoned if we proceed with studious caution and care and prudence.

Mr. LODGE rose.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does the Senator wish me to yield to him?

Mr. LODGE. I only wish to say that Mr. Hughes wrote that draft; he has stated so, and I do not think his word ought ever to be called in question.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was not calling his word in question.

Mr. LODGE. No; I did not say the Senator was. I was replying to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not particularly concerned about the veracity of Mr. Hughes or anyone else. That was not what I had in mind; but the Senator from Massachusetts has put Mr. Hughes in a defensive position by the explanation which he now gives us.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no.

Mr. BORAH. Pardon me; the Senator has. Mr. Hughes said he wrote this treaty. The presumption is that if he had had in mind at that time what he afterwards had in mind when he helped to write the reservation he would have included it at that time. If Mr. Hughes originally wrote it, I do not understand why it was necessary for him later to rewrite it and put in reservations.

Mr. LODGE. He did not rewrite it. At the time when the draft was presented to the different delegations he stated to our delegation that he thought it desirable in order to meet possible questions to make it clear by this declaration, which is exactly the same thing as putting it in the treaty.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; just the same thing. But when did it occur to Mr. Hughes that these criticisms were likely to arise?

Mr. LODGE. It occurred to him that it was desirable to put it in at the same time that he drafted the treaty.

Mr. BORAH. Then why did he not put it in?

Mr. LODGE. Because they came together on it.

Mr. BORAH. The treaty was secret; the reservations were secret; nobody had had an opportunity to criticize it. It could not have been possible that Mr. Hughes's suggestion was by reason of some criticism that had been made, because there was no opportunity to make a criticism.

Mr. LODGE. The delegations had all been over it very carefully, word by word, and at Mr. Hughes's own suggestion it was considered desirable to make this declaration at the same time, as part of the proceedings.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, upon the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts I am perfectly willing to say that Mr. Hughes wrote this treaty; but the explanation of how the reservations came to be put in is not yet clear.

Mr. LODGE. He states also in his letter, I think, that he wrote the declaration at the same time. As a matter of fact, he did write it at the same time.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, what I have said has been said upon the assumption that Secretary Hughes wrote the treaty. I stated in the beginning that I did not quite understand his position that way from the language of his letter, but that if my colleagues did I accepted that as final and as conclusive. I speak now upon the assumption that Mr. Hughes wrote this treaty. If he wrote this treaty, there must have come a time when in his mind there was an ambiguity, some cause of doubt, because there came a time when he wrote the clarifying reservations. You can not get away from that inevitable conclusion. He did not write these reservations with the idea merely of writing something. He wrote them to make plain the meaning of the treaty itself, and he did it so that there should be no doubt in that respect.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON. Wait just a moment; let me speak for just a moment. The Senator from Massachusetts says that these reservations were made in order to meet, perhaps, captious criticism concerning this document. Look at the first reservation:

> That the treaty shall apply to the mandated islands in the Pacific Ocean; provided, however, that the making of the treaty shall not be deemed to be an assent on the part of the United States of America to the mandates and shall not preclude agreements between the United States of America and the mandatory powers, respectively, in relation to the mandated islands.

Such a question never has arisen. It never has been suggested by anybody, and the explanation that is made by the Senator from Massachusetts can not be accurate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, here is what the Secretary of State said:

> I prepared a draft of the treaty based upon the various suggestions which had been exchanged between the delegates.

Then he speaks of showing it to the Senator from Alabama:

> I should add that, in order to avoid any misunderstanding I prepared a memorandum to accompany the treaty with respect to its effect in relation to the mandated islands and reserving domestic questions.

Mr. Hughes is a man of the highest honor and absolute truthfulness, and what he says there is the exact truth.

Mr. JOHNSON. Nobody questions that.

Mr. LODGE. I hope nobody does.

Mr. JOHNSON. Nobody does; but this treaty can not be ratified by panegyrics to anybody's high standing, repute, or honor. That is not what we are here for. I have conceded again and again that Mr. Hughes wrote the treaty if the Senator insists that he did. I accept it as final. The argument that I was making here in writing was based upon that assumption, and that alone; and there is not any necessity for injecting into this particular phase of the controversy Mr. Hughes, Mr. Hughes's reputation, Mr. Hughes's veracity, or Mr. Hughes's high state of honor. All concede them. Nobody questions them at all.

Mr. LODGE. I am very glad to know it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, permit me to say before the matter passes that the Senator from Massachusetts, at the time when the Senator from California and others were making a serious argument as to the meaning of this proposition, saw fit to inject here the statement that Mr. Hughes made these subsequent reservations to prevent captious criticisms. It was that that I resented, and I now resent it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wish the Senator would not put in my mouth language that I did not use. I said that undoubtedly Mr. Hughes felt that it was necessary to have this memorandum or declaration in order to meet possible doubts that would be raised.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator will look at the RECORD, he will see that he used the expression I have stated.

Mr. LODGE. I did not use the expression "captious criticism."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from California permit me an inquiry for the purpose of information?

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I am not sure that I followed the Senator accurately. It occurs to me, to make my position clear, that the treaty is not free from ambiguity as to the mandated islands——

Mr. JOHNSON. I admit that.

Mr. KING. And that the first reservation was certainly a wise and prudent one if it was desired to secure the ratification of the treaty. As to the second reservation, it seems to me very clear that that was wholly unnecessary. Is the Senator contending that the fact that reservations were submitted is an argument against the treaty?

Mr. JOHNSON. Oh, no.

Mr. KING. I did not get the connection in which the Senator mentioned that fact, then.

Mr. JOHNSON. The extent of what I was saying was that when Mr. Hughes, who was the creator of the treaty, found it necessary immediately to annex to it clarifying reservations, the rest of us may be pardoned for proceeding cautiously and warily and with studious care. That was the point of my remarks when I was interrupted by the Senator from Massachusetts. That was the tenor of my remarks.

Mr. KING. I concur in the observation of the Senator; and yet the Senator knows, as a lawyer, that even the most carefully prepared document may sometimes provoke difference of opinion, and if a different angle is suggested even the writer may feel like adding a qualifying word, though he may be entirely satisfied as to the meaning which he sought to convey and the phraseology employed by him.

Mr. JOHNSON. I recognize all of those possibilities.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield; yes.

Mr. ASHURST. So much has been said by way of tribute to the masters of English who drew this treaty that we assume that the men who drew it knew how to use the English language, yet it is an unhappy circumstance that such men skilled in the use of the English language as Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE and Hon. Arthur James Balfour have set before us a treaty containing an egregious blunder in grammar. The error is a sample of the slipshod, careless method in which they drew this treaty. Let Senators examine the title, viz:

A treaty between the United States of America, the British Empire, France, and Japan.

We would mark down a schoolboy at once if he used the word "between" instead of the word "among" in such a case; and when we pass over to the first section we find the same error appearing. We can not say that these men did not know how to use English, because if Arthur James Balfour and HENRY CABOT LODGE can not properly use the English language, nobody can; and yet there appears this persistent error in the use of the word "between" instead of "among." I respectfully submit that in a treaty or in a law, at least, correct English ought to be employed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Arizona what effect that mistake would have on the international relations of these countries?

Mr. ASHURST. I would excuse the Senator from Washington for splitting an infinitive, or for employing the subjunctive mood when he ought to employ the imperative mood; but I would not excuse him for writing into a treaty or a law a blunder that he would reprove a 12-year-old boy for making.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is a matter of no earthly consequence; but I think the use of "between" as applying to more than two persons is perfectly legitimate and good English.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if I correctly understood the remark of my learned friend from Massachusetts, he asserts that the word "between" may properly be used here. I prefer to let the debate go on between the Senator from California and the Senator from Massachusetts instead of among them.

WHO KNOWS ITS MEANING?

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, who is certain what this treaty means? Certainly not our representatives, for so doubtful of its meaning were they that at once they endeavored to construe its intent. Not our distinguished colleagues, for you have heard their explanations, and I will draw the veil upon them. Not our President, for his view was at variance with the views of all the signatories, and so radically different from theirs that a new explanation of the treaty had to be executed. Not the Foreign Relations Committee, for after agreeing on one clarifying reservation it adopted another. Who knows what the treaty means? Perhaps Mr. Balfour, who, with the treaty in his pocket, as the press tells us, was royally welcomed in England by the premier in these words: "We are here to express our warm admiration for the way he behaved away from home, and we are here to express our deep gratitude for the fine present he brought us from America." Perhaps the Japanese premier, who, speaking of the new alliance, characterized it as a quadruple entente which for Japan replaces the Anglo-Japanese alliance, and which he believed would result in making the Japanese people happier, because it would lighten their burdens, and because of the guaranty Japan obtained her position would be strengthened in the Far East.

Oh, yes; Great Britain and Japan seem to know what the treaty means. Theirs is the knowledge; ours the lack of it. Theirs the rejoicing, for did not Mr. Balfour bring home a fine present and the Japanese premier declare it made the Japanese people happier and strengthened their position in the Far East?

THE PRETENDED MENACE OF THE ANGLO-JAPANESE ALLIANCE.

With one accord the advocates of the treaty acclaim its great accomplishment is in superseding or terminating the Anglo-Japanese alliance. The Senator from Massachusetts, as I have quoted, says this was the object of the quadruple alliance. The Senator from Alabama emphasizes the achievement. The Senators from Indiana and Minnesota in different phraseology express the same view. All sing the praises of our delegation in disposing of what they variously describe as a menace, a threat, an object of suspicion or distrust, an armed partnership which might be utilized against our country. Whence comes this strange view now? For years past we have been assured by all the responsible statesmen of England and Japan that their alliance was not directed at us and never could be. With the utmost care and precision they have told us that the idea of invoking their alliance against America was unthinkable. Viscount Grey was positive in his declaration. Mr. Austen Chamberlain said: "We shall be no party to any alliance directed against America or under which we can be called upon to act against America." Mr. Lloyd-George and all the dominion premiers have emphatically said the same. Lord Northcliffe has been at the greatest pains to make this plain. Baron Hayashi has assured us "with all the emphasis at his command that the alliance will never stand in the way of the good understanding and friendly relations between Great Britain and the United States of America."

Baron Shidehara has forcefully repeated this. Indeed, there has been no dissent either in Britain or Japan from the oft-reiterated official assurances that the Anglo-Japanese alliance never would and never could touch or affect us. During the League of Nations debate again and again in our country was the same assurance given our people by our statesmen. In June last, while the renewal of the alliance was under discussion, Commander Bellairs, in the British Parliament—June 27, 1921—asked the prime minister—whether it has ever been officially intimated to the United States by means of a diplomatic note that in no circumstances can Japan receive support from this country under the terms of the alliance in the event of a war between Japan and the United States of America?

Mr. Chamberlain replied:

The United States Government are so fully acquainted with the real position that it has not been thought necessary to inform them of it in an official note.

Whence comes this fear now of the Anglo-Japanese alliance? If we credit the assurances solemnly given us by both Governments, and as solemnly given to our own people by our own Government, then there is neither threat nor danger nor menace to us in any alliance between Britain and Japan; and it passes human credulity that under existing circumstances a new alliance between these countries directed at us will be consummated.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EDGE in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. REED. Perhaps the Senator has mentioned it, but something like a year or a year and a half ago I put into the RECORD the Japanese-British alliance, and ventured to say that it might be used against us. My statement was instantly denied by several British newspapers, the papers quoting as their authority several British statesmen. My recollection is that the statement was repudiated on this floor and was treated at that time as almost absurd.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was not aware of the fact, and had not observed it.

If we believe Japan and Britain, any alliance between them can not be inimical to us. If the truth has been told us, there was nothing detrimental to us in a renewal as they saw fit of their partnership. The menace and danger can only exist if the truth has not been told to us. Either we believe or do not believe what Japan and Great Britain have so often said. If we believe them, then the renewal of the Anglo-Japanese alliance was of no consequence to us, and it could not be directed against us. If we believed them, all the talk upon this floor, all the stuff in the protreaty press, about the importance to us of their alliance, is to no purpose and of no consequence. If they were telling us the truth, then the menace and threat and danger of the renewal of their alliance exist only in overheated imaginations or are magnified for ulterior purposes in respect to the pending treaty. Either we believe their protestations or we do not. In either event, from our standpoint, this new alliance is unjustified and worthless. Believing them, their alliance could take its course without apprehension on our part.

If we do not believe them, if we think they have deliberately deceived us and that their alliance is, after all, directed against us, then we have, with our eyes open, entered into partnership with nations we distrust and whose solemn protestations we deem false. If we can not trust and believe what they have written and said to us during the last decade, we can put no greater credence in their statements or more implicit trust in their avowals when written into a new agreement. We are in the position either of trusting them and disregarding their alliance or not trusting them and joining forces with them. I am, I confess, suspicious of diplomats; but I do not for one instant believe that it was within the realm of possibility for the renewal of the Anglo-Japanese alliance to be directed against the United States. Have we entered into partnership with them because we did not believe their protestations and feared they might at some future time join forces against us? If so, and this is a pact of peace, it is a peace of fear. Either we were not concerned with the termination of the Anglo-Japanese alliance or we have entered into an engagement with nations that, while smilingly and solemnly protesting their friendship, were ready to unite against us.

The fact is Britain had an irksome alliance. Her people would not permit its renewal. Japan would not consent to its abrogation. They came to Washington. Britain was determined ot get rid of an obnoxious alliance and succeeded. Japan was determined to get something as good, and got something better.

THE LEAGUE OBLIGATION AND THE OBLIGATION UNDER THIS TREATY.

The discussion upon this treaty illustrates the infinite variety of the human mind. The curtain has only just been rung down upon the League of Nations. The storm center there was an obligation not unlike that here implied. Strangely enough, those who vehemently protested against the Nation assuming an obligation then would now commit the Nation to it. I do not question, of course, the good faith of these gentlemen. I do not criticize at all the views that have been expressed here on the floor, but there are others with whom the question becomes one, not of interpretation but of intellectual honesty. The newspapers I have quoted were entirely right in designating the new quadruple alliance as an Asiatic article 10, as a clumsy paraphrase of that much-debated and overwhelmingly repudiated obligation. I print in parallel columns the new pact and the particular provision of the League of Nations.*

I ask Senators to look at this diagram on the wall, because it gives visually just exactly what these two differing provisions are. It shows exclusively the implied obligation of the one as well as the other.

On the one hand, you observe we obligate ourselves to the maintenance of rights and agree to arrive at an understanding of the most efficient measures to be taken to meet aggressive action against those rights. On the other hand, we undertake to preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of the members of the league, and in case of any such aggression the council of the league shall advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled. In the one instance four powers agree upon the efficient measures to meet aggression and in the other the council shall advise upon the means.

The obligation to follow the advice of the council—remember it was not specifically agreed to follow it—can be no more binding than the obligation to execute the efficient means which we ourselves agree to determine. To undertake to preserve is no stronger than to undertake to maintain. Territorial integrity and political independence embrace no more than rights. It may be said that the four-power alliance relates only to certain specific islands, while the league related to whole nations. This is true, but it is equally true that an aggressive action against the islands of Japan will of necessity be an aggressive action against Japan herself. The very geographical situation makes this so. Aggressive action against a part of one's possessions is an aggressive action against all of one's possessions. Success of the aggression will conquer the particular objective point and menace the very nation itself. If article 10 of the league contained a moral obligation repulsive to every American tradition, if under this moral obligation freedom of action of our country was fettered, if article 10 touched us so deeply that in honor bound we would have been required to act upon the advice of the council, then article 2 of the new alliance does all these things; and, God help us, we have exchanged a world league of nations for a little league of nations, with the dominant factor another race with another civilization.

How strange it is now to hear some of the proponents of this treaty contemptuously say its article 2 can not harm us, because we can act only under constitutional sanctions and that Congress alone can declare war. How we were thrilled by the same gentlemen when they were engaged in the delicate task of safeguarding American rights under the League of Nations. Then they demanded a reservation to article 10 by which the final determination of any action should be with Congress. To-day they talk of constitutional sanctions, under which no action could be taken until Congress decrees it. Then there would be no escape from action by Congress, although we were not pledged to action, save by breach of faith, "and legislation by Congress under those circumstances would be a mockery of independent action." To-day, with substantially the same obligation, the ground is shifted, and though we were guilty of a breach of faith constitutional sanctions would save our honor. Hear our distinguished leader when discussing a reservation definitely restraining action until Congress should consent:

Congress would have no choice if acting in good faith, and if under article 10 any member of the league summoned us, or if under article 11 the league itself summoned us, we should be bound in honor and morally to obey. There would be no escape except by a breach of faith, and legislation by Congress under these circumstances would be a mockery of independent action. Is it too much to ask that provision should be made that American troops and American ships should never be sent anywhere or ordered to take part in any conflict except after the deliberate action of the American people, expressed according to the Constitution through their chosen representatives in Congress?

Again, the Senator from Massachusetts emphatically declared:

We are told that, of course, nothing will be done in the way of warlike acts without the assent of Congress. If that is true, let us say so in the covenant.

What he says was then told us is now told us, and I reecho his words:

If that is true, let us say so in the treaty.

We are told this is a self-denying ordinance, which means peace in the Pacific. Americans love phrases. Self-denying ordinance sounds well, and peace, oh, in your sweet name what wrongs are done, what crimes committed! There is no semblance of self-denial in Britain and Japan by the pact. Receiving none ourselves, we generously join them in recognition and protection of the spoils of war. We settle the difficulties of the Pacific by leaving Japan a free hand there and with our giant resources and power paralyzing any effort of subjugated peoples to free themselves. If this pact really meant conference and consultation in the Pacific, China, Russia, the Far Eastern Republic would be parties. Actual war exists to-day in Siberia. A weak people are struggling for their freedom against the ruthless military machine of Japan. Brutality and bloodshed have marked Japan's aggressive action there. With what anguish must these people, struggling, fighting, dying for freedom, look across the ocean at the great democracy in alliance with their oppressor. And this is of the utmost importance to the treaty under discussion. Nothing is more certain than that some day Russia, reborn, will endeavor to drive the invader from her soil. When that day comes there will be an aggression against the insular possessions of Japan, and we, free America, will then sit down with the oppressor and determine the most efficient means to meet the aggression.

Nothing will happen in the next 10 years, cries the able Senator from Alabama. Perhaps not. But we can not gamble with our country's future because of the probability nothing will happen. Eight years ago we would have said nothing will happen, and in that time the whole world has changed. Overnight great changes may come again, but, in any event, we can not hazard our future upon the hope or belief that the world will remain the same. With this pact there is no greater guaranty of peace than without it; indeed, even less. What peace do its advocates claim it guarantees? Certainly they do not mean peace between Great Britain, Japan, and ourselves, for if this they mean they must believe that without the pact there was likelihood of war. Do you gentlemen who favor this treaty say that Great Britain under any circumstances would make war upon us? I do not believe it, and you can not justly say it. Do you intend the country to infer that Japan was ready to strike us, or only awaiting a favorable opportunity to catch us off guard and then attack us? I can not believe it. But if this were the attitude of Japan toward us—and you protreaty men are all hinting it—then for one I want no partnership or alliance with her. If any country is to be so little trusted that we believe she lies in wait for our ruin and destruction, then by an agreement of this sort you neither alter her intention nor postpone the day of reckoning. If you have so bad an opinion of any party to this alliance you can not take your country into it save from base fear. And yielding in fear by a nation will corrode its very character. If, therefore, you enter this alliance because you have no faith in any party to it in the hope to save yourself by a partnership with one ready to smite you, you do your country the most grievous wrong.

* The matter referred to is as follows:

THE QUADRUPLE ALLIANCE.

With a view to the preservation of the general peace and the maintenance of their rights in relation to their insular possessions, etc., have determined to conclude a treaty to this effect, etc.

I. The high contracting parties agree as between themselves to respect their rights in relation to their insular possessions, etc.

II. If the said rights are threatened by the aggressive action of any other power, the high contracting parties shall communicate with one another fully and frankly in order to arrive at an understanding as to the most efficient measures to be taken, jointly or separately, to meet the exigencies of the particular situation.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

The high contracting parties, in order to promote international cooperation and to achieve international peace and security, agree, etc.

ART. 10. The members of the league undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league. In case of any such aggression the council shall advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled.

It is this or war, cries one distinguished gentleman. Oh, no; it is not. It is this and war. When the league was before us every lachrymose enthusiast, every propagandist—many most excellent people, the great and the near great, from the President down—told us, even more solemnly than the Senator from Massachusetts now tells us, that it was the league or chaos, the covenant or war. And yet the Washington conference was possible only because we were not members of the league. If we had been one of nine at Geneva the Washington conference—ye who set such store by it take notice—could never have been called. Because we were free and unfettered, living our own life in our own way, and, thus living it, in the leadership of the world, we were able to summon the conference and accomplish some great results. Remember how mistaken the league advocates were. Remember, the moral leadership of which they prated so much, the hope of civilization upon which they so earnestly dwelt, were preserved to the world through us because we preserved ourselves. The same voices, in the same tones, with the same phrases, demand again we do what so fortunately then we would not do. The label is changed. That which was once Democratic policy has become Republican policy. What I believed menacing and dangerous to the Republic under Democratic rule I decline to accept under Republican rule. I did not oppose the League of Nations because of partisanship. I can not vote for an alliance, with its possibilities of danger, because of partisanship.

ALL TREATIES MADE IN THE NAME OF PEACE.

Bear in mind that every treaty, no matter what its wicked designs, is made in the name of peace. The first British-Japanese alliance, executed in 1902, began with—

> The Governments of Great Britain and Japan, actuated solely by a desire to maintain the status quo and general peace in the extreme East, being more especially interested in maintaining the independence and territorial integrity of the Empire of China and the Empire of Korea—

And so forth.

Note the high purposes—peace and maintaining the territorial integrity of China and Korea. How ironical it sounds in the light of subsequent events. In 1905, upon the renewal of the alliance, the first purpose stated was—> the consolidation and maintenance of the general peace in regions of eastern Asia and India—

But the paramount rights of Japan in Korea were recognized, and Great Britain consented to Japan taking special measures of guidance, control, and protection. In the renewal of 1911 the alliance piously begins again for the preservation of peace, but there is no mention of Korea. A New York paper's comment was this:

> In Mr. Lewis Carroll's interesting work, the walrus and the carpenter got no answer to the last question they addressed to the oysters, because they'd eaten every one. The "independence" of Korea was by that time a memory. In the agreement of 1902 the "independence" not only of Korea but of China was recognized, and it was declared that "the interests of Great Britain relate particularly to China." The omen, comically enough, points the wrong way, for it is generally supposed that Japan, rather than Great Britain, has dreams about China.

Mr. President, the story within these three treaties, constituting the Anglo-Japanese alliance, affords the light for our guidance. The pious treaties, not only to respect but to preserve China and Korea, were the shield for the rape of the one and the destruction of the other. Why blind ourselves to all that has happened? We want no peoples nor territory. We seek no exploitation of others. We never could attack unjustly another nation, and the world knows this. We enter now a partnership which in its 20 years of existence has aided cruelty, sheltered wantonness, justified destruction, and has been the incentive to bloodshed and the enslavement of peoples. Why should right-thinking, liberty-loving America join this partnership?

The Anglo-Japanese alliance has been made of supreme importance in this discussion both by the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Alabama. If they are wrong in their utterances about that alliance, the reason for this new one entirely fails. On another occasion I shall more in detail analyze the Anglo-Japanese alliance. Suffice it to say now that the Anglo-Japanese alliance, judged by its words, judged by its text, judged by the solemn protestations of the parties to it, is no danger whatsoever to this country, and its perpetuation or abrogation are matters of utter indifference to us.

If the Senators from Massachusetts and Alabama can read into the wording of the Anglo-Japanese alliance a problem for this country, although no such problem exists in that wording, then they must in fairness permit me to judge the four-power treaty not simply by what it says but also by what in logic it implies and by what in practice it will necessitate.

They can not tell us that the Anglo-Japanese alliance is dangerous to us in spite of its wording, and then in the same breath tell us that the four-power treaty is safe for us because of its wording.

If the Anglo-Japanese alliance is dangerous to us, it is not because of the text of the treaty, but because of the inevitable results of the existence of an international partnership in which some nations are members and other nations are not members.

Why is it dangerous to us? There can be only one answer. The text of it does not threaten us, and the powers signatory to it have over and over again assured us that it is not in any way directed against us. Yet the Senators who favor this treaty fear it. Why do they fear it? Simply and only because it constitutes an international cooperation of which we are not a member. Not being a member of it, not sharing its intimacies, they suspect those intimacies and fear that two nations united in them will be united against us. That, I conclude, from their standpoint alone, is the simple and sole reason why anybody in America can or should suspect or fear the Anglo-Japanese alliance.

For myself, I would not have America change her course in the world through fear of any alliance whatsoever. There once were days when in this country, and in this building, the argument of fear was not an argument affecting the policy of America. On a certain day among those days a citizen of Kentucky, Henry Clay, arose in this building to speak to the question of an alliance then existing between Great Britain and another foreign power. Against that other power the President of the United States had leveled an administrative measure which had aroused hostility, and which seemed possibly about to cause war. In that emergency Henry Clay spoke. His words were at that time approved by this country. He said:

> The gentleman reminds us that Great Britain, the ally of Spain, may be obliged by her connection with that country to take part against us and to consider this measure of the President's as justifying an appeal to arms. Sir, is the rod of the British power to be forever suspended over our heads? Whether we assert our rights by sea or attempt their maintenance by land, whithersoever we turn ourselves, this phantom incessantly pursues us. Mr. President, I most sincerely desire peace and amity with England. I even prefer an adjustment of differences with her before one with any other nation. But if she persists in any denial of justice to us, I trust and hope that all hearts will unite in a bold and vigorous vindication of our rights.

He hoped; and the battle of New Orleans soon proved that he did not hope in vain. Not then, and never afterwards till now, has an alliance between foreign powers swerved the United States from its principles, or even from its preferences. Not till now has the United States sought shelter from an alliance by creeping into the tent of the alliance. Not till now has it evaded what are asserted to be its foes by mingling itself among them. Not till now has it met a threat by going around behind it and enlisting among the nations making it.

Tales of dangers and threats and menaces to the people of the United States from foreign powers are whispered and hinted, in my judgment, to coerce our action. Till now we have believed what Abraham Lincoln believed and said, that not all the powers of all the world with all their troops could ever again take one drink from any tiniest American brook without our consent.

This Nation, Mr. President, is not, in its origin or in its developing life on this continent, a Nation of fear. We did not flinch from crossing the Appalachians and traversing the prairies for fear either of the savages inhabiting them or of the white men leagued with those savages, whether those white men were soldiers of France or soldiers of Britain. Alliances between the tribes of the frontier and the nations of Europe did not stay us.

The holy alliance of the great European continental powers a hundred years ago, aspiring to reintroduce the power of Spain into Latin America and threatening this hemisphere with war, did not drive us into seeking admission into an expanded holy alliance. It drove us only into defying the existing holy alliance to touch any spot in this hemisphere.

Next year will be the centenary of the Monroe doctrine. The Monroe doctrine was an American answer to an alliance. Perhaps there were Americans who when the great holy alliance threatened us feared attack, who saw three great nations in holy words in an unholy pact, and who then demanded for safety's sake and to avert a danger a four-power pact.

Mr. President, if any such Americans were then in this country, this country has not preserved their names. Oblivion, not glory, came to them.

In our early struggle into many a battle in our Revolutionary War our forefathers followed the motto written above the coiled rattlesnake—the home-made, colloquial, assertive, truculent, and victorious motto: "Don't tread on me."

We may have been truculent then. We would not be truculent now. But now as then we would not be deterred by danger or coerced by fear. France and Mexico in mutual understanding, when we were binding up the wounds of our fratricidal strife, at the end of our Civil War, did not dismay us. We only let it be known that we might feel obliged to fight another war.

Not till now has it ever been said what may constantly in this city be heard, that if we do not sign this treaty we may have to fight. Somebody may tread on us.

Mr. President, as long as we do not intend to tread on Great Britain or to tread on Japan, I refuse to believe that it is consistent with the spirit which made this country, and which made it worth making, that we should sign a treaty because otherwise Japan or Great Britain, or both of them together, might tread on us.

We have never sought security by such a method. By any such method we can never find security. I shall vote against any treaty embodying any such method. I shall vote against it because it saps the spirit which is the genuine security of this country. The genuine security of this country is in the mood of mind that took our soldiers in 1918 across the forest of the Argonne. Those boys went forward for a Nation which had never given them the example of going backward. They had in them no national memories of surrender. Their heroism was bred out of an heroic country. You can not make heroes; you can not produce the human defense, which is the essential defense of a country, out of national policies which acknowledge fear, which teach fear, and which prefer the alternative of surrender to the alternative of danger.

The argument for this present surrender of our ancient policy of independent national action is nothing in the end but that one word "danger." The Anglo-Japanese alliance, the gentlemen on the other side say, exposes us to danger. Therefore we have no choice; we must accept this treaty. I shall vote against this treaty because if any foreign alliance can ever speak to this country with the word "must," then the spirit which made this country safe when it was feeble will have departed from it, and our record in history will be that what we dared when we were weak, we feared to face when we were strong, and that in striving to barter our heritage for safety we lost safety itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to Article I.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gerry	McKellar	Smith
Ball	Glass	McKinley	Smoot
Borah	Gooding	McLean	Spencer
Brandegee	Hale	McNary	Stanfield
Broussard	Harris	Nelson	Stanley
Bursum	Harrison	Newberry	Sterling
Calder	Heflin	Norris	Sutherland
Cameron	Hitchcock	Overman	Swanson
Capper	Johnson	Page	Townsend
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Pepper	Underwood
Culberson	Kellogg	Pittman	Wadsworth
Edge	Kendrick	Poindexter	Walsh, Mont.
Elkins	Keyes	Pomerene	Warren
Ernst	King	Robinson	Watson, Ga.
Fernald	Ladd	Sheppard	Weller
Fletcher	La Follette	Shields	Willis
France	Lenroot	Shortridge
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Simmons

Mr. SMITH. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. DIAL] on account of sickness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Seventy Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

As in legislative session,

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10663) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes; requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MADDEN, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee were appointed managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 2897) to appropriate $5,000,000 for the purchase of seed grain and of feed to be supplied to farmers in the crop-failure areas of the United States, said amount to be expended under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. HAUGEN, Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan, and Mr. JACOWAY were appointed managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 490) to consolidate national forest lands, and it was subsequently signed by the Vice President.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, as in legislative session, I ask to have the action of the House on the amendments of the Senate to the second deficiency appropriation bill laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10663) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and grant the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. GLASS conferees on the part of the Senate.

CONSOLIDATION OF NATIONAL FOREST LANDS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, last Friday, when the conference report on Senate bill 490 was under consideration, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] made this inquiry:

> It proposes a general law in regard to the exchange of lands?

And I answered:

> Yes; of lands within forest reservations for lands outside.

Mr. President, I want to correct that statement. The bill simply had reference to private lands owned within the exterior boundaries of a forest, and it did not apply to lands without forest reservations.

FOUR-POWER TREATY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole and in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty submitted by the President of the United States between the United States, the British Empire, France, and Japan, relating to their insular possessions and insular dominions in the Pacific Ocean.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the debate has been directed in the main at the general features of the four-power treaty. There has been little discussion of the purpose and effect of the pending amendment. Before a vote is taken, I want the Senate to understand just what is being decided by the vote.

It is unfortunate that an international issue of importance should be prejudged either by the Senate or by the country. By the use of the word "prejudged," I mean it is unfortunate that a conclusion should be reached before the subject has been fully considered.

For some days the press has been publishing statements as to what the vote in the Senate will be on this amendment, and on the final vote to advise and consent to the ratification of the treaty. If Senators understand this amendment in its relationship to the objections that have been presented against the ratification of the treaty in the form in which it has been brought to the Senate, they may be induced to support the amendment.

Since the issues growing out of the Versailles treaty were decided by the Senate, there has been here a distinct inclination to favor the reservation method rather than the amendment process of changing the meaning of a treaty. A reservation, as we all know, expresses the interpretation of the Government making the reservation; and if the purpose is to effect or accomplish an actual change in the meaning and application of the treaty, the logical, the reasonable, and the fair process is by amendment.

I will illustrate. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], fearing that the four-power treaty constitutes an alliance which might obligate this Government to the employment of force for the execution of the decrees of the conference or negotiations provided for under the treaty, has proposed an amendment, which was accepted by the Committee on Foreign Relations, expressly declaring that this treaty is not an alliance, and so forth.

During the course of the debate I think it has been shown that both Great Britain and Japan at first openly construed the four-power pact as in the nature of an alliance. Their representatives, diplomats of great experience and wisdom, said to their respective constituencies that the four-power treaty is a substitute for the Anglo-Japanese alliance by which the two Governments are to be relieved from the odium, the censure, and the criticism which their alliance has attracted to them from other nations, and that in the adoption of the four-power treaty something new, something equally effective for the preservation of their rights and the maintenance of British and Japanese power in the regions of the Pacific Ocean, is being secured.

When the treaty was first reported to the plenary session of the Washington conference, it was almost universally regarded as an alliance. I need not refer to the private expressions to their colleagues of some of the American delegates representing this Government in the conference. I need not refresh the memories of my associates as to constructions which were placed upon this instrument by some who now say that it is a mere agreement to confer.

If it is an alliance, if it is intended to mass against a possible future enemy the power, military and naval, and the resources of the four great nations signing the treaty, the Senate of the United States will not change the nature of the agreement by adopting the reservation known as the Brandegee reservation, which declares that it is no such thing, although it may in a sense limit its own responsibility by such a reservation. The chief purpose of such a reservation is to attract to the support of the resolution to advise and consent to the ratification of the treaty the votes of Senators who fear that the treaty is an alliance, and will be so construed and applied, and who are unwilling to take the responsibility of committing their Governments to a combination with Great Britain, France, and Japan to dominate the Pacific Ocean.

The amendment which is now pending in the Senate has two purposes, two important provisions. I invite Senators and others who are studying this subject for the purpose of arriving at a conclusion as to what action will best conserve the rights and the interests of the people of the United States in the years to come to the consideration of these two provisions and purposes.

The first is that each of the high contracting parties—France, Great Britain, Japan, and the United States—will respect the rights and possessions of all other nations. Is there objection in the minds of Senators to saying upon the face of this treaty that it is the policy of the nations entering into it, while safeguarding their own rights and interests, to respect the rights and interests of other nations? If such a state of mind exists here or elsewhere, the Senate and the country ought to be apprised of it. We all know that the one objection which more than any other embarrasses the ratification of this treaty grows out of the fact that it does not even look toward the settlement of the real international questions in which the United States is most vitally concerned and interested in relation to Far Eastern problems. One of the real objections grows out of the fact that we are associating ourselves exclusively with three other great powers to respect each other's rights and to maintain them if they are assailed. Fear has been expressed that at least one of the parties to this treaty will avail itself of the security thus afforded to continue a policy of aggression already begun and universally known and recognized, and that, if occasion arises, it will make new aggressions. It is therefore of the utmost importance that in agreeing to stand together if any one of these four powers should be assailed, we should also have an understanding that not one of the four powers will assail any other nation.

What is the objection to such an agreement, in view of the facts and events of recent history, and the difficulties underlying the situation in the Far East? Do Senators desire that any of the nations who are parties to this four-power pact shall be at liberty to overrun the territory of other powers who are not parties to this treaty? Certainly not. Then why not say, while the four powers are respecting each other's rights and safeguarding them against attack from others that they will do the righteous, just, and conscientious thing, and respect the territory and rights of other nations?

If we will write that into the four-power treaty, we will have taken a long advance toward securing peace in the Orient. If we refuse to do it, we will drive into the consciousness of every nation not a party to the four-power treaty the conviction that these four powers are asserting and claiming the right to immunity from aggression by others, while denying to others protection against their aggression.

The second proposal is that when a controversy arises, and a conference is called, that conference shall not be confined to the four powers who are parties to this treaty, but it shall include every nation having an interest in the subject matter of the controversy.

What objection can be urged to giving China or Russia the right to participate in the conference, where their territory or the liberties of their people may be involved and perhaps practically determined?

The answer has been suggested during the course of the debate that this treaty is limited to the insular rights and insular possessions of the four parties to it. If the treaty provides for a mere conference, and if no obligation to take action be imposed, what can be the objection to extending it to the territory where the real difficulty lies? What, for instance, can be the objection to saying that if a controversy arises between Japan and China—and we know it may arise unless Japan reverses her policy—that China shall have a voice in the conference?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. ROBINSON. With pleasure.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the Senator whether the League of Nations covenant extended the obligations of its members to the extent the Senator now proposes to extend the obligations of the parties to the four-power treaty?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the League of Nations covenant, as the Senator well knows, provides that in case of a controversy between a member of the league and a nation not a member of the league, the nation not a member of the league shall be invited to become a member for the purpose of hearing and determining that controversy.

Mr. LENROOT. On such conditions as the council of the league may determine.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, for the consideration and determination of the controversy, no important distinction was made as to the rights of those who were members and the rights of those who were not members.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, Mr. President, may I remind the Senator what the language is?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly. I understand it, but the Senator may read it.

Mr. LENROOT. The covenant of the League of Nations provides that—

> In the event of a dispute between a member of the league and a State which is not a member of the league, or between States not members of the league, the State or States not members of the league shall be invited to accept the obligations of membership in the league for the purposes of such dispute, upon such conditions as the council may deem just.

There is no obligation imposed in the League of Nations covenant that any member of the league shall respect the territorial integrity of any nation not a member of the league.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the obligations in the League of Nations covenant, of course, relate principally to the mutual obligations of the members among themselves. That is true of all treaties. The point I am making, and the point the Senator from Wisconsin must see, is that the league is much fairer in its process than the four-power pact, because the league recognizes the right of a nation not a member to it, when its territory or its rights are involved, to come into the league and to have a hearing. It is true that the council determines the processes by which it may be heard and fixes such conditions as it deems just under which it may be heard. The fact remains that if a dispute arises between France, for illustration, and any nation not a member of the league, the first thing which happens is that the nonmember is invited to come in and let the controversy be determined by league processes and league methods; but here we have a combination of four nations, which say among themselves, according to my construction of it, "We will not fight between ourselves. We will settle our differences by a conference. If some one else threatens aggression against one of us, we four will communicate and determine how it shall be settled." If you pursued the league process, you would invite the nonmember into the conference and give that nation the right to participate in the determination of the matter.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. The only point I desired to make was that the Senator's amendment undertakes to create an obligation to respect the rights and possessions of other nations not parties to the treaty, and I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the League of Nations imposes no such obligation upon the members of that league.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, does the Senator think it is wrong to impose upon Japan, France, and Great Britain the obligation to respect the rights and possessions of other nations?

Mr. LENROOT. I do not, but I think——

Mr. ROBINSON. Then why should the United States enter into a pact with those nations if they refuse to enter into that just obligation?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I do not think it wrong, provided there be a reciprocal obligation upon the part of the other nations to respect the rights of the parties to this treaty. I do not believe in "jug-handle" contracts.

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly not, Mr. President. The treaty as framed is intended to safeguard the rights of the four powers against aggression by any other power, because it says that if those rights be threatened by the aggressive action of any other power the high contracting parties will communicate fully and frankly with one another in order to arrive at an understanding as to the best methods to be pursued in order to meet the exigencies of the particular situation. Why not permit every nation interested in the controversy to have a hearing at the conference, particularly if the conference is to be nothing but a "talkfest"?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield with pleasure to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. If the Senator will discuss this idea, the Senate would be glad to hear from him on it, and I am sure the public would: This four-power treaty puts it within the range of possibility that England, France, and Japan, members of the league, can have the league invite the United States to bring before its tribunals any dispute between us and them, and if we refuse that invitation to submit to the arbitrament of the league it becomes a cause of war, under the covenant of the League of Nations, and therefore we would be in conflict with all the nations which belong to that league.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I touched upon that feature of the subject a few days ago in an address delivered to the Senate. It is true beyond doubt that if a controversy arises between the United States and any other one of these four powers under this treaty, and the conference provided for fails to settle that dispute, all three of the other parties to this pact are already obligated by the Versailles treaty to bring the subject matter of the dispute before the League of Nations council. If that contingency should arise, the United States would be compelled either to enter the league for the purpose of that particular case and submit its rights and claims to the tribunals of the league or to refuse to do so, and in the event the latter course were pursued, under the plain terms of the Versailles treaty, an economic boycott would result against the United States, and force on the part of the members of the league would be employed, if it were necessary, to execute the orders of the league.

So, Mr. President, Senators may just as well get it in their minds that this matter of conference means that if a dispute arises between the United States and Japan we will either have to abide by the decision of the four-power conference, and let Japan, France, and Great Britain determine what is right, or we will have to try the case before the League of Nations. I wonder why the statesmen representing the United States at the recent conference—and they are great men—did not make some additional provision, establish some machinery, for the settlement of disputes between the parties to this four-power pact. I wonder whether they intended, whether they understood, when they signed the treaty that every dispute coming within its terms which may arise between the parties to it must either be decided by the four-power conference or taken to the League of Nations?

In case the League of Nations took jurisdiction of a controversy and decided it against the United States, under the terms of the Versailles treaty the United States would stand alone. All financial and commercial intercourse with the other civilized nations of the world, under the provisions of the economic boycott which would thus become applicable, would be terminated and all the powers, military and naval, of Japan, Great Britain, and France, and all the other members of the League of Nations, would be arrayed against the United States, if necessary, to execute the decision of the league.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator if that would not be the case if we did not go into this four-power treaty?

Mr. ROBINSON. Unless we effected a diplomatic settlement, unquestionably it would. The four-power treaty does not help, therefore, to settle our difficulties, unless we should be willing to leave to the other parties to the treaty the privilege of establishing or determining our rights.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Granting all that the Senator states to be true, does not the four-power treaty offer one other means of settlement of a dispute, outside of the League of Nations?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; it does. The Senator is welcome to all the gratification he can get out of that question and answer. The four-power treaty does provide that in case of a dispute between any of the parties to it, a conference shall be called or other methods of communication employed, to which the whole subject shall be referred for consideration and adjustment. Of course, the nature of the controversies which may go to the conference is limited by the terms of the treaty itself.

The point I am making is that in case a controversy went to the four-power treaty conference, the United States would have the alternative of submitting to the decree of that conference, with Japan and Great Britain closely allied now, as they have been for the last 25 years; or of submitting its claims to a trial before the League of Nations.

Now, I want to get back to the amendment and to conclude what I have to say with a very brief résumé of some of the arguments in favor of this amendment. Of course, if the amendment is not agreed to the Senate may again have an opportunity of considering it in the form of a reservation. I have offered it as an amendment, first, because I think that is the logical way of putting into this treaty the principles which are embodied in the suggestion that every nation whose rights may be affected by a conference shall be permitted to participate in it.

The amendment has two clear objects. One is to disclaim on behalf of the parties to the four-power treaty any purpose to override another nation not a party either in its possessions or its rights. I have said that there is nothing in American policy, there is nothing in American interests, there is nothing in any interest, sir, which you and I are obligated to conserve, which would prevent us from supporting that principle in view of the fear often expressed that Japan will continue her agressions against China and Russia. I know that is speaking plainly; perhaps it would have been just as well to speak in more general terms, but that is the fact. We all know it.

The next proposition is that when a dispute arises who shall be in the conference or communications for the purpose of adjusting it? If a controversy arises between Japan and China, whether in 10 years or 25 years, during the life of this treaty, what is the objection to letting China come into the conference and participate in the discussion?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. SMITH. I do not see what objection there could be on the part of three of the powers to this quadruple treaty, because they have already solemnly covenanted to do that identical thing with about 35 or 40 other nations in the League of Nations. The covenant of the League of Nations provides that in case there is a controversy with any outside party, the outside party is to be invited to come in and state his case.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator is right. We went over at considerable length, before the Senator came into the Chamber, the procedure of the league upon failure to settle through communications. What I am wondering is, what is the motive which prompts the rejection of such an amendment or reservation if it states a correct principle and if its adoption would remove much of the opposition to the treaty?

The cause of peace, if it is involved in this treaty, would be promoted very greatly by giving assurance to the world that these four great nations are merely making a defensive alliance. I have no objection in principle to the policy of two or more peaceful and nonaggressive nations resolving mutually to resist attack. How can any Senator object to the assertion and application of the further principle if nations combine for defensive purposes that they ought to avow that they have no aggressive purpose? That is all this amendment seeks to accomplish.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should have preferred to have entered upon the discussion of the pending treaty at a later day, but I know those who have charge of it are in great haste to have a vote, and with their anxiety I more or less sympathize.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, would the Senator object to the suggestion of the absence of a quorum?

Mr. BORAH. I prefer that the Senator do not make that suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). The Senator from Idaho declines to yield.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, while I am not going to cover the treaty in full, there is one feature of the subject to which I should like to call attention before the vote is taken on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and particularly before it shall come before us as a reservation, in case it shall be defeated as an amendment.

There has been much debate as to the particular and peculiar nature of this agreement; that is, as to its technical obligations and its import from a purely legal standpoint. It has been contended that it is an alliance; but it has been supposed that the reservation obviates that construction. There are those, on the other hand, who contend that even without the reservation it is not an alliance. I am not going to discuss to-day the question of whether or not it is an alliance. I wish to discuss the treaty according to the construction which I understand its advocates place upon it. For fear I should be misunderstood hereafter, however, I desire to say that, in my opinion, it is an alliance; but I am perfectly willing to enter upon the discussion of the treaty at this time upon the construction which is placed upon it by its advocates.

As I understand the advocates of the treaty, they contend that it is in the nature of a political pact, bringing into a political group or diplomatic group four nations; that those four nations agree, first, to respect the rights of each in relation to their insular possessions and dominions; second, that in case controversies arise between them which can not be settled through diplomacy they will confer for the purpose of adjustment; third, that in case the rights of any of the signatories are attacked or threatened they will communicate or confer in order to arrive at an understanding as to the most efficient measures to be adopted, jointly or severally, to meet the emergencies of the particular situation. In other words, this is a grouping of four political powers for the purpose of conference among themselves under certain emergencies, and for the purpose of communication or conference among themselves in case of attack or aggressive action from the outside. I believe that is a fair construction of the treaty as made by its advocates. It constitutes a political or diplomatic grouping of four powers for certain purposes. Whether it is an alliance or not, it is conceded upon all hands that it has the effect of constituting in the Pacific Ocean a political group, or diplomatic group, for certain purposes and certain objects to be attained.

After listening to the discussion by the leader of the majority [Mr. LODGE], and also by the leader of the minority [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and to the speeches of the able Senators from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] and from Indiana [Mr. NEW], I arrived at the conclusion that this is their construction. If that be the correct construction, Mr. President, there is nothing new in this treaty; there is no departure from old and long-discredited practices. The system of political grouping of nations is as old as recorded history. My limited investigation has led me to believe that it is a system which has obtained for just about 3,200 years. Its evils, its deplorable results, fill the pages of history since recorded time.

The first political group of which I can find any record in the way of a treaty or an understanding was formed by the treaty between the King of Egypt, Rameses, and the leader of the Hittites about 3,200 years ago. Those who might be interested in looking into the matter would also be interested to find how strikingly similar their agreement was to the agreement which we are discussing to-day. It was based upon the proposition of protecting the several possessions of the respective signers, and in case of an attack they were to confer together and take such action as was necessary to safeguard their respective possessions. I do not, of course, state the language of the agreement; it is written in the quaint language of those years; but that was the principle which was involved. It was the forerunner of the system of political grouping which has gone on from that time until this, and if I be correct in the construction which has been placed upon this treaty it is simply transferring the grouping system from the Old World to the Pacific Ocean. It does not initiate a new policy, a new system, but approves this old practice and makes it the dominant system of the Pacific.

There is one consideration to which I invite the attention of Senators in the very beginning of my remarks, and that is that there has never been organized, so far as my knowledge goes, a political group of this kind that did not give rise to a counter political group. Whenever three or four or a half dozen nations bring themselves into some kind of an understanding, creating a community of interest or community of action, it does not make any difference how innocent the contract may be upon its face or how thoroughly it may be dedicated to the cause of peace, it always gives rise to suspicion, to antagonism, and thereby necessarily to a counter group of nations which have or contemplate they may have an interest in conflict with it. It is that particular feature of this proposition, Mr. President, to which I desire to direct my attention this afternoon.

Upon last Saturday, in the very able and candid speech of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], he used this language:

> I want the Senator to go back—
>
> Speaking to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]—
> I want the Senator to go back with me eight years ago this coming summer, and I should like to ask him to recall what Lord Grey said in August of 1914, when he had struggled for weeks as no man in history had ever struggled before to try to prevent the catastrophe of the Great War. When the ax fell, when the life of the nations became at stake, he said:
> "If there had only been a machinery by which those nations could have consulted together, the Great War would have been avoided."

The Senator from Alabama quotes Earl Grey substantially correctly. I had the pleasure of being present when Earl Grey made that statement, or at least at one time when he made it. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] was also present. It was the result of a discussion upon the question of the League of Nations. Earl Grey did say that he hoped that such a condition of affairs as that which existed in 1914 would never arise until the world should have before it the machinery by which to bring the nations into conference; that he believed if such machinery had been in existence and a conference could have been had in the fateful days of 1914 the conflict might have been avoided. Of course, I was impressed at the time with the thought how thoroughly that did away with the propaganda which had been put out so strongly since the war began that the war was fomented by a single nation which had for 40 years been building up a conspiracy for the purpose of attacking the other nations, and that when the hour came when it thought it could do so successfully it precipitated the conflict, in violation of all treaties, in violation of conscience, and in violation of the principles of humanity, for the sole purpose of accomplishing its ulterior and imperialistic designs.

I thought the statement of the earl was subject to that attack, but that is aside, Mr. President, from the question. I want to call your attention to-day to the proposition that what Earl Grey was pleading against was the precise situation which will be created by this treaty. In 1914 there was machinery for conferring in the respective groups. There was no difficulty about conferring between the members of the entente; there was no difficulty about conferring between the members of the triple alliance. They had a perfect machinery, and used it to confer repeatedly and effectively during the latter days of July, 1914, and the first days of August of that year. There was not that condition of affairs which is contemplated in this treaty; a different and distinct condition of affairs is created by this treaty, to wit, a group which, whether it gives rise to a counter group or not, is a group against the outside world. Now I ask the supporters of this treaty where is the method provided by it by which to communicate and to confer between those who are outside of this group and the group? The four powers may confer; but so could the members of the entente; so could the members of the triple alliance; but the thing which Earl Grey felt was lacking and the thing which he was pleading for that night was some method by which to do away with groups and to provide a machinery by which nations could communicate with one another regardless of groups, or, if in groups, how the groups could confer with one another. In other words, suppose an attack takes place from the outside, where under article 2 is the machinery for conference with those on the outside? Suppose Russia should make an attack for the recovery of a portion of the island which has been so much referred to in this discussion, under what clause of this treaty could we have a conference with Russia?

Suppose China should make an attack and should undertake to recover a portion of the territory which has been taken from her, where is there a provision in this treaty for a conference with China? Or suppose China and Russia and Germany constitute another group in the next five years and a controversy arises between the group under the pending treaty and the group which would then be formed, where is the machinery for the conference between those groups?

Mr. President, that is what Earl Grey had in mind. There were political groups in Europe antagonistic to one another and there was no machinery whatever by which to arrange for conferences between the two groups. What he was pleading for was not that the old system of alliances might be restored or that the old system of political groupings might be restored; what Earl Grey was pleading for was the wiping out of political groups and combining them all into one great league of nations. His difficulty was in having no machinery to effectuate a conference between nations in his particular group and a nation or nations outside of his group, such as China or Russia would be under this treaty. That is what he was speaking for that night, and those who are in favor of that provision are about to vote contrary to the contention which he upheld upon that delightful occasion. You are here creating what he said brought Europe into the war, to wit, the entente, with no machinery for a conference with strangers to the entente.

No one here objects, Mr. President, so far as I know, to the provision for a conference in article 1. If article 2 were stricken out of the treaty there could be a vote on it in 10 minutes. We do not object to conferences between the four powers in case a controversy arises. So far as I am individually concerned, I am perfectly willing that the United States shall agree to confer with any nation in any part of the globe whenever a controversy arises between that nation and this. It is not the conference which we are objecting to and for which we are being criticized throughout the country; it is to that portion of the treaty which provides for no conference and which creates again the exact condition which prevailed in 1914, a condition which has always led to war.

Mr. President, let us take a leaf from history, for the quotation of the Senator from Alabama makes it interesting to follow out this practice of political groupings or of diplomatic groupings. I know of no better illustration than that which was referred to by the Senator from Alabama—the condition which brought on the conflict in 1914. There are historians in this Chamber who have spent their lives in research in history. I do not make the assertion, but rather I ask the question as a challenge, Can any historian here advise the Senate of a single instance where a political group was formed that it did not give rise to a counter political group? Can any Senator here advise us of an instance where three or four nations associated themselves together that it did not give rise to a counter association of the same nature? And then, will any Senator advise me of an instance where one political group having been created and another political group coming into existence, those two political groups did not have their contentions and conflicts, which finally ended in war? I may be in error, and, therefore, I make no assertion, but I have no knowledge of a single instance in all the history of the world in which a political group of this kind did not give rise to a counter political group, and then give rise to contention which finally ended in war. The best illustration of that, as I have said, is that which happened in 1914.

The first group, known as the Triple Alliance, was formed, I think, in 1879, between Germany and Austro-Hungary. Afterwards it was acceded to and joined by Italy, about 1882. This constituted the political group in Europe which led to the formation of the group known as the "Entente," for shortly thereafter, by reason of the formation of the first group, France and Russia came to the conclusion that their interests could only be served by forming a counter group, and so France and Russia joined their interests, and a short time thereafter Great Britain became a member of that group. We had therefore from 1879 until it ended in the deluge of 1914 two political groups in Europe, viewing one another with suspicion, with distrust, and with antagonism, until it finally ended in a conflict which shook this old earth from center to circumference. Every time the Triple Alliance group would put out a battleship or a number of battleships, the Triple Entente would put out a larger number of battleships or, to be more accurate, vice versa. Every time the Triple Entente increased the forces of its army, the Triple Alliance would increase the forces of its army. So these two political groups confronted one another in the heart of Europe until the fighting wiped them both out and led to realignments.

We often hear it said that the war of 1914 was the result of the action of one particular nation. In my opinion that was a contention which developed after the war began. Prior to that time the publicists, the historians, those interested in public affairs, realized that the coming conflict, if it should occur, would be by reason of the fact that there were two political groups in Europe which were viewing one another with suspicion. I am going to read some paragraphs from standard authorities upon this subject.

First, let us look at the language of the triple alliance, or the first group. Here are two paragraphs:

> Considering, in fine, that an intimate agreement between Austria-Hungary and Germany can threaten no one, but is rather calculated to consolidate European peace as created by the stipulations of the treaty with Berlin.
> Their majesties, the Emperor of Austria and King of Hungary and the Emperor of Germany and King of Prussia, promising each other solemnly never to give any aggressive tendency whatsoever to their purely defensive agreement, have resolved to conclude a reciprocal alliance of peace and protection.

That was the language which dedicated the triple alliance to the cause of protection and peace. Considering that they would never give aggression, or attack anyone, they formed the alliance for the purpose, as we say here, of protecting their respective possessions and in the cause of peace. The language used was quite as laudable as that found in this pact.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. But we have not said in this treaty that the four powers will not give aggression or take aggressive action against any other power.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is correct.

Mr. President, notwithstanding this agreement between these powers specifically stated that they never would attack the other nations or infringe upon their rights, the other nations were not willing to take their word for it. You may write into this treaty the terms most expressive of peace and Christianity, you may take the eloquent tribute of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the cause of Christianity delivered here on last Saturday and incorporate it in this treaty, and every nation outside of this treaty will still regard it as antagonistic to its interests and will proceed upon that belief. No asseverations of good faith upon the part of the group, no declaration of peace, will satisfy the suspicion or quiet the distrust of those who are not members. I appeal to the bloody pages of history to support what I say.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. STANLEY. Permit me to suggest to the Senator, as the Senator has the language of the Holy Alliance before him, that if he will add a confession of faith to the terms of the alliance between Austria-Hungary and Germany he will have practically the verbiage of the Holy Alliance. That is the only alliance that I know of that was opened with prayer and with a jimmy at the same time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have the beginning paragraph of the Holy Alliance before me, and in view of the remark of the Senator from Kentucky perhaps it may not be amiss to read it. This alliance began by saying:

> In consequence the sole principle of force, whether between the said Governments or between their subjects, shall be that of doing each other reciprocal service and of testifying by unalterable good will the mutual affection with which they ought to be animated to consider themselves all as members of one and the same Christian nation; the three allied princes looking on themselves as merely delegated by Providence to govern three branches of the one family, namely, Austria, Prussia, and Russia, thus confessing that the Christian world, of which they and their people form a part, has in reality no other sovereign than Him to whom power really belongs, because in Him alone are found all the treasures of love, science, and infinite wisdom; that is to say, God, our divine Savior, the Word of the Most High, the Word of Life. Their majesties consequently recommend to their people, with the most tender solicitude, as the sole means of enjoying that peace which arises from a good conscience, and which alone is durable, to strengthen themselves every day more and more in the principles and exercise of the duties which the divine Savior has taught to mankind.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho further yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. The Senator is a profound historian, and has given this subject great thought. Can he give to the Senate or to the country an instance of any other combination of nations, any other treaty of alliance, sacred or profane, that ever covered as many outrages and as many crimes as this wolf in sheep's clothing called "the Holy Alliance," which a wayfaring man might mistake for a good deacon's prayer unless he read it with great care?

Mr. BORAH. In reply to the Senator I will say that the Holy Alliance stands out in history as perhaps the most cruel, remorseless, and ruthless alliance that has ever been formed.

What I wanted to say, however, without getting away from the drift of my argument, was that it does not make any difference what we say in a treaty, nor the terms of it, nor how honest and sincere we may be in our professions; every outside nation will regard it as a covert threat to its interests, and it leads inevitably, as it did in this instance, and as it inevitably does in all instances, to the formation of an express or an implied countergroup or counteralliance.

Tardieu, speaking of this grouping, says:

> The triple alliance and the dual alliance—
>
> As it was first formed—
> are the chief supports of the European balance of power. * * * By uniting their previously isolated forces, France and Russia had made Europe stable again.

Let us look, therefore, at the Triple Entente; and I ask you to observe the language of Sir Edward Grey's letter—the same gentleman who was spoken of by the Senator from Alabama. He formed the Triple Entente; that is to say, he gave expression to its purposes and principles. Here is a quotation from his letter which laid down the principles upon which the Triple Entente was supposed to exist.

He said in a letter to France:

I agree that if either Government had grave reason to expect an unprovoked attack by a third power, or something that threatened the general peace, it should immediately discuss with the other whether both Governments should act together to prevent aggression and to preserve peace; and if so, what measures they would be prepared to take in common?

There, Mr. President, is the basis of the second political grouping in Europe. It provided for nothing except a conference, a discussion—no alliance, no commitment to force, no agreement to use force, no agreement to cooperate with the military forces of the other power. The only thing which they agreed to do is what it is said here we agree to do, and that is, in the case of an attack to consult together, to determine what measures, if any, we shall take in order to meet the exigencies of the situation.

I desire to follow up the entente—this perfectly harmless, friendly cooperation between the three powers—to see how quickly it developed into a real, aggressive, positive military alliance, and how ultimately it resulted in just exactly what the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] has urged to-day; how ultimately it resulted in furnishing the military force which they said they were under no obligation to furnish.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. REED. If it will not divert the Senator, I express the hope that before he concludes he will discuss this term, "unprovoked attack." Can it mean anything in the world except that in the judgment of the nations concerned it is an unjustifiable attack? And when that phrase is reduced down, does it mean anything more than an attack which the nations concerned regard as inimical to their interests?

I should like to hear the Senator on that.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, Mr. Tardieu, in his book entitled "A Conflict of Political Groups" or "Alliances"—I have forgotten just the exact term—discusses both these matters. This book, fortunately, was written three or four years before the war began, so that it is not colored or controlled by propaganda. In speaking of the alliance between France and Russia he says:

In 1891 an alliance was made by France with Russia which ended the long period of diplomatic isolation, and served as a counterweight to the triple alliance which had been formed between Austria, Germany, and Italy.

Prof. Hazen declares—I may not quote his words exactly, but in substance—

This alliance—

The dual alliance between France and Russia—

was the inevitable outcome of the existence of the other alliance or political group concluded between Germany and Italy some years before. The dual alliance and the triple entente grew out of the need of both Russia and France which they felt by reason of being outside of the triple alliance.

Prof. Hazen, in his book entitled "Europe Since 1915," concludes this interesting history by a paragraph which I desire to read. This paragraph was inserted in this book when it was first published, in 1909. Subsequent editions had the paragraph stricken out. I do not know why it was stricken out. I can only draw my conclusion, which perhaps might be incorrect, and therefore I will not state it. After reviewing the history of the triple alliance and the triple entente, or these two political groups, the professor says:

The historian, having reached the point of interrogation—

That is—

What of the future?—may, in all comity, leave the answer to his question to the prophet or to the future. But he may observe, in closing, that contemporary Europe is dominated by two great leagues, the triple alliance, consisting of Germany, Austria, and Italy, and the triple entente, consisting of England, France, and Russia. The precise nature of these combinations, the character and range of the obligations they impose, have never been made public. They constitute the very arcana of a profoundly secret and undemocratic diplomacy. The nations stand committed to they know not what.

These two leagues confront each other, watchful, suspicious, portentiously armed. Professing peace to be their passion they press forward in sinister and dangerous rivalry for military superiority; that is, for the power to destroy.

That, Mr. President, was a prophecy written in 1909 as foreshadowing what would happen, and it did happen in 1914. These two powerful political groups, powerfully armed, stood there watching one another supiciously and antagonistically, until finally, in 1914, when the crisis came, there was no means, as Sir Edward Grey said, by which the two groups could communicate with each other, and inevitably the war came. For 20 years the political atmosphere of Europe had been poisoned with the distrust and enmity fostered and nursed by these two groups; for 20 years the chancellories of Europe had been embittered and estranged by these groups; and the infernal system was as certainly the cause of the World War as the going down of the sun is the cause of the darkness of the night. Let no man, no woman, no lover of peace be deceived. What the delegates from Europe brought over and gave us in the name of peace is this old hellish system whose frightful story is told upon a thousand battle fields of the Old World.

Now, sirs, you propose to create a political group in the Pacific composed of the four great powers; you leave on the outside of that group China, with her 400,000,000 people; you leave on the outside Russia, with her 180,000,000 people; and you have one-fourth of the entire human race on the outside of your political group. What do you think will happen? And if it does happen, what means have you provided for in this treaty to communicate between this group and those on the outside? I ask those who are saying to the country that this is a conference to tell me now how they propose to communicate between the members of this group and those on the outside in case war is threatened? It is not a conference. There is no means for a conference. When that aggression takes place there are just the same means as were provided for in Europe in the fateful days of 1914.

Mr. President, let us follow it a step further. I want to go now to the stirring days of 1914.

Time and time again in the House of Commons, when inquiring members rose to ask, "Is there any commitment upon the part of England to cooperate in a military way with the forces of Europe?" the gentlemen stood up and said "There is no alliance; there is no agreement to use force; there is no agreement by which we are obligated to go to the assistance of France." And those gentlemen were men of as high integrity and quite the equal in statesmanship of the gentlemen who are sincerely and honestly attempting to construe this treaty as to what it will mean 10 years from now.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator undoubtedly bears in mind that the reason—the ostensible reason, at least, and I have no cause to believe that it is not the real reason—why Great Britain joined France in defense against the attack of Germany was not the Triple Entente, but was the agreement, to which Germany and England and Austria and Russia and France were parties, to preserve and protect the neutrality of Belgium. In other words, the very kind of a general agreement between all of the nations that might be involved that I understand the Senator to prefer to a balance of power was the cause of England going into the war.

Mr. BORAH. I differ with the Senator for two reasons. In the first place, it was not the controlling reason assigned; in the second place the declaration of war was made, I feel quite certain, 48 hours before the neutrality of Belgium was violated.

Let us observe what was said by those who were construing the treaty, or perhaps I should say the understanding between France and Great Britain. On the 6th day of December, 1911, the Prime Minister of England, being interrogated as to what their obligations toward France were—I was about to say "our" obligations—said:

There are no secret engagements with any foreign Governments that entail upon us any obligation to render military or naval assistance to any other power.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator tell us who the Prime Minister was in 1911?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. Asquith. In 1912 Lord Hugh Cecil made an inquiry as to what the obligations were, stating that it was constantly being asserted that there was some understanding, not expressed in a treaty, perhaps, but by reason of correspondence or otherwise, and the Prime Minister interrupted his question before he concluded and said:

I ought to say that it is not true.

That is to say, that there were any obligations outstanding.

On the 24th of March, 1913, Mr. Asquith made a comprehensive answer to a question of Sir W. Byles in the following terms:

As has been repeatedly stated, this country is not under any obligation, not public and known to Parliament, which compels it to take part in a war. In other words, if war arises between European powers there are no unpublished agreements which will restrict or hamper the freedom of the Government or Parliament to decide whether or not Great Britain should participate in a war.

That, as I understand, is the real kernel to the controversy here, and that is the thing which the reservation offered by the Senator from Connecticut is designed to preserve, to wit, the unhampered freedom of the Congress of the United States to determine whether or not it will take part in case a controversy arises.

On June 11, 1914, only a few months before the controversy arose, Sir Edward Grey, in answer to a question, referred back to the statement made by Asquith on March 24, 1913, and said:

It remains as true to-day as it was a year ago.

To wit, that the Government was in no way committed.

Mr. President, this was the situation upon the 3d day of August, 1914; there was an agreement, or an understanding, between Great Britain and France, that in case of a controversy the two nations would confer and would determine what measures, if any, they would take for their common defense. It was the understanding upon the part of Great Britain and her people all the way through that there was to be nothing but a conference, nothing but a conversation, no commitment to force, no understanding as to the use of military power.

I ask Senators, therefore, to refer to Sir Edward Grey's great speech on the 3d of August, 1914. It is too long for me to read, but it will well bear reading by those who think that this treaty will not involve us, in case of an aggression, in common action with our associates, if need be, by military force.

The first part of Sir Edward Grey's great speech is devoted entirely to demonstrating to the Parliament that there was no obligation which should hamper the Parliament in the least in refusing to go to war with France if Parliament saw fit to do so, and he reviewed all the history of the transaction, reread his letter of 1912, and presented to them what he said was a clear line of conduct for refusal, if they saw fit to refuse. He then referred to the friendship which had grown up by reason of the entente, to the neutrality of Belgium and to the future commercial interests of Great Britain. Then he closed his speech by an appeal to the Parliament, and to the people of England, saying that while they were free, as a matter of contract, and as a matter of treaty, they were in honor bound to go to war along with France, because of the friendship which had been built up between the two powers, and by reason of the conversations, perhaps, France was not as well prepared to take care of herself as she otherwise would have been, including, as I say, a reference to Belgium and other matters. But the point upon which the debate seemed almost entirely to turn was England's relationship to France, and whether, in honor, England could disregard the situation which had been brought about by the negotiations within this political group.

So, as the historian says, while Parliament was told it was free, it was told that the path of refusal was the path of dishonor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Wait just a moment. We will assume that Congress is not bound, but when your representative comes back from the conference and says, as Gray said to the Parliament, "You are free; nothing binds you, no contract, no understanding, but we have met and have conferred and have concluded as your agents under this treaty, that the only way to meet the exigency is by force, and in our opinion if you refuse, you are traveling the path of dishonor." What will the Congress do? I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator says that Sir Edward Grey advised Parliament that there was no obligation on the part of the other members of the Triple Entente to go to the rescue of France in case of war; but that afterwards they were told—that is, I assume the Senator means Great Britain was told—that to refuse to come to the defense of France under the Triple Entente was the path of dishonor. Will the Senator kindly point out by whom that was told and when it was told? It is the first time I have ever heard it. My understanding was that the issue between Great Britain and Germany was the treaty between Germany and Great Britain for the protection of Belgium, and that Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, prime minister of Germany, replied that that was a mere scrap of paper, but that Great Britain declared that her honor was involved in preserving her agreement for the protection of Belgium under the treaty for Belgian neutrality, in which all the great powers of Europe were involved.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator will wait until I conclude——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will be glad to do that, and I will be glad to get the authority for the statement the Senator has just made.

Mr. BORAH. I am giving my authorities pretty regularly, trespassing upon the patience of the Senate to do so, and I will give one authority now. I had not intended to call attention to it at this particular point, but if the Senator has not read Lord Loreburn's book entitled How the War Came, he will find a vast amount of information in it, about which he has been misled, in my judgment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have not been misled about it, because I am basing my statement upon the public negotiations and exchanges between the foreign ministries of Germany and of Great Britain at the opening of the war. Lord Loreburn was not responsible for the conduct of Great Britain at that time.

Mr. BORAH. He was very closely associated with the powers that were controlling Great Britain, and he gives the records and the documents upon which he bases his statement, and I think by the time I get through with the documents the Senator will conclude that there are two sides, at least, to the controversy as to why England entered the war. I stated that the question of Belgian neutrality was one of the reasons discussed, but it was not the reason upon which Earl Grey advanced his assertion that it would be a matter of dishonor if England did not go in, at least not the controlling reason.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am glad the Senator admits there are two sides to it. I assumed that there was only one side to it, from his previous statement.

Mr. BORAH. I admitted that out of courtesy to the Senator. Lord Loreburn said, speaking of Grey's speech of the 3d of August, 1914:

This remarkable speech began with an elaborate effort to prove that the House of Commons was perfectly free to determine either for peace or war. It ended with a passionate declaration that this country would be disgraced if we did not declare war, and the reasoning of the speech proved that Grey had committed himself irretrievably. It left the House of Commons convinced that it had in honor no choice but to join France in arms.

Now, let us read from Grey's speech itself. He said:

I come back first to the question of British obligation. I have assured the House, and the prime minister has assured the House more than once, that if any crisis such as this arose we should come before the House of Commons and be able to say to the House that it was free to decide what the British attitude should be; that we would have no secret engagement which we should spring upon the House and tell the House that because we had entered into that engagement it was an obligation of honor upon the country. I will deal with that point to clear the ground first. The Triple Entente was not an alliance.

Neither is this, so we are told.

It was a diplomatic group.

I will get down to the heart of the controversy, if I can. Referring, then, to his letter of the 22d of November, 1912, the letter from which I read a few moments ago, he said:

I think that letter makes it clear that what the prime minister and I said to the House of Commons was perfectly justified, and that as regards our freedom to decide in a crisis what our lines should be, whether we should intervene or whether we should abstain, the Government remains perfectly free, and, a fortiori, the House of Commons remains perfectly free. That I say to clear the ground upon the point of view of the obligation. I think it was due to prove our good faith to the House of Commons that I should give that full information to the House now, and what I think is obvious from the letter I have just read, that we do not construe anything which has previously taken place in our diplomatic relations with other powers in this matter as restricting the freedom of government to decide what attitude they should take now, or restrict the freedom of the House of Commons to decide what their attitude should be.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What is the date of that?

Mr. BORAH. This was a speech delivered by Lord Grey on the 3d of August, 1914. He said:

I come now to what we think the situation requires of us. For many years we have had a long-standing friendship with France.

An honorable member cried out, "And with Germany."

And so they had. In some respects the relationship prior to 1909 had been more friendly between Great Britain and Germany than between France and Great Britain.

A long debate took place upon this matter, and in this debate Sir Edward Grey's arguments of honor are quoted, so by reading the debate I can avoid reading the matter twice, for the debate is important. I read a quotation from Mr. Morrell:

The right honorable gentleman has told us he admits there are no formal obligations binding this country to intervene in this war. None whatever. No formal obligation with regard to France, at any rate up till yesterday. As regards the letter of November 22, 1912, which he read out to this house, I submit that it is conclusive from that point. That letter perfectly and clearly intimated to France that we could not underake to support her in a European war, and, as he fairly put it, it was entirely open to this house, and it is so even now, to decide whether we are going to intervene in this war at all.

He further said:

I believe we are going to war now because of the fear and jealousy entertained in this country, unfortunately, and fostered by a large section of the press, the fear and jealousy of German ambition. I believe that it is the real reason why honorable gentlemen opposite are asking this country to go to war.

Another speaker, Mr. Molteno, said:

No part of this country has been invaded at present; no vital interest in this country has been attacked. Yet we are asked to assent to war with all its terrible consequences. The Government has no right to plunge this country into this war for anything short of our own vital interests.

The right honorable gentleman began by saying that we were under no obligation, and that the House was perfectly free to come to a decision on this matter. Yet, before he had got very far, he told us that we were under such obligations that, in his opinion, we could not get rid of them.

Again said the same speaker:

Surely a hope and an expectation were held out. For a period negotiations were set on foot, of which the foreign secretary told us, and the course of those negotiations have been such that in his opinion we are now bound to France to such an extent that we are obliged to go to war.

This is the construction put upon Grey's speech in the debate:

Yet we are now told that our obligations, though not obligations of treaty or of agreement, are so strong and so binding that we shall be compelled to take up arms in defense of France. I complain that we, who are supporters of His Majesty's Government, should have been led into this state of false security on this most vital and important question.

For what interests are they asking us to enter upon this tremendous struggle? Have they stated any interest? They do not pretend to tell us. They speak to us of some vague fear, some sort of obligation of honor that impels us to this course.

We ought to have more information in order that we may be immediately put in a position to make up our minds as to what our duty is on this question. I wish to ask whether we are to have a fair and straight opportunity of considering, discussing, and deciding on this question. But they have brought us to the brink of disaster without our knowing and without our being warned.

Further on a member, Mr. Williams, stated that the foreign secretary said:

It is true that we are under no treaty obligations to come to the rescue of France in case of war. It is true, even though the French Navy is in the Mediterranean, and the northern coast of France is therefore exposed to the attacks of any fleet from Germany, because France has hitherto trusted in our friendship.

France, relying upon the association, relying upon the friendship, relying upon the understandings expressed in Grey's letter of the 22d of November, was placed in such a position that, as a matter of honor, Earl Grey felt it was necessary for Great Britain to enter into war. Was France's relationship with Great Britain any closer than ours will be at the end of five years of close association or conference with our colleagues in this treaty? Further on, speaking of Earl Grey, he said:

Then, in order to arouse the passion of honorable Members of this House, and, I suppose, of people outside, the foreign secretary asked this question: "What would this country do or say if they found that the German fleet had broken through the North Sea, entered the English Channel, and was bombarding some of the towns on the northern coast of France?" I felt, as I think every honorable Member felt, that we could not stand idly by with folded hands while our friends were being attacked.

Another gentleman, Mr. Balfour, spoke. This debate, Mr. President, was getting very interesting. Men were calling for definite information and asking if they would be permitted to discuss the matter fully, and they were assured that they would be permitted to discuss the matter freely before the Parliament should pass upon it.

I digress to say that they never were permitted to discuss it.

Mr. Balfour arose and said:

Anybody who has watched the House in this debate knows perfectly well why we are met here and why we have to sit here. It is because various gentlemen below the "gangway," sitting in one quarter of the house, desire to express their views to us. * * * What we have been having to-night are the very dregs and lees of the debate, in no sense representing the various views of members of this House. * * * It is only unfortunate and lamentable that we should spend the dregs of this evening not in a proper House of Commons debate in dealing with a great resolution on a great subject but in a series of speeches which, whatever their intrinsic excellence may be and however earnest may be the members who have delivered them, can not be regarded as representative in any true sense of the views I would venture to say even of the party for which they are speaking.

Then Mr. Balfour asked that the Parliament consent to an adjournment, which took place. Notwithstanding the fact that many members were assured that the debate would be continued, this was the end of the debate; there was never any further discussion of the subject. England was literally swept into the war.

Mr. President, I have read these extracts to demonstrate the inapplicability of the quotation made by the Senator from Alabama when he said that Earl Grey was pleading, as he would have us believe, for the same kind of conference which is provided for by the four-power treaty. Grey was pleading for an entirely different proposition. That which is provided by the four-power treaty Grey had, to wit, the power to communicate with the different members of the group. That which Grey did not have, a means of communicating between the groups, the treaty does not provide. It provides no method for dealing with the outside world at all except the method of arms. There is no conference provided for, either expressed or implied. How, then, does the proposition meet the rule or standard which the Senator from Alabama established?

If the Senator from Alabama will point to me or if the able Senator from Massachusetts will point to me under article 2 any provision for a conference with the outside world when the exigency arises, so far as I am concerned, the debate on this phase of the question is over. I say, therefore, Mr. President, that this treaty can not be any other than an alliance of war, because there is no other method provided for settlement except war. Let me give you an illustration. I have here article 2 of the treaty, which reads:

If the said rights are threatened by the aggressive action of any other power, the high contracting parties shall communicate with one another fully and frankly in order to arrive at an understanding as to the most efficient measures to be taken, jointly or separately, to meet the exigencies of the particular situation.

The Senator from Iowa who sits in front of me [Mr. CUMMINS] is a great lawyer. I ask him, Is there any provision in article 2 enabling us to communicate with the attacking power? Is there any provision anywhere in the treaty by which we could reach the outside parties? Then let us see what would happen.

An attack is made by Russia, by China, or by a group on the outside, and our representative, Mr. Hughes, communicates fully and frankly with Japan; and we will assume for the sake of the argument that Japan communicates fully and frankly with us. They meet for the purpose of doing what? Of determining the most effective measures to meet the situation. I agree with the proponents of this treaty that Mr. Hughes does not have to decide that the most effective measure is war; I agree with them perfectly that he may refuse to decide upon any such alternative; I agree with them that he may refuse to go into a conference any further after he finds out they are talking war; and he may come home; but they must agree with me, on the other hand, that he may decide on war; he may agree with the other conferees that the only way to meet the emergency is by the Army and Navy. If he does agree upon that, he comes home and says to us as a Congress, "Your representatives under article 2 have conferred freely and frankly, and under the guidance of our conscience and convictions the only way to meet this emergency is by sending our Army and Navy."

Would he not be in a tenfold stronger position than was Earl Grey in the House of Parliament in 1914? He could say to us, "Your executive department under this treaty has acted in good faith; we have been upon the ground; we have met with the other delegates; they told us the facts; we dare not convey them all to you, but we say that it is a matter of honor, and appeal to you to sustain the honor of the country. The technical power to refuse would remain with us, as it remained with Parliament, but the moral right or the moral power to refuse would be gone. Why delude ourselves with the perfectly fallacious proposition that the technical right would prevail?

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. Suppose the United States was not a member of the prospective four-power treaty, and, citing the very illustration which the Senator himself has given, that war was threatened in the Pacific, and that our possessions or interests in the Pacific were thereby imperiled; does the Senator believe that the United States under such circumstances, even though we were in no way, morally or legally, bound, because of not being a party to the pact, could be kept out of such a controversy, even to the extent of war, if war actually resulted? In other words, would it not be better to be a party to a four-power understanding, in order to discuss the possibilities, using our influence to prevent war, if possible, than not to be a party to it and necessarily to be drawn into the conflict ultimately in order to protect the interests and obligations which we have in the Pacific?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there is much in the suggestion of the able Senator from New Jersey which is worthy of consideration, but permit me to suggest this: Suppose an attack takes place upon the part of Russia. Senators will observe that the word "unprovoked" is left out of this treaty, although it was in the Anglo-Japanese alliance. It is in all of the oriental treaties which I have ever seen, but, for some reason or other, it slipped out of this treaty. I have no idea why it was left out. But suppose that Japan continues the aggression which she is now practicing in Siberia indisputably—practically nobody denies it—and suppose by reason of that situation Russia makes a formal attack, which under international law makes her the attacking party, although the other party may have provoked the attack; the United States, under this treaty, is bound to sit down and confer with Japan as to how to meet the attack.

It might be to the interest of the United States, both as a physical proposition and as a moral proposition, to sit down with Russia and decide how to meet the situation. It is this absolute freedom of choice that makes the United States to-day the practical umpire of the world. I want to be free to sit on the side of morality and justice, to confer with those whom we think righteous in their position, if we are to confer at all. We do not know where justice will lie, where humanity will lie, until the attack and all its circumstances are known; let us choose in that hour with whom we shall confer.

No nation can say now that the giant of the West is hamstrung or bound or embarrassed. She is free to cast her vote upon the side where she thinks righteousness and justice prevail and not upon the side of a contract entered into 10 years before the event may have happened. This liberty of action, this freedom to choose our conferees according to honor and justice at the time is the greatest force for righteousness in the whole world to-day.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. Did I understand the Senator to say that if Mr. Hughes attended a conference under this treaty he would be no more bound to agree to a war than if he attended any conference not provided for by treaty?

Mr. BORAH. I did not say that exactly, but I think I said about the same thing.

Mr. KELLOGG. Then, the idea of the Senator from Idaho is that we should never attend any conference to prevent war?

Mr. BORAH. I am deeply indebted to the Senator for interpreting my thoughts. I said we should be free to sit with those whom we think right, regardless of contracts or treaties.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Just a moment. I will say for the benefit of the Senator from Minnesota that the Senator from Idaho is in favor of a conference with any nation in the world whenever a controversy arises between that nation and the United States.

The Senator from Idaho is unalterably opposed to contracting in advance to conferring with any particular nation to take care of a war situation in which the United States may not be at all interested. If any controversy arose between the United States and Japan I should be in favor of a conference, but I am not in favor of the United States tying itself up to take any particular action with reference to an attack which may be made upon another nation, and I do not propose ever to vote for a treaty or bind the United States to take part in any quarrel except its own. I will not put upon the people an obligation to interfere in quarrels between other nations—let the people who, at the time will know the exact facts, and who will do the fighting and dying—let that generation pass upon who shall be their associates in a war between other powers.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, following my question as to which I should be very glad indeed if the able Senator would give his viewpoint, because I know it would be illuminating and very interesting, suppose, referring to the statement the Senator has just made, that a controversy between two other nations, without necessarily being a direct attack upon our possessions or upon our country, threatens those possessions, then does the Senator contend that the United States is better off not to have her representatives, her statesmen, participate in a conference called for the purpose of trying to prevent such a conflict?

Mr. BORAH. What I contend is that what we shall do in a conference and whom we shall sit with in a conference ought not to be determined in advance of the exigency, but ought to be determined at the time, because then we shall be free to sit upon either side, where we think justice is; in other words, when we sit in the conference which is provided for under the four-power treaty China is on the outside, so that we can not sit down and confer with China, and we can not sit down with Russia, because she is on the outside. Our associate and our conferee has been chosen five years, we will say, in advance of the controversy, and we do not know where justice, morality, and decency and Christianity may obtain with reference to the controversy.

Mr. POMERENE and Mr. NORRIS addressed the Chair.

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator has suggested, in answer to the last question put to him, that we would not be free in the event there should be a controversy between one of the other parties to the pending treaty and China or Russia to sit in conference with them. Could we not at the same time we were holding a conference with the other three members of the four-power pact also have a conference with China or with Russia bearing upon the same subject? Would we not be free to do that?

Mr. BORAH. Then, of course, if that be true, this treaty is worse than a nudum pactum. If we can sit down and confer with China regardless of the treaty when China is attacking our treaty associate, we can sit down and confer with Japan in case our interests are involved without any treaty. What is it for?

I now yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I was going to ask a question similar to that asked by the Senator from Ohio. Regardless of what the result may be—and that may be another question open to dispute—without agreeing for a moment to the conclusion which the Senator from Idaho has drawn, it does not seem to me that there is anything in this treaty that would prevent us, in the illustration, for instance, which the Senator from Idaho has given, of an attack being made by Russia or China, from taking the matter up with China or with Russia, as the case might be.

Mr. BORAH. If the attack were upon Japan or Great Britain?

Mr. NORRIS. We would be under obligations under this treaty to take it up with Japan if the attack was on Japan, but when we did take it up we could tell Japan, if we wanted to, if we thought it was the fact, that she was wrong. There would not be anything in this treaty to hinder us from doing that, and at the same time giving encouragement to the other party.

Mr. BORAH. Then, I again say that I do not know what this treaty is for. Mr. President, we will put the shoe on the other foot and suppose that some nation attacks the Philippine Islands, and we call for a conference and find that while we are in conference with Japan she is holding a conference upon the outside with the nation which is attacking us, how does the Senator think it would set with the American people? Suppose in 1914, when Germany was crossing Belgium, Great Britain had been found in conference with Germany, what would the whole world have said?

Mr. NORRIS. I should think Japan would not be violating the four-power treaty if she did that very thing, unless she concealed it and covered it up and failed to make us acquainted with it; in fact, if she had a free and fair conference and she thought we were wrong she ought to tell us face to face and make no secret of it.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator where he finds the obligation to go into a conference under article 2 at all? Does not the Senator make any distinction between article 1, which does obligate us to enter into a conference under certain circumstances, and article 2, which only obligates the parties to communicate fully and frankly with each other, which may be done wholly, and naturally would be, through diplomatic channels?

Mr. BORAH. It might be, but if so this treaty is absolutely unnecessary, because we have diplomatic channels open all the time.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; but there is no obligation upon the part of any one of the four powers to communicate fully and frankly through those diplomatic channels in a case such as has been cited.

Mr. BORAH. That is an obligation which is written in the consciousness and in the honor and in the decency of every nation, and in every principle of international law known to civilization, provided the controversy is between the United States and another power. Of course, we would not be bound to confer about another nation's attack and I do not want to agree to do so.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator contend that if Japan is attacked by Russia, without any treaty, there is any obligation upon the part of Japan to communicate fully and frankly concerning that transaction with the United States?

Mr. BORAH. I do not.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not.

Mr. BORAH. Then let us take another phase of it. Here is what this treaty says:

> If the said rights are threatened by the aggressive action of any other power, the high contracting parties shall communicate with one another fully and frankly.

That might be by conference.

Mr. LENROOT. It might be.

Mr. BORAH. Yes—well, that is all I contend.

Mr. LENROOT. But there is no obligation to do it by conference.

Mr. BORAH. I am discussing the other feature of it now. The Senator said there was no obligation here to do it by conference.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. I say that there is just as much obligation to communicate by conference as there is to communicate through diplomatic channels. It says that they shall communicate. It does not say "through diplomatic channels." It does not limit it to diplomatic channels. It might be through a conference, just the same as provided by article 1, and it was for that reason that I referred to it. In addition to that, I was taking the construction which the able Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] placed upon it, and the construction which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] placed upon it—that it provided for a conference. I am not at all concerned about whether it is by letter writing or face to face; but I can imagine that if it were a war situation it would likely be face to face.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the Senator think there is a very clear distinction? He spoke of the case of Mr. Hughes attending a conference, and entering into some moral obligation binding upon Congress, whereas under the language of article 2 the presumption is that the constitutional authorities of this Government will deal with that situation, and if an understanding is arrived at with reference to war it will be the Congress that enters into the understanding.

Mr. BORAH. But the trouble with that presumption is that it is refuted by the language of the treaty itself. Of course, if the Senator were correct, I again say that it seems to me the treaty would have no considerable effect one way or the other; but this treaty does not provide that the Congress shall do it. It says:

> If the said rights are threatened by the aggressive action of any other power, the high contracting parties shall communicate with one another fully and frankly in order to arrive at an understanding.

Does the Senator think that that really means that the Congress of the United States shall communicate with the Diet in Tokyo and with the House of Commons in London? Is not this clearly and necessarily an executive act? If war were imminent, would the Executive ask us to appoint a committee to confer? Banish the thought! It would both as a practical proposition and as a governmental proposition be carried on by the Executive or his agents. I am sure the Senator does not think this would be attended to by Congress.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not; but I do insist that before the executive department of the Government would have any right to state to the Government at Tokyo that an understanding had been entered into for the use of force upon the part of the United States it would be referred to Congress.

Mr. BORAH. Very well. I agree to that proposition. That is what I have been arguing all this afternoon.

Mr. LENROOT. We agree, then.

Mr. BORAH. I agree that our representative—the Secretary of State or whoever it was that had communicated with them—would do precisely as Sir Edward Grey did. He would say, "Thus and so is the relationship. You Members of Congress are perfectly free, as a contractual proposition and as a constitutional proposition, to decide adversely if you want to; but we have communicated with one another, and we tell you that this is the situation, and we say to you that it is our judgment that it is the only way to meet the situation, and we feel that we are in honor bound to carry it out in that way." That is all I contend for.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator has several times stressed the action of the British Government. Does the Senator think for a moment that the action of the British Government in declaring war was due to its friendship for France, or any implied obligation in the note of Sir Edward Grey, or does he think that Great Britain entered that war because she believed that her own vital interests were at stake?

Mr. BORAH. Now, the Senator has reached another proposition. I do not think that Great Britain ever entered a war in the world where she did not consider her vital interests at stake, and I do not think that any treaty that may be written will induce Great Britain to shed one drop of blood for the United States unless she thinks her vital interests are at stake. That is no reflection on Great Britain. That is the rule of all nations.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well. Then the Senator does not invoke this letter of Sir Edward Grey as the motive for England's entering into the war, as I supposed he did.

Mr. BORAH. No; the Senator misunderstands me again. I do not think the Senator really misunderstands me, however. The Senator says that I do not invoke that. I am telling you what Sir Edward Grey said to the House of Parliament—that by reason of the relationship which had sprung up through years and years of friendship between France and Great Britain the House of Parliament was in honor bound to vote that Great Britain should go to the protection of France. What I say is that if our representatives come back here and say the same thing to us—that by reason of the negotiations and correspondence which have taken place with Japan during the last five years they are of the opinion that it is to our interest to go into the war—it will have a powerful effect upon the Congress of the United States in driving them into the war. It is one of the things and one of the methods which may wholly blind the Congress or the people and mislead them as to their true interests.

Mr. LENROOT. If it is to our interest, of course.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator contend that we would not go into the war unless it was to our interest?

Mr. LENROOT. I understood from the argument the Senator was making that he was arguing that there was some kind of an obligation here, growing out of the relationship alone, that would at some time in the future, if the occasion arose, enable the executive department of this Government to come to Congress and say: "By reason of this relationship you are in honor bound to enter the war." If the Senator wishes to present a parallel case he must omit the words "if it is to our interest that we go in"; and I say that in that kind of a case, if the Executive says we are not bound, and there is no obligation—and there would not be—Congress will be entirely free to act.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand the Senator to contend that we, although this treaty were in existence, would never enter the war, if there were one, unless our vital interests induced us to enter it?

Mr. LENROOT. I did not understand the Senator's question.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand the Senator to contend that notwithstanding this treaty, and notwithstanding the fact that conditions might arise where under the treaty it would seem that we ought to enter a war, nevertheless we would not do so unless our individual, vital interests as a nation induced us to do so?

Mr. LENROOT. There might be a possibility, at some time to come, that that might be; but I can not conceive of the United States entering into a war where it does not consider that its own vital interests are concerned. That interest may not be direct. It may be indirect, of course.

Mr. REED. Then, Mr. President, if I understand the situation—and I have been trying to follow the debate—we get to this: We assume no obligation, and no other nation assumes any obligation of any kind, except that if a disturbance is threatened we will write a letter to each other, and then do exactly as we would have done if we had not written the letter—and yet they tell us that this is a great pact of peace that will preserve the peace of the Pacific for a thousand years!

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, we do not agree merely to write one letter. We agree to write everybody a letter.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I was, I confess, surprised at the Senator's statement in regard to Belgium, because I happened to be in London at the time the speech was made to which the Senator refers, and it left a very strong impression on my mind that what Sir Edward Grey put forward as the cause of the war was the obligation of England to Belgium. I have been looking up the report in Hansard, and the passage which the Senator read in regard to France occurs in column 1815. In column 1818, on the next page, Sir Edward Grey begins to talk about Belgium. He discusses Belgium from column 1818 to the close of his speech in column 1827. Then, when the Parliament came in in the evening, Sir Edward Grey made a very short statement which related to Germany's attitude toward Belgium, and he wound up with the sentence which amounted to saying that the Government must act. I will read only one passage, because I do not want to break in on the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Let me say to the Senator that I stated that the Belgian matter was discussed, but that it was only one of the things which were discussed.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; but the Senator said, as I understood him, that he was going to read the rest of the speech.

Mr. BORAH. I did read the rest of it. It was incorporated in the speeches of other Members.

Mr. LODGE. The rest of the speech after the passage which the Senator read, which is six or seven columns of Hansard, is entirely devoted to Belgium.

Mr. BORAH. No; it is not entirely devoted to Belgium.

Mr. LODGE. I think it is. I have just read it.

Mr. BORAH. Let the Senator go ahead and read it, then, if he thinks it is.

Mr. LODGE. It begins in column 1810:

I shall have to put before the House at some length what is our position in regard to Belgium.

Then he quotes from Mr. Gladstone, and traces all the past policy of the Government in regard to Belgium. Then, after saying:

I have one further quotation from Mr. Gladstone as to what he thought about the independence of Belgium—

Which is to the effect that—

We have an interest in the independence of Belgium which is wider than that which we may have in the literal operation of the guarantee.

He goes on to say:

No, sir; if it be the case that there has been anything in the nature of an ultimatum to Belgium, asking her to compromise or violate her neutrality, whatever may have been offered to her in return, her independence is gone if that holds. If her independence goes, the independence of Holland will follow. I ask the House, from the point of view of British interests, to consider what may be at stake. If France is beaten in a struggle of life and death, beaten to her knees, loses her position as a great power, becomes subordinate to the will and power of one greater than herself—consequences which I do not anticipate, because I am sure that France has the power to defend herself with all the energy and ability and patriotism which she has shown so often—still if that were to happen, and if Belgium fell under the same dominating influence, and then Holland, and then Denmark, then would not Mr. Gladstone's words come true, that just opposite to us there would be a common interest against the unmeasured aggrandizement of any power?

Then he says:

It may be said, I suppose, that we might stand aside, husband our strength—

And then he refers to the effect on trade, and he winds up that paragraph by saying:

I can only say that I have put the question of Belgium somewhat hypothetically, because I am not yet sure of all the facts, but if the facts turn to be as they have reached us at present it is quite clear that there is an obligation on this country to do its utmost to prevent the consequences to which those facts will lead if they are undisputed.

The rest of the speech is of a general character. Very little remains.

Then in the evening, when he came in, he said:

I want to give the House some information which I have received and which was not in my possession when I made my statement this afternoon. It is information I have received from the Belgian Legation in London, and is to the following effect:

"Germany sent yesterday evening at 7 o'clock a note proposing to Belgium friendly neutrality, covering free passage on Belgian territory, and promising maintenance of independence of the Kingdom and possession at the conclusion of peace, and threatening, in case of refusal, to treat Belgium as an enemy. A time limit of 12 hours was fixed for the reply. The Belgians have answered that an attack on their neutrality would be a flagrant violation of the rights of nations and that to accept the German proposal would be to sacrifice the honor of a nation. Conscious of its duty, Belgium is firmly resolved to repel aggression by all possible means." Of course, I can only say that the Government is prepared to take into grave consideration the information which it has received. I make no further comment upon it.

I can not find that he spoke again on the 3d of August. That concludes his speech.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho let me ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. McCORMICK. Does the Senator from Massachusetts remember how often the occupation or invasion of the Lowlands was a cause for war on the part of Great Britain against a great continental power? Three times or four times, at least; was it not?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. McCORMICK. It is the traditional policy of the British Empire, is it not, that no great power shall hold Antwerp?

Mr. LODGE. Absolutely. The only point I wanted to bring out was that Sir Edward Grey gave very great weight to the affair of Belgium—more, I think, than the Senator from Idaho attributed to him.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have said that Sir Edward Grey included in his reasons the question of Belgium. He also included the proposition of the general commercial interests of Great Britain.

Mr. LODGE. Yes. He devoted the larger part of his speech to Belgium, I think.

Mr. BORAH. He might have devoted the larger part of his speech to it for the simple reason that he went into a historical survey of the Belgium matter. But if the Senator will read the debate which took place upon the part of those who were replying to Sir Edward Grey, he will find that they all referred to the appeal which he had made as a matter of honor to stand by France by reason of the close friendship which had grown up under this understanding.

Mr. LODGE. I can not answer that without reading the debate which followed his speech and which is not long. As I say, I happened to be in London at the time, and I followed with great closeness the debate, which was fully reported, of course, from day to day. While I can not trust my memory for details so far, at the same time the very strong impression left on my mind was that the leading point in Sir Edward Grey's famous statement of August 3 was the German invasion of Belgium.

Mr. BORAH. It might have been the leading point in the mind of the Senator from Massachusetts, and I may be in error, but there is no possible doubt but that Sir Edward Grey made an appeal to the House of Parliament based upon the relation of friendship between Great Britain and France arising out of the negotiations, which, however, he said did not legally bind them to enter the war.

Mr. LODGE. That is quite true. The Senator read that passage, and I have reread it.

Mr. BORAH. That is all that I have contended for, and it is all I contend for now.

The Senator from Massachusetts has referred to the Belgian treaty, and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] has intimated that England has always stood by the Belgian treaty. Did she stand by it in 1870?

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator from Illinois did not say that.

Mr. LODGE. I did not know that Belgium and Holland were involved in the war of 1870.

Mr. BORAH. Then the Senator ought to refer to the speech which impressed him so much when he was in London, because Sir Edward Grey referred specifically and at length to that proposition.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, he quotes Gladstone and others as to the history of the past; but certainly Belgium and Holland were not in danger in the war of 1870.

Mr. BORAH. They were considered to be in danger, and I will read to the Senator what Mr. Gladstone said.

Mr. LODGE. That may or may not be. My point was that the Belgian matter had a great deal to do with the action of Sir Edward Grey in presenting the subject to the House of Commons.

Mr. BORAH. I have not disputed that, and neither did I state that it did not have anything to do with it; but does the Senator contend that that was the only reason?

Mr. LODGE. No; I do not contend that that was the only reason. I contend that that was the reason that brought war immediately.

Mr. BORAH. But the Senator does not contend that that was the only reason that Sir Edward Grey assigned for entering the war?

Mr. LODGE. No. He stated the aspect of the French question, of course.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly. Then, there is no difference of recollection between the Senator and myself.

Mr. LODGE. Except that I thought the Senator rather passed over hastily the Belgian part of it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, is my memory at fault? In 1870 did not the British Government ask and receive assurances from the belligerents that they would respect Belgian neutrality?

Mr. BORAH. I will read what Gladstone said—he perhaps knows better—and I will read what Sir Edward Grey said. We have plenty of time. This is Sir Edward Grey speaking:

What was our own attitude? The people who laid down the attitude of the British Government were Lord Granville, in the House of Lords, and Mr. Gladstone, in the House of Commons. Lord Granville, on the 8th of August, 1870, used these words. He said—

I will not quote Granville's words, because they are irrelevant.

Mr. Gladstone spoke as follows two days later:

There is, I admit, the obligation of the treaty.

Speaking of the treaty with reference to the neutrality of Belgium.

It is not necessary, nor would time permit me, to enter into the complicated question of the nature of the obligations of that treaty; but I am not able to subscribe to the doctrine of those who have held in this House what plainly amounts to an assertion that the simple fact of the existence of a guaranty is binding on every party to it, irrespectively altogether of the particular position in which it may find itself at the time when the occasion for acting on the guaranty arises.

Therefore, Mr. Gladstone insisted that while the treaty was an obligation and the guaranty existed, the situation was so changed that England reserved the right to disregard the guaranty if her interests lay in that direction.

It was not by reason of the existence of the Belgian treaty, because they had refused to recognize the guaranty in 1870 as binding regardless of the position which they might occupy. It was because the position was different under the guaranty in 1914 from what it was in 1870.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I have suggested that the British policy in 1870, as in 1914, was a traditional British policy, from which the British Government departed sometimes, a policy that Belgium should not fall into the hands of a stronger power, and that that was the motive which led the Government in 1870 to ask for the assurances from Prussia and from France.

Mr. BORAH. But that was not what led Mr. Gladstone to say that, regardless of the guaranty, England would not be bound by the guaranty if her position was not in harmony with the guaranty.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. REED. Does not the position taken by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], to wit, that England went into the late war not because of the treaty but solely because of her interests, lead to this, that in the present instance she would have no regard for her treaty, but would only have regard for her interests, so that all we are coming to is that we are going to agree, in the event of a disturbance, to confer? We are not to be bound by the contract, and every nation is to be free to decide according to its own interests at the time, and will be governed by its own interests at the time.

If that is the case, then this obligation or this treaty gives us no assurance, and we will continue, after it is entered into, just as we are now, governed by our own interests, and each nation will be governed by the same principle. That is to say, the whole thing is something worse than a farce, and yet we are asked to rely upon it to reduce our armaments in accordance with another treaty which they say depends upon it; yield the right to fortify our possessions in the Pacific; yield the right to fortify the islands clear at the north, thousands of miles from Japan; and to place ourselves in such a position that if Japan and England saw fit to act jointly against us we could be overwhelmed almost in a day upon the ocean.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in view of the somewhat distracted presentation of the question of Sir Edward Grey's speech, let me restate it briefly, so that it may appear in the RECORD as I understand it.

Sir Edward Grey appeared upon the 3d of August and presented the reasons why in his judgment it would be necessary for England to take up arms. One of the strong reasons which he presented was the relationship existing between France and Great Britain by reason of their being members of the entente. If there is a single historian who has interpreted the speech otherwise, I have not been able to find him.

Another reason which was presented was the Belgian treaty. A third reason was that it would interfere with the commercial interests of Great Britain should Germany succeed at the end of the war. Those three reasons I concede were all presented. I was not interested in presenting any but the one which I thought was applicable to this particular treaty, to wit, that by reason of the relationship between the three powers owing to their membership in the Entente as a matter of honor Great Britain had to enter the war. I say that that is the construction which has been placed upon the speech time out of mind by other writers and speakers, and which I think admits of no controversy. Of course, the Belgian matter enters into it, and, of course, the question of the commercial supremacy of Germany entered into it, too. There is no doubt about that. But by reason of the fact that they were all members of the Entente, the other question was appealed to as a matter of honor.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, the Senator will admit, I am sure, that if Great Britain had not been a member of the Entente the other two reasons would have been quite sufficient to engulf them in the war, will he not?

Mr. BORAH. I presume they would. I think the threat of the commercial supremacy of Germany would have engulfed them in the war.

I had intended to refer to the practical execution of article 2. I state again that I do not claim that article 2 takes away from Congress the power to declare war. Neither did the covenant of the League of Nations, and it could not. You can not take away the power of Congress to declare war by treaty. What we contended for then, and what I contend for now, is that it superimposed a situation which made Congress nothing more than the nominal executor of a decree which had been reached by an agent.

So I come back to Article II for a practical construction of it, and a practical execution of it. It reads:

> If the said rights are threatened by the aggressive action of any other power, the high contracting parties shall communicate with one another fully and frankly.

They may do that by letter, they may do that by conference. They may do it in any way which at the time appeals to them as the most efficient method, but they are to communicate fully and frankly, and interchange views. For what purpose? For the purpose of arriving at an understanding, an agreement, a conclusion. That is the purpose of the meeting. Secondly, an understanding for what purpose?

> As to the most efficient measures to be taken jointly or separately to meet the exigency.

What exigency? The attack, the aggression. So they have communicated; they have met, they have conferred, they have arrived at an understanding, and the understanding is as to the best method of meeting the aggression.

They do not have to decide, of course, under this treaty that the only way to meet it is by war. But does any Senator contend that that is excluded? If you look at the Root-Takahira agreement, or if you look at the agreement between Russia and Japan in 1916, you will find the word "pacific." You will find the language "employ pacific measures to meet the exigency." The word "pacific" is not in this treaty. Mr. Root was familiar with the term; he had used it. It was in a previous understanding which he had written. It was in the treaty between Japan and Russia, "to arrive at an understanding as to the most pacific measures to meet the situation," or as to the "pacific measures." If they had desired to limit the jurisdiction of this conference to "pacific" measures, why did they not insert the word which would do the business?

They left it open for the conference to have full jurisdiction. They can meet the exigency by a blockade; they can meet it in any way which suggests itself to them; they can meet it by determining upon war. I think no one will controvert the proposition that it is within their power to decide that; and, then, if we assume that a conference has taken place, and they have decided upon war as the most efficient measure, what is the duty of Congress? Or suppose they do not actually conclude the understanding, but after communication they report to Congress that in their opinion the exigency is a grave one and can only be met by armed forces, will not Congress be in honor bound to send armed forces? Will we quit while our associate under the treaty is under fire, or will we meet marching troops by a pious ejaculation that they should be ashamed of themselves and go home?

I agree that, of course, they have a perfect right to reject the report. So said Earl Grey to the Parliament, "You have a perfect right to do so." But the relationship which has sprung up between Japan and the United States by reason of these negotiations is such that we feel that we are in honor bound to go ahead with it. It might not be the controlling influence of Congress, even, but does anybody doubt that Congress would be under a moral obligation to carry that out? I can not understand the compact in any other light.

Mr. President, having agreed upon this measure which involves war, it is presented. Then the acute mind of the Senator from Connecticut will prompt him to say to the President, when he presents the result of the conference, "Oh, Mr. President, we put into this treaty a reservation that this is not an alliance."

"Oh, yes, certainly," the President would say, "It is not an alliance. I am not contending that it is an alliance. But you did leave it open for the delegates or conferees to arrive at an understanding as to the most efficient measure to meet the situation, and I am telling you that we have arrived at thus and so."

Then the reservation would be quoted again to the effect that we are not committed to the use of force, and the President would be told, "Mr. President, that was written into the treaty in the way of a reservation." The President would say, "Certainly you are not committed. I tell you that you are free. You have the right under the Constitution to decide against it if you wish to; but I am saying to you that your conferees, whom you have designated under this treaty to confer, have met, and they know the situation, and there is only one way, in our judgment, to meet it, and that is by the use of the Army and the Navy."

Then the reservation would be read to a further extent as providing that we are not obligated to defend, and again the President might very well say, "Certainly, you are not obligated to defend. I tell you that you are not obligated to defend; but I say to you that you have authorized us, under the treaty, to arrive at an understanding as to the most efficient measure. We say to you that there is no way to meet the situation except by a war. A million of Trotski's men are marching now to the lower end of Sakhalin, and there is no way to meet it except to send forces there to assist our colleagues. I leave it to you. It is a matter of honor. You can execute it if you like. You can refuse it if you like." Let me make a suggestion to you gentlemen who are fond of reservations, if you want to serve the cause of peace limit the powers of the conferees—write into this treaty before the measure the word "pacific" and write into the treaty before the word "aggressive" the word "unprovoked," and you will greatly serve the cause of peace in the Far East.

Is the Congress of the United States free?

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the Senator who he thinks would have a right to commit the United States to any understanding under the treaty?

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator means to conclude an understanding by declaring war, for instance, I agree that only the Congress could; but what I am saying is that they have met and conferred as to the most efficient means to meet the situation, and that drives home and consummates the understanding.

Mr. LENROOT. Again I call the Senator's attention to the fact that Article II does not provide for a conference, and presumably if a conference is held, it will only be held after we clothe the agents of the United States with power.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this is supposed to clothe them with power.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, it does not; not under Article II, because there is no provision for a conference there.

Mr. BORAH. I say that very clearly there is a provision for a conference. If the Senator reads the speech of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], he will come to the conclusion that that is the construction which he placed upon it, and that is the construction which the Senator from Massachusetts placed upon it.

Of course, Mr. President, we always get to the point, in considering these treaties which obligate the United States to do something, where it is said they mean nothing and obligate us to nothing. The Senator from Alabama said, in answer to a question from the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], that in his opinion Article II amounted to nothing, and that, so far as he was concerned, he would just as soon see it stricken out. Of course, if that is the construction to be placed upon it, let us strike it out, and when we strike out, the debate will end in 10 minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, of course there is an obligation under Article II, very clearly expressed, and the obligation is to communicate freely and frankly with the other powers concerning the particular matter covered by Article II; but that is the only obligation. There is no one more conversant with the usages of international law in diplomatic matters than the Senator from Idaho, and he knows that the ordinary, usual thing done where that language is used is to communicate through diplomatic correspondence.

Mr. BORAH. Let us suppose it is done by diplomatic correspondence, and let us suppose that this diplomatic correspondence, for the first time in the history of the world, is written so that everybody can understand it, and let us suppose that Mr. Hughes writes a letter to Japan and Japan writes a letter back and says, "This is the situation: We see no other way to meet this situation except by armed force."

Mr. Hughes communicates this message in reply: "We understand your contention to be so and so," and he, as the Secretary of State, concludes that that is true. He has no power, I am perfectly willing to agree, to bind us, but then he comes to the Congress of the United States with his communication, and presents the communication instead of the result of a conference, and the communication discloses to Congress that there is no way to meet the situation except by armed force. What will the Congress do? It is in honor bound to carry it out; there is no question about it at all.

Mr. KELLOGG. Would the Congress be any more honor bound to carry it out than if Mr. Hughes should make the same communication without a treaty?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. KELLOGG. Why?

Mr. GLASS. Then what do we want with the treaty?

Mr. KELLOGG. We want an understanding or agreement that they will consult or communicate with each other to avoid war.

Mr. GLASS. If an understanding or an agreement is meaningless, of what worth is it?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, of course, it does not do any credit to the able men who met in that conference to have written a treaty which has no significance at all, and it does not do any credit to their standing as men to come here and say to us that a treaty which imposes no obligation is the basis of the world's peace.

Is the world's peace such a simple thing, after all, that you can end war and have eternal peace by simply making an understanding that we will communicate with one another, but that the communication binds nobody, in honor or anything else, to follow out the judgment of those who may communicate?

Senators say that a conference, either direct or indirect, by letter or otherwise, will result in peace in the Pacific. Then, Mr. President, why not invite more nations into the conference? If all we need to secure the peace of the world is a conference which binds no one, which obligates no one, which leaves us perfectly free after we have conferred, why not, instead of going to Tokyo, go to Geneva? There are 42 nations conferring there.

Mr. KING. There are fifty-odd now.

Mr. POINDEXTER. One answer to that question is that, so far as the United States is concerned, we are not apprehensive of trouble at Geneva, but a great many people were apprehensive that we might have trouble in the Pacific. That is the distinguishing circumstance.

Mr. BORAH. That is a distinction, and, in the light of 1914, it is a conclusive distinction! We did not apprehend any trouble in Europe in 1912. One of the distinguished leaders of American thought, a great educationalist, stated in a speech in 1912 that anybody who talked about a war in Europe was more or less inclined to be insane. We did not expect any trouble even in 1914, but the war broke out in Europe and it reached us. There is infinitely more discontent, more trouble, more sorrow, more misery, more seeds of war in Europe to-day than there are in the Pacific.

Mr. EDGE. The Great War involved us also without our being a member of the entente. Why would not war reach us in the Pacific in the same way?

Mr. BORAH. Of course, I am not contending that we can prevent war either with or without a conference. What I am contending for is the doctrine for which we have stood for 150 years, that when war comes we will decide for ourselves, without any previous binding obligation, where justice, honor, and morality lie, and will go in on that side, if the interests of our country require us to go in at all.

Mr. EDGE. We would decide the question anyway——

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from New Jersey says, we would decide the question anyway without the treaty.

Mr. EDGE. I did not say without the treaty; I said without being bound.

Mr. BORAH. Very well. In view of that, I do not see why Senators do not adopt without hesitancy the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. The Senator from Arkansas has proposed an amendment which calls Russia and Japan into conference. If conference is a good thing, let us have some more of it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But if it is a bad thing, we ought not to have too much of it.

Mr. BORAH. If it is a bad thing the true rule is to have none of it. Washington thought it a bad thing, and he therefore spent no time upon the meaning of words or the shades of language. He rejected the whole scheme of political connections with foreign powers.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I suggest that the reservation suggested by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] is much better and more acceptable than the reservation which has been proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. With all due respect to the Senator from Arkansas, if he will merely put into his reservation a phrase that is sometimes quoted with reference to the doctrine of foreordination, that what is to be will be whether it ever happens or not, we shall have no trouble; and if the Senator will just put into his reservation to the treaty that "we are going to ratify this treaty, but we are not going to be bound by it after we ratify it, and will act just as we would have acted if we had not signed it," there can be no trouble about ending this debate and going on with some other business.

Mr. EDGE. It seems to me that we are getting in almost the same position that we occupied when we dealt with the Democratic League of Nations treaty. After adopting by a majority vote various reservations to that treaty, the majority of the Senate, at least, came to the conclusion that we were not bound morally or legally, with the reservations adopted, to enter war under the thus revised terms of admission to the League of Nations. So far as binding us to war is concerned, I view this four-power treaty, without reservations, as practically occupying a parallel position with the League of Nations treaty with reservations, and I wonder sometimes why our distinguished friends on the other side of the aisle, who were perfectly willing to accept the League of Nations without reservations, are so much opposed to this treaty. Surely they can not contend that we would have been as free from possible war entanglements under the league commitment as under the four-power conference?

Mr. BORAH. "A Daniel come to judgment!" You have said it all. This scheme has all the vices and not one of the virtues of the league.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey has in one sentence said more to incline some of us to the view of the Senator from Idaho than has been said all day.

Mr. EDGE. I am glad I have so much influence with the Senator.

Mr. STANLEY. If the Senator from Idaho will pardon me, I wish most heartily to welcome the Senator from New Jersey into our homeopathic school of thought. I do not believe, however, he quotes this side correctly when he says we are violently opposed to this treaty. For one I have never been violently opposed to the treaty. It does not fill me with apprehension, but at times such contentions inspire aversion or disgust.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to discuss for a few minutes the Anglo-Japanese alliance. Just a few words upon that and I shall close, if I may be permitted to do so. The first Anglo-Japanese alliance was entered into on January 30, 1902. I wish to read merely a paragraph or two from it. It provides:

> The Governments of Great Britain and Japan, actuated solely by a desire to maintain the status quo and general peace in the extreme East, being moreover specially interested in maintaining the independence and territorial integrity of the Empire of China and the Empire of Korea, and in securing equal opportunities in those countries for the commerce and industry of all nations, hereby agree as follows:
> ARTICLE 1. The high contracting parties having mutually recognized the independence of China and of Korea, declare themselves to be entirely uninfluenced by any aggressive tendencies in either country.

That is the treaty of 1902. It will be observed, Mr. President, that under the treaty of 1902 both countries recognized and were to respect the independence and integrity of China and Korea. Under the treaty of 1905 Korea is left out for the reason that Korea was soon to pass under the domination and control of Japan.

We also had a treaty with Korea by which we agreed to interpose our good offices in case the independence of Korea were assailed. Notwithstanding, when the independence of Korea became involved we did not interpose any objection whatever to the process of amalgamation which took place upon the part of Japan. That treaty, which was written to establish peace in the Far East and to preserve the territorial integrity and independence of China and Korea, was used and made available for the very purpose of incorporating Korea under the domination of Japan, and under the same treaty the aggressions which are now a matter of dispute and which may lead to war upon the part of China took place. The treaty, which was signed for the purpose of preserving the peace of the Far East, has neither preserved the peace nor has it preserved the integrity of those countries which it was made particularly to preserve.

However, it is said, notwithstanding that fact, one of the great objects of this treaty is to get rid of the Anglo-Japanese alliance. The Anglo-Japanese alliance of 1911, according to its terms, does not apply to the United States.

The United States is excepted not by name but by reason of a provision in the treaty, and that exception has been indorsed by Great Britain and also accepted by Japan. Nevertheless, the country does not feel at ease, it is said, because of the existence of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, and it is necessary to get rid of it. That may be true—I do not know; I am not going to argue that question—but I want to ask Senators if they think the United States is uneasy by reason of the alliance between Great Britain and Japan, how do they think Russia and China will feel when this alliance or this grouping is completed by the ratification of the pending treaty? How will they look upon this treaty? They will regard it as a grouping of these four powers to continue the same aggression and the same conduct that took place under the Anglo-Japanese alliance; and before half of the term of 10 years has passed we will see the nations of the Pacific, Russia and China, and also Germany, which will ultimately have its interest there, and other nations forming a counter group; and we will have succeeded in transferring to the Pacific the old system of political groupings which has tormented and tortured Europe for 300 years. That will be the result, and the only result, in my judgment, of the ratification of the four-power alliance. I trust I am for peace. God knows I want to serve that cause if I can find out the way to do so. I do not want to err in that vital, soul-absorbing question. But when I look back over the bloody past, with its dead and diseased and insane, and recognize as the most prolific source of all this unspeakable misery this system of political grouping, this system of the balance of power, I have not the courage to tell the people of my country that to continue that system means peace. From my view it would be a cowardly falsehood, a shameless deception, a brazen betrayal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to Article I.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I hope that the Senator in charge of the treaty will not insist on a vote to-night. There are a number of Senators who I know want to have something to say in reference to it. We have listened to two very powerful speeches to-day, and I want to ask if we can not take up some other business? I desire to say something about the treaty myself, but I should prefer not to do so now.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the same statement substantially is made every evening. We have now had the treaty before us for nearly two weeks, and I think we can devote to-day to it. I do not see why we should not vote on the pending amendment.

Mr. REED. I have given the only reason there is, namely, that there are other Senators who desire to speak on the question. There is an important bill that we could just as well take up.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think we should take that bill up now.

Mr. REED. Of course, if the Senator insists on proceeding with the consideration of the treaty, we can go ahead.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I desire to modify the pending amendment, so as to make it comport more nearly with other provisions of the treaty, by inserting after the word "controversy," in line 6, the words "relating to said insular rights and possessions or to any far eastern question"; and in line 11, after the word "subject," by striking out "will" and inserting "shall," so that the amendment as modified will read:

> Each of the high contracting parties will respect the rights and possessions of all other nations and refrain from all acts of aggression against any other power or powers. If there should develop between any of the high contracting parties and any other power or powers a controversy relating to said insular rights and possessions or to any far eastern question which is not satisfactorily settled by diplomacy and is likely to affect the harmonious accord subsisting between any party or parties to this compact and any other power or powers, the high contracting parties shall invite all powers claiming an interest in the controversy to a joint conference to which the whole subject will be referred for consideration and adjustment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas as modified.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it has been said that this treaty can not be considered as a proposition by itself; that it is intermixed with the other treaties; and that, in fact, all of the treaties are a part of one plan. The debate of to-day has demonstrated the fact that the proponents of the treaty are driven to the doctrine that the treaty means nothing, binds us to nothing, and binds no other nation to anything. They argue that the treaty ought to be accepted because it does not mean anything; that when the treaty has been ratified all that the nations have agreed to do under Article II, which is the bone of contention, is to communicate with each other; that the communications may be by diplomatic correspondence or they may be by conference; that the obligation is strictly limited to the matter of communicating, and when the communications have been had the obligation is discharged. That has been asserted over and over again, in substance and effect, by all of the defenders of the treaty this afternoon; and yet we are told that a treaty whose proponents are forced to defend it upon the ground that it does nothing, that it binds no nation to do anything except to write some letters, is a guaranty of peace in the Pacific, and that on the strength of it we should reduce our armaments, give up the right to complete the fortifications we have begun in the Pacific, and trust ourselves to the security of a treaty which does not even give us the promise of assistance in case of attack!

That is the situation reduced to a direct statement. Moreover, we are told by one of the chief proponents of this treaty that even if we were to come to an agreement which had some substance and effect to it, no nation would be bound by it, but each would be governed by its interest when the emergency arose. It is argued that Great Britain did not go into the European war because of any obligation she had undertaken, that she went in for the cold, selfish reason that a menace to Belgium was a menace to Great Britain, and that if it had not been for the selfish interest of Great Britain she would have remained outside the conflict. So we are told that our associates will not even be bound by the letter of the contract to interpose in defense of the purposes of the treaty. But we are also told that even if they were so bound they would be governed entirely by their own interests and would have no consideration for the language of the treaty.

Why was that position maintained here to-day? Because the logic of the situation drives the proponents of this treaty to take that particular ground or else to admit that the United States is bound, for we can not claim that other nations are bound to come to our support unless we are correspondingly bound to go to their support. Neither can it be claimed that the treaty has virtue and power within its four corners to protect us unless we admit that it has power within its four corners to bring us to the protection of our associates. Fearful to present that issue and that duty fairly to the American people, and knowing that the American people are committed against all kinds of alliances, the proponents of the treaty now weakly contend that the document is a cipher, that it amounts to nothing except a promise to indulge in diplomatic correspondence should another nation enter the waters of the Pacific and interfere with the island possessions of any of the contracting parties, but that when you have written the letters your obligation is discharged and you are required to do nothing further.

Mr. President, is that the "guaranty of the peace of the Pacific" of which we have heard? Is that the guaranty upon the strength of which, we are told, disarmament is to take place? Are we to go forth and sink our battleships, which cost many millions of money, because nations have simply agreed that in the event of a dispute with an outside power their ambassadors will write letters to each other? The truth is that the proponents of the treaty put themselves out of court by the plea that they are accomplishing nothing whatever of any value.

I heard that argument made before, with reference to another treaty; and the astounding thing that I find confronting me today is that while at that time there were on the other side of this Chamber a certain determined body of men who declared that the language of article 10 was an exact obligation, and that it must be redeemed, and that they never would give their consent to the making of any kind of obligation which bound us in honor to enter into conflicts originating between other nations than ourselves, a number of those gentlemen who, by the record solemnly made and written, declared that the language of article 10 which has been quoted here so often did bind us, are now asserting that similar language does not bind us, and are making the identical arguments which were then made by some gentlemen who insisted that we could afford to accept article 10 upon the theory that article 10 bound us to do nothing. That was not contended by all; but I am astounded to find the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK], and others of that band who delighted in the name of "irreconcilables," now willing to take exactly the same kind of medicine which they then declared to be rank and deadly poison. The only difference between the two kinds of medicine on this particular point is that in one case it was offered by a Democratic President and in the other case it is offered in a spoon held in the hand of a Republican President.

These gentlemen were very patriotic at the time to which I refer. They declared that they put the question entirely above politics and that they were governed only by the welfare of their country. They insisted that the language of article 10 which provided that the council of the league should advise as to the means which should be adopted to repel an attack bound us to follow that advice. Now we find the same gentlemen in the closest kind of communion with the mild reservationists insisting that almost identical language in this treaty binds us to do nothing whatever.

But, aside from the personal aspect, let it now go to the country that it stands admitted by the proponents of this pact, and as their sole defense of the pact, that it binds no nation to do more than merely to write a letter, which it would do or might do anyway; that it is further stated that when they have written the letter to their associates in this agreement they are not bound to follow the opinions that may be expressed as a result of the literary and diplomatic correspondence; and, finally, that they are at perfect liberty, while negotiating with their associates, to carry on negotiations with the antagonists of their associates. If that does not make of this proposition something worse than a roaring farce, then I am unable to understand that which is ludicrous.

Let us apply the arguments for a moment and see where they will bring us. We are making this pact now, we are told, to preserve the peace of the Pacific, and Article II has relation to attacks by powers outside the membership of the pact. An attack is made upon the possessions of the United States, and the United States thereupon proceeds diplomatically, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] says, to take up the question, and to write some letters to Japan with reference to it, or to Great Britain, to which they reply; and now, having written back to us, they have fulfilled their obligations under the pact completely, according to the statements that have been made here this afternoon. But at the same time that they are writing to us they are writing to the country that is making the attack, and they are as much at liberty to come to an agreement with that country as they are to come to an agreement with us. They have no restrictions whatever upon them by virtue of this agreement; and, accordingly, while they are writing letters to us and refusing to agree with us or to come to our rescue, they are writing letters to the enemy that has attacked us, and are at perfect liberty to close the bargain with that enemy.

That is not argument. That is not sophistry, for sophistry implies at least the faint auroral imitation of common sense and reason. That is a complete destruction of every argument that can be put forth in favor of this pact. It renders the treaty at best a cipher. It renders it at worst something that is intended to lull us to sleep, and to convince us of a security which does not exist, and possibly to make us the prey of nations that may see fit to attack us.

That is a fair summing up of the argument that has been produced here this afternoon. How does it contrast with the facts as stated to the great American public?

We were told that because of this agreement between the four powers in the Pacific such a concert of action was assured that no nation would ever dare interfere with the peace of the Pacific. We were told that we could substitute for the security of ships and fortresses and cannon and arms this great pact, because it brought to our support the strength of Great Britain, the strength of Japan, and the strength of France. Now we are told that they are not bound to come with their strength, that they are under no obligation to do anything except to have one diplomatic agency write a letter to another diplomatic agency, and that is the end of the matter!

Is that the meaning of this pact? Is that what it was believed to mean? Or is that a baseless argument produced by men who dare not face the meaning of their instrument? I assert that it is the latter. There is no reason for writing the document at all if it means what has been contended this afternoon, namely, nothing. There is no use in ruining good paper to set down an agreement in solemn form that you will do nothing. The treaty is an agreement, and the proponents of the treaty dare not face the matter. If the treaty meant what they contend, then they would accept a reservation that would remove all doubt; but if they dared face the true intendment and purport of this treaty, they would admit its purposes upon this floor, and stand in defense of those purposes.

The singular thing is that we find the very men who denounced the League of Nations upon the ground that it carried implied obligations now supporting an instrument which carries as clearly the same character of obligations. Thus we witness the fact that even the greatest statesmen, who most often proclaim that their patriotism is beyond politics and that all political obligations end at the ocean's shore, are nevertheless willing to do at the behest of a Republican President that which they most vigorously denounced when it was proposed by a Democratic President.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. REED. I am perfectly willing to yield.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to ask if we can not take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock, with the understanding that we shall vote at a reasonable time on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]? I suggest 4 o'clock as the time for voting on that amendment, with a recess until 12 o'clock.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not see why we may not take a vote at 3 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. SWANSON. That would possibly necessitate a recess until 11 o'clock, and I do not see anything to be accomplished by meeting at that hour.

Mr. LODGE. That would give us at least an hour additional.

Mr. SWANSON. This is a very important matter, and several Senators desire to be heard on the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest that we meet at 11 o'clock and vote at 3 o'clock.

Mr. REED. So far as I am concerned, I think that we ought not to vote on this amendment to-morrow or next week, but I will not stand in the way of others if they want to agree to vote to-morrow. However, if we make such an agreement, I desire a recess or an adjournment until 12 o'clock, and that the vote be not taken until at least 4 o'clock.

Mr. SWANSON. I think 4 o'clock is a reasonable hour, and I believe the Senator from Massachusetts would get along better by consenting to such an arrangement. Mr. President, I make that request for unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the request for unanimous consent.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent that at not later than 4 o'clock to-morrow, Tuesday, March 14, 1922, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon the pending amendment, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to Article I.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, if that request is agreed to, of course, some arrangement ought to be made in regard to the time allotted for debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent?

Mr. REED. Just a moment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield for a moment?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I desire to discuss the suggestion which was made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] during the course of the address of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. It seems that the Senator from Wisconsin, for some reason which he did not quite make clear to me, takes the position that a conference under Article II is improbable, and that the method of communication likely to be adopted by the four parties to the treaty in the case of aggressive action by an outside power against any one of them is the ordinary diplomatic process.

I think upon reflection Senators will agree that such processes would hardly be a practicable means of communication among the four powers. Where the parties to communicate are limited in number to two, I know of no reason why communications may not occur through the ordinary diplomatic processes, but where there are four parties to a treaty, and they undertake in the treaty to communicate with each other fully and frankly, I maintain that clearly the conference method is the logical and necessary method, if the communications are to be frank and full.

If the ordinary diplomatic method of writing notes be resorted to in such cases, the conclusion to be arrived at through the processes of communication would be indefinitely delayed. Furthermore, it would be necessary for the Secretary of State, for instance, to inform Japan of all he had communicated to Great Britain and France, and after replies to his communications the same process would be required as to each of the other members of the alliance or compact, so that it would be very difficult, if not impracticable, to carry out an agreement to communicate fully and frankly by the usual process of writing notes. A conference of some form would be the natural, the reasonable, and the logical process of carrying on the communications, and I do not understand why the Senator from Wisconsin should want to get away from the theory of conferences, since it seems to be advanced by the proponents of this treaty as a great step forward toward securing the peace of the world.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, what difference would it make whether the communication was by notes or by special agents? What advantage does the Senator from Wisconsin think he offers by saying it would be through the regular diplomatic channels?

Mr. ROBINSON. I can not read the mind of my friend the Senator from Wisconsin, but I assume—and if I am not correct in the assumption he will correct me—that the purpose of submitting this proposal was to escape the contention of the Senator from Idaho that the meeting in conference under the terms of Article II implied obligations growing out of the conclusions reached by the conference.

Mr. REED. He thought he had backed off a little further.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is an undiplomatic way of expressing it.

Mr. LENROOT. Just a word with reference to the statement made by the Senator from Arkansas. The Senator must admit that under article 1 there is an obligation to have a conference. The Senator must likewise admit that there is no such obligation under Article II. The only obligation under Article II is to communicate fully and frankly with each other.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think I can shorten this feature of the debate very materially. I admit, as I think every other Senator will admit, that the process of communication provided for in Article II is not specifically defined, and that the powers will therefore be at liberty to adopt any process which pleases them, and which they think is suitable to their purpose. I make the further observation, and express it as my opinion, that they will likely adopt the conference process, because the method of writing diplomatic notes will not furnish a speedy and practicable means of communication under Article II, there being four powers to communicate.

Mr. LENROOT. I was about to follow what I started to say with just this statement, that a very good reason exists for the different treatment in Article II from that which is accorded in Article I. Article I provides for a conference in which any dispute affecting the rights covered by the treaty shall be considered. There can be no new arrangement outside of the terms of that treaty under Article I. There can be no new obligation incurred under Article I. There may be new obligations incurred under Article II, but there being no obligation to go into conference, the inference is irresistible that the framers of that article had in mind that the United States could only be committed to an understanding in a certain way, and that it could not be committed in conference.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I would like to have my request for unanimous consent stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the request for unanimous consent.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT.

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 4 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Tuesday, March 14, 1922, the Senate will proceed to vote without further debate upon the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to article 1 of the pending treaty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to entering into the unanimous-consent agreement?

The Chair hears none, and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be reprinted as modified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY].

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. One moment. I beg pardon of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I did not mean to take the floor from him.

Mr. REED. I yielded the floor long ago. The Senator is in his right.

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MCNARY. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to.

CHARGES DUE ON RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

Mr. MCNARY. There is on the calendar a bill (S. 3140) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to extend the time for payment of construction charges under Federal irrigation projects, and for other purposes, reported by me from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation favorably with amendments.

A similar bill passed the House a few days ago. Briefly, it authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to extend for a period of one year the payment of construction charges on certain irrigation projects. I do not mean to say the projects as a whole, but it clothes the Secretary of the Interior with discretion, in case he finds an individual entryman or water user unable to pay his construction charges by reason of the agricultural depression, to defer the payment one year, upon the payment of 6 per cent interest on the deferred payments. That does not apply to all instances, but just to a few, and, as is stated in the Secretary's letter, it is only occasionally that it is necessary.

The Senate bill received a favorable report unanimously from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation a few days ago.

A few days ago the House passed the bill (H. R. 9606) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to extend the time for payment of charges due on reclamation projects, and for other purposes. It is the same as the Senate bill on the calendar as I introduced it, and I move that the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation be discharged from its further consideration, with a view to its passage by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MCNARY. I now ask for the present consideration of House bill 9606.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. NCNARY. I move to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the Senate bill as reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation with amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That where an individual water user or individual applicant for a water right under a Federal irrigation project constructed or being constructed under the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat., p. 388), or any act

amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, is unable to pay any construction charge due and payable in the year 1922, or prior thereto, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to extend the date of payment of any such charge for a period not to exceed two years from December 31, 1922: Provided, That the applicant for the extension shall first show to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior by a detailed verified statement of his assets and liabilities, an actual inability to make payment at the time the application is made, and an apparent ability to meet the deferred charge when the extension expires; also in cases where water for irrigation is available, that the applicant is a landowner or entryman actually cultivating the land against which the charge has accrued: Provided further, That similar relief may be extended by the Secretary of the Interior to an organized group of water users of a project, upon presentation of a sufficient number of individual showings made in accordance with the foregoing proviso to satisfy the Secretary of the Interior that such extension is necessary: And provided further, That each charge so extended shall draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from its due date in lieu of any penalty that may now be provided by law, but in case such charge is not paid at the end of such extension period, any penalty that would have been applicable save for such extension shall attach from the date the charge was originally due, the same as if no extension had been granted.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, after due investigation, to furnish irrigation water on Federal irrigation projects during the irrigation season of 1922 to landowners or entrymen who are in arrears for more than one calendar year in the payment of any operation and maintenance or construction charge, notwithstanding the provisions of section 6 of the act of August 13, 1914 (38 Stat., p. 686): Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to relieve any beneficiary hereunder from payments due or penalties thereon required by said act: Provided further, That the relief provided by this section shall be extended only to landowners or entrymen who are actually cultivating the land against which the charges have accrued.

Mr. PITTMAN. May I ask the Senator if this is the bill we had under consideration in the committee?

Mr. McNARY. It was under consideration in the committee about a month ago and ordered to be reported favorably with two amendments, one extending the time to two years and the other making the rate of interest 5 per cent.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. It relates to the Wapato project of the Yakima Indian Reservation in the State of Washington. I introduced a bill a short time ago with reference to the construction charges on that project and it has been favorably reported on by the department. The charges will become due, I think, on the 1st of April, and then the water will be shut off if they are not paid. The conditions are substantially the same as those relieved by the pending bill, and I feel that it is almost imperative that this amendment should be placed on the bill.

Mr. McNARY. So far as I have the power, I will accept the amendment to the amendment, because I understand its purpose and it is a case of much merit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be reported.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the amendment:

That section 28 of "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes," for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, pertaining to the collection of charges from landowners on the Wapato project of the Yakima Indian Reservation, Wash. (41 Stat. L., p. 431), following the words "And provided further," be amended to read as follows: "That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to collect on or before December 31 of each calendar year hereafter, including 1922, from landowners other than Indians under the said system the sum of $2.50 per acre for each acre of land to which water for irrigation purposes can be delivered from the said system, which sum shall be credited on a per acre basis in favor of the land in behalf of which it shall have been paid and be deducted from the total per acre charge assessable against said land when the amount of such total charge can be determined, and the total amount so collected, including any money collected from Indian allottees, shall be available for expenditure under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for continuing the construction work on the said system.

"That upon the failure of any landowner to pay annually the construction charge as herein provided within the year within which it is chargeable, and as to any unpaid amounts due for the years 1920 and 1921, the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, is hereby authorized to grant an extension of time within which such payments may be made for such time and upon such terms, including interest charges, as he may determine and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That no extension for the payment of any amount due for the years 1920 and 1921 shall in any event be extended beyond January 1, 1925."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION WITH CLOSED DOORS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business in secret session.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate in open executive session take a recess until noon to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate, in open executive session, took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 14, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 13, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by Mr. WALSH as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, Thou art our everlasting portion—the priceless gift of all life, which can not be altered nor consumed. With this day we have the assurance of safety, protection, and of love. Toward Thee our hearts, our minds, and our memories are quickened with the deepest gratitude. We would declare our need and our acceptance of Thee as the source of all blessings that we enjoy. May we take our pledge to do our part and take a care to live and to labor for the good. Give wisdom and direction to all deliberations. With a heart of gladness and with a spirit that serves may we lighten life's burden, lift life's load, and brighten life's way. Through Christ our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

RESIGNATIONS FROM COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following resignations from committees:

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
The Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committees on Claims; Coinage, Weights, and Measures; and Expenditures in the Department of Commerce, to take effect immediately.

Very respectfully, yours, MICHAEL J. HOGAN.

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I respectfully tender my resignation as member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Very truly, yours,
HENRY Z. OSBORNE.

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
The Speaker of the House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. GILLETT: I am notified that I have been chosen by the Committee on Committees to fill an existing vacancy in the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and in accordance with the requirements for acceptance of such honor and preferment, I hereby tender to you my resignation as a member of the Committees on Claims, Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, and Flood Control.

Sincerely yours,
CYRENUS COLE.

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committees on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and Labor, the same to take effect immediately.

Sincerely, yours, OGDEN L. MILLS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the resignations are accepted.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3170. An act regulating corporations doing a banking business in the District of Columbia;

S. 3209. An act granting to the Northern Pacific Railway Co. the right to construct and maintain a bridge across the Mississippi River at Minneapolis, in the State of Minnesota; and

S. 3265. An act construing the expression "all employees in the classified civil service of the United States," as used in section 1 of the act of May 22, 1920, entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 10663. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 3265. An act construing the expression "all employees in the classified civil service of the United States," as used in section 1 of the act of May 22, 1920, entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

S. 3209. An act granting to the Northern Pacific Railway Co. the right to construct and maintain a bridge across the Mississippi River at Minneapolis, in the State of Minnesota; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 3170. An act regulating corporations doing a banking business in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 10267. An act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes;

H. R. 9047. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant to the town of Winthrop, Mass., a perpetual right of way over approximately 755 square feet of the Fort Banks Military Reservation for the purpose of widening Revere Street; and

H. R. 8193. An act to amend the first proviso in the act entitled "An act to grant a certain parcel of land, part of the Fort Robinson Military Reservation, Nebr., to the village of Crawford, Nebr., for park purposes," approved June 25, 1906.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 490. An act to consolidate national forest lands.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD in regular 8-point type a letter written by members of the Shipping Board to certain Members of the House, and the reply thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting in 8-point type a letter written by members of the Shipping Board to Members of the House, and their reply thereto. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think for the present I shall object.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield before he objects?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Wyoming withhold his objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It seems to me that it is a matter that falls legitimately within the right of a Member. It is about a public matter of very great importance pending now before a committee of the House, a legislative matter.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand it is a letter written by certain gentlemen in their individual capacity to certain other gentlemen, and their reply, not an official matter.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. The letter was written by certain members of the Shipping Board as such to certain members of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries as such, and a reply was made thereto, and on Saturday the letter written by members of the Shipping Board was inserted in the RECORD in the Senate. In addition to that, they gave to the press their letter at the time it was written, and references having been made to it in the press, it occurs to me it is nothing but fair, their letter having been inserted in the RECORD and reference made to it in the press, that Members of the House have an opportunity to insert in the RECORD their reply.

Mr. MONDELL. In view of the statement made by the gentleman as to the character of the correspondence, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
Washington, March 6, 1922.

Hon. EWIN L. DAVIS,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: The message of the President and the bill introduced simultaneously by the chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce and the chairman of the Marine and Fisheries

Committee of the House, having reference to further measures considered essential to establish, in full force and effect, an American merchant marine, were based very largely upon an intimate study made by the United States Shipping Board after extended hearings, at which men of all shades of opinion on the subject and intimately familiar with shipping were present.

In considering the questions the attitude of political parties, past and present, was not given consideration by the board, and the Democratic members of the board were governed solely by the real questions involved:

(1) The necessity for maintaining a merchant marine developed from the immense fleet called into existence by the emergencies of war.

(2) The necessary action to be taken to assure to the United States its former position and prestige on the high seas.

Aside from the economic necessity for the establishment of an adequate merchant marine under the American flag, deep consideration was given to that aspect embodied in the merchant marine act, 1920, providing for the merchant fleet to be a naval auxiliary in time of war. It is our opinion there can be no divergence of opinion as to the necessity for the full establishment of an American merchant marine; the only question upon which there could be divergence of opinion is whether aid, either direct or indirect, or both, should be granted to accomplish that purpose. It is our opinion that the establishment of an American merchant marine will be impossible without such aid as will equalize present differentials that exist in favor of foreign shipping, and our recommendation to the President contemplated direct aid only in the event the indirect aids first suggested were inadequate to properly develop and maintain an American merchant marine, the direct aid itself being nonexistent if the indirect aid sufficed and further limited as to profit to the ship only up to an adequate return to the operator on his investment. This assures no profiteering and brings into being direct aid only when it becomes a final essential to maintain American-flag ships on the high seas.

We understand that there will be a joint hearing of the appropriate Senate and House committees on the bill in question, and we trust you will not deem it impertinent in us, the Democratic members of the United States Shipping Board, to suggest to you and the other Democratic members of the committees of the Senate and House to withhold a final judgment with respect to this legislation until after the hearings have been completed and full opportunity given to the members of the board to state the reasons guiding their action in unanimously recommending direct and indirect aid to American shipping, and so that the full details of the proposal submitted, which has taken many weeks of survey and consideration, shall have been placed in all detail clearly before you.

Respectfully and sincerely, yours,

GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN.
FREDERICK I. THOMPSON.
W. S. BENSON.

MARCH 9, 1922.

HON. G. E. CHAMBERLAIN, FREDERICK I. THOMPSON, and W. S. BENSON, Members United States Shipping Board, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIRS: We are in receipt of yours of the 6th instant, with regard to ship subsidy legislation, which has been read with interest and astonishment.

Of course, it is your prerogative to zealously advocate the passage of a bill which will confer upon you and the other members of the United States Shipping Board the greatest power and widest discretion ever conferred upon any board.

You state that "in considering the questions, the attitude of political parties, past and present, was not given consideration by the board, and the Democratic members of the board were governed solely by the real questions involved."

You also conclude your remarkable letter with the following:

We understand that there will be a joint hearing of the appropriate Senate and House committees on the bill in question, and we trust you will not deem it impertinent in us, the Democratic members of the United States Shipping Board, to suggest to you and the other Democratic members of the committees of the Senate and House to withhold a final judgment with respect to this legislation, until after the hearings have been completed and full opportunity given to the members of the board to state the reasons guiding their action in unanimously recommending direct and indirect aid to American shipping and so that the full details of the proposal submitted, which has taken many weeks of survey and consideration, shall have been placed in all detail clearly before you.

We readily concede that our merchant marine problem is of such transcendent importance that it should be solved upon merit and principle and not upon partisanship. However, with reference to the manner in which the matter has been handled, we wish to call your attention to certain facts of which you seem to be wholly oblivious. It is generally understood that Mr. Lasker was appointed chairman of the Shipping Board because of very shrewd and valuable political service rendered during the last campaign; he certainly could not have been appointed because of any knowledge of shipping matters. His appointment from a political standpoint has been fully justified because he has demonstrated beyond question that he is a master politician. After months of laborious effort he has succeeded in committing the President to an elaborate and expensive ship-subsidy program, a position never taken by a previous President. More than that, Mr. Lasker has enmeshed all the members of the Shipping Board in this program. This is especially significant in view of the fact that until now perhaps no high Government official in this country has openly and boldly advocated a ship subsidy since the emphatic rejection of such suggestions many years ago.

Furthermore, Chairman Lasker, pursuant to the nonpartisan consideration for which you innocently vouch, invited the Republican members alone of the Merchant Marine Committee and the Commerce Committee to a dinner in his home, and after he had sumptuously fed them unfolded his ship-subsidy program and undertook to commit them to it; and it has since been repeatedly announced in the press that Chairman Lasker has been in conferences with the Republican members of said committees, that they had indorsed the ship-subsidy proposition in principle, and later that a bill had been agreed upon by Chairman Lasker, the President, and the Republican members of said committees. However, we predict that it will be demonstrated that Chairman Lasker misjudges some of the Republican members of said committees.

Still further pursuing this nonpartisan course, a document of 268 pages, in which were assembled all the possible arguments in favor of ship-subsidy legislation, and particularly in favor of the bill which has since been introduced, was prepared and confidential copies thereof furnished to all the Republican members of the Merchant Marine Committee and Commerce Committee. It purported to have been prepared by the Bureau of Research of the United States Shipping Board at the instance of the latter. The undersigned, Mr. DAVIS, addressed a letter to the Shipping Board, requesting a copy of that document as a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives, stating that as it had been prepared by Government officials at Government expense he presumed that he was entitled to a copy thereof. He received a reply from Chairman Lasker, in which he advised that those copies "had been completely exhausted." He further stated that it had been "prepared at the request of the President and for him, and was furnished to him and to such persons as he directed." This statement in spite of the fact that copies of said document had been furnished to all the Republican members of the Merchant Marine Committee of the House and the Commerce Committee of the Senate, but to none of the Democratic members.

Having, as he believes, successfully lined up the Republican members of said committees, Chairman Lasker has apparently assigned to you gentlemen the task of lining up the Democrats on said committees. However, you may tell Chairman Lasker that we are not as easily ensnared as some people he has come in contact with, and that we respectfully refuse to be "bound and gagged" while he and the rest of you advocates of this iniquitous ship subsidy bill industriously disseminate your deceptive propaganda and lull the people and the Congress to sleep while you complete the job.

The resourceful mind of Chairman Lasker was again seen in that a meeting in Washington of the Merchant Marine Association was staged immediately after the delivery of President Harding's address and the introduction of the ship subsidy bills. This association is composed of ship operators and shipbuilders, together with a few citizens who have been artfully brought into the association and placed in the forefront for political effect. Aside from the expected speeches and resolutions in favor of ship subsidy legislation we notice that one of you gentlemen "as a Democratic member of the Shipping Board" was prevailed upon to deliver a speech before said association in the interest of the ship subsidy bill, and those more vitally interested have had that speech carried in the press throughout the country.

You ask us "to withhold a final judgment with respect to this legislation until after the hearings have been completed and full opportunity given to the members of the board to state the reasons guiding their action in unanimously recommending direct and indirect aid to American shipping," and so forth. It will doubtless be true, as you indicate, that the committees will be flooded with arguments in favor of the bill, and that there will be no real investigation of the problem involved. Furthermore, Chairman Lasker has repeatedly stated that this subsidy bill would be promptly enacted. We may readily assume that if the majority members of the two committees are as represented by Chairman Lasker, as soon as the one-sided hearings are held the bill will be promptly reported to the Senate and the House for action, and if the leaders are in sympathy with the bill it will, at least in the House, probably be promptly called up for action after brief debate. And yet you presume to suggest to us that we withhold our judgment and keep quiet "until after the hearings have been completed." In requesting you to write this letter Mr. Lasker knew full well that if this bill is fully and intelligently discussed and is understood by the American people and they have time to express their will, there will be such an emphatic protest that the bill will not pass at all; that it will meet the fate of similar previous efforts, which were much less expensive and baneful than this measure. You will find that you are not only out of line with the members of the Democratic Party with but a few rare exceptions, but that you are also out of line with a very large percentage of the members of the Republican Party.

Assuming all wisdom, as well as virtue and patriotism, for yourselves with regard to this question, you, on the other hand, assume that we members of the Merchant Marine Committee and Commerce Committee are densely ignorant, whereas it is doubtless true that the members of these committees have devoted as much study and consideration to these questions as you gentlemen. Besides, our course of study has not been mapped out for us. Speaking as to ourselves, we will state that we have devoted a great deal of study to merchant-marine problems ever since before any of you gentlemen were connected with the Shipping Board, one of the undersigned having been an active member of the Merchant Marine Committee for 12 years; and in addition to having read all of the voluminous arguments in favor of ship subsidy prepared at the instance of Chairman Lasker, we have also read various books written by the leading authorities on the subject and the former congressional debates thereon. The more we investigate the question the more fully we become convinced that ship subsidies are wrong in principle and a failure in practice.

There is less excuse for ship subsidies in this country now than ever before by reason of the fact that our immense Government-owned fleet can be purchased by private operators at considerably less than the normal world market prices, and the chief argument heretofore made in favor of ship subsidies has been based upon the allegation that ships could not be constructed as cheaply in the United States as in some foreign countries and our laws forbade American registry of foreign-built ships. Yet the bill you now propose would take more than $50,000,000 per annum out of the pockets of the taxpayers and put it in the pockets of a few private ship lines, after amending the present law so that the Government ships may be sold to them at ridiculously low prices.

A few weeks ago there was printed as a Government document a report on the History of Shipping Discriminations and on Various Forms of Government Aid to Shipping, compiled by the United States Shipping Board. The information contained in that document is fairly accurate and in accord with the standard authorities on the subject. The facts therein recited are so contradictory of your position that it is difficult to believe that you have read this document, although compiled in the name of your board. In support of this suggestion I shall quote briefly from said document:

> Great Britain has never granted general navigation bounties nor construction bounties, with the exception of the early Elizabethan subsidies above mentioned. Practically the only money aid given by Britain to its marine is in the form of postal subventions.
>
> All the writers seem to agree that the growth of the British merchant marine is in no sense due to the small subsidy paid, admitting that the payments are in excess of the postal service rendered. The growth of the British marine was probably due to the early development of British industry, the acquisition of extensive colonial possessions, and the monopolistic position in colonial trade.
>
> France appears to be the country of subventions par excellence, although in 1910 its merchant marine was outranked by Great Britain, the United States, Germany, Norway, and Japan.
>
> There seems to be a general agreement that the French subsidy system, which has been more or less the model for Italy, Spain, and Japan, has been a failure. The Gallinger committee, which supported subsidies for American ships, sought to overcome the evidence of failure demonstrated by the French law by introducing the testimony of various French statesmen. They can hardly be said to have succeeded.
>
> The results of a subsidy in Italy have not been any more successful than in France, although Italy has a long seacoast, a dense population, efficient marine workers, and low wages. She is handicapped, however, by the lack of coal and a highly developed iron and steel industry. (All of which the United States has in abundance.)
>
> The Danish merchant marine has risen from 178,000 tons in 1870 to about 560,000 tons in 1914. Denmark has not given much State aid.
> Norway ranks third among the merchant shipping of the world, being exceeded now only by Britain and the United States. It rose from 1,022,000 tons in 1870, almost exclusively sail, to 1,117,000 tons in 1912, two-thirds of which were steel.
>
> The small shipping subsidies which Norway has granted to its merchant marine can not have had a material effect on this growth, which is due to other circumstances.
>
> The merchant marine of this country (Germany) has, of course, been almost annihilated by the treaty of Versailles. Prior to the war Germany had reached perhaps the greatest growth in her merchant marine. This was not due to subsidies or to any other form of Government aid that can be established. The greatest line in the world, the Hamburg-American, is said never to have received a cent of Government subsidy.
> From 1870 to 1912 Germany's shipping rose from about 1,000,000 tons in 1870, of which 90 per cent was sail, to over 3,000,000 tons in 1912, of which one-sixth only was sail.

In the final conclusions given in the said report it is stated:

> A study of the authorities on subsidies, taking into account the policies adopted by various countries, would seem to indicate that with the exception of Japan the policy has not been important in the building up of a merchant marine.

As a matter of fact, the merchant marine of Japan was not built up by Government aid, but its growth was simply in keeping with Japan's marvelous industrial growth. They granted substantially the same character of aid as France, Spain, and Italy, where it proved an absolute failure. Besides, the total Government aid granted by Japan does not amount to more than the postal subventions paid by the United States.

And yet, in spite of the necessarily admitted fact that ship subsidies have either not been employed or that they have proven a failure in the other great maritime nations, the false doctrine is being industriously circulated that it is necessary for the United States to pay subsidies, direct and indirect, which will aggregate more than the combined subsidies paid by all the other nations on earth (omitting the legitimate payment for service actually rendered for carrying mail, etc.) in order to compete with the merchant marine of other nations, whose success is incorrectly alleged to be due to subsidies.

The recent report of the Shipping Board, above referred to, after stating the facts above quoted, and much more to the same effect, yet concludes with the following final conclusion, remarkably ludicrous in view of the facts previously stated in the report:

> A study of the problem would seem to indicate that either the policy of discriminating duties in the indirect trade or subsidies are essential to maintaining an American merchant marine.

There appears in bold type on the inside cover of the said report the following:

> President Harding's recommendations to the Congress for a national shipping policy will be based in large measure upon the information which is contained herein and with which every official of the Government should be familiar.

Our opinion is that President Harding never read this report. If he had, we can not believe that he would have delivered the message he did. It is more likely that what was submitted to him was the subsequent confidential argument which Chairman Lasker stated in his letter to Mr. Davis had been furnished to the President and which was so fallacious that it was attempted to keep it concealed from the Democratic Members and the public.

You mention the fact, which has been given much publicity in the press, that the members of the Shipping Board—all of whom were appointed by President Harding—are unanimously in favor of the proposed subsidy legislation. In your letter to us you state that—

> Our recommendation to the President contemplated direct aid only in the event the indirect aids first suggested were inadequate to properly develop and maintain an American merchant marine, the direct aid itself being nonexistent if the indirect aid sufficed, and further limited as to profit to the ship only up to an adequate return to the operator on his investment. This assures no profiteering and brings into being direct aid only when it becomes a final essential to maintain American flag ships on the high seas.

And yet the bills introduced by the chairmen of the Senate and House committees provide unconditionally and unequivocally for both direct and indirect subsidies, and in the last paragraph of your letter to us you ask us to withhold our judgment until—> full opportunity given to the members of the board to state the reasons guiding their action in unanimously recommending direct and indirect aid to American shipping.

What has caused you to undergo a change of mind since you made your recommendation to the President?

Since you gentlemen have presumed to make suggestions to us, we shall presume to respectfully suggest that you make a real independent investigation of these questions and consider them from the standpoint and interest of all the American people, whom you and we are supposed to represent, and not merely from the viewpoint of private ship operators and builders who are so assiduously pressing this legislation.

In view of the fact that you or somebody furnished to the press copies of the letters written us and other Members, even before we received them, which have been freely carried and even editorially discussed, we are giving our reply to the press.

Yours, sincerely,

EWIN L. DAVIS.
RUFUS HARDY.

PURCHASE OF SEED GRAIN AND SEED FOR FARMERS IN THE CROP-FAILURE AREAS.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Iowa rise?

Mr. HAUGEN. I call up from the Speaker's table the bill S. 2897, and move to insist upon the House amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 2897, to insist upon the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2897) to appropriate $5,000,000 for the purchase of seed grain and of seed to be supplied to farmers in the crop-failure areas in the United States, said amount to be expended under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. As I understand the gentleman made the motion, it does not require unanimous consent. It has a privileged status.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is a Senate bill with House amendments. The Chair did not understand the gentleman to make the motion. It is privileged. The gentleman from Iowa moves to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 2897, to insist upon the amendments thereto, and to agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Let it be reported, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill and the amendments.

The title of the bill was again reported and the amendments.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield before he presses his motion?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary situation, as I understand it, is this, that if the House should insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked, then the question will be up to the Senate to take what the House has adopted or leave it. Now, in view of the very strong majority by which the House passed the bill, as I stated heretofore, I have no desire to contest in a captious way, or in any other way, the adoption of the House's action. But does not the gentleman think that, in view of the expression of the House given the other day, the House is going to be pretty resolute about this matter being confined to $1,000,000 and to seed alone?

Mr. HAUGEN. I do. It is hoped to carry out the instructions of the House as far as possible.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It seems to me the House might settle the matter now, once and for all, by insisting on its amendments.

Mr. HAUGEN. There are a lot of amendments outside of the reduction to $1,000,000.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There are two elements involved in the amendments. The other amendments do not amount to anything. And the other is, besides the reduction to $1,000,000, the amendment by which feed was eliminated by the House from the bill. Those are the only two substantial things in the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] to insist upon the House amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed the following conferees: Mr. HAUGEN, Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan, and Mr. JACOWAY.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10730, the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10730.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. Will the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] permit me to propound a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. ANDERSON. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. This is District day. If the chairman of the District Committee temporarily yields for the finishing of the Agricultural bill, the inquiry is, Will the District Committee lose its right to resume District business at the completion of the Agricultural bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The District Committee will not lose its right to take up District business if recognition is given by the Chair.

DEFICIENCIES.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments made to the deficiency bill, H. R. 10663, and send the bill to conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the deficiency appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10663) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will make the required statement, there will be no objection on my part. Otherwise he may consider the objection as made.

Mr. MADDEN. I will make the statement that the minority members have been conferred with. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] is perfectly agreeable to having the bill go to conference.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman how many million dollars the Senate committee placed on this bill?

Mr. MADDEN. Twenty-nine million dollars, twenty-seven millions of which was for payment of illegally collected taxes.

Mr. BLANTON. The Senate has placed $29,000,000 on the bill in addition to what it carried when it left the House. Will the gentleman give us an opportunity to pass upon those increases?

Mr. MADDEN. I would not want to make any pledge as to that. We will bring the conference report back to the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Of course, we can pass upon any of the increases that may have legislation in them, as a matter of right?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed the following conferees: Mr. MADDEN, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 10871; Rept. No. 791) making appropriations for military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, which was read and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FOCHT. At the adjournment on Saturday there was under consideration the bill H. R. 10730, the Agricultural appropriation bill. I wish to say that I believe the members of the Committee on the District of Columbia fully share the anxiety of the other Members of the House that this legislation be enacted as speedily as possible. Therefore, whatever rights we have on the floor on District day we yield to this committee, in order that this legislation may be expedited, with the understanding, however, that we be permitted to take advantage of the ruling of the Chair and proceed with District legislation following the enactment of the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10730, the Agricultural appropriation bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] will please resume the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10730, the Agricultural appropriation bill, with Mr. HICKS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10730, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on Saturday there was a point of order pending, made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], against an item in the bill. If any gentlemen desire further to discuss the point of order, the Chair will hear them.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, just a word on the matter pending. The point of order was made against a provision of this bill on the ground that the so-called Weeks Act expired with the final appropriation provided for in that act. It has been claimed in argument that when that act was passed it was at least the understanding or construction of it at the time that it provided for only a specific amount of money and authorized no further amount.

What anyone may have understood at that time we can not, of course, consider now. The only thing that the Chair can consider now is what the law itself provides, and what construction should be put upon the provisions of the law. The third section of the act provides for an appropriation. Then follows further legislation having no reference to the appropriation in a preceding section but making an authorization for the purchase of such lands as have been approved, and so forth.

I call the attention of the Chair to the last paragraph of section 3 of the so-called Weeks Act. After making the appropriation referred to, this provision is added:

Provided, That the provisions of this section shall expire by limitation on the 30th day of June, 1915.

If it had been the intention of Congress to limit the act to the 30th day of June, 1915, it would have added this provision at the end of the act, and would have stated that the provisions of the act shall expire by limitation on that date. But it did not do so. Instead of providing that the entire act shall expire by limitation on a certain date, it is provided in the third section "that the provisions of this section shall expire" on that date. Thereafter, in section 7 in particular, the act proceeds to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase in the name of the United States such lands as shall have been approved, and so forth, clearly manifesting the intent of Congress to authorize the purchase of such lands as any future Congress might see fit to appropriate money to purchase. It seems to me that we should construe the act in accordance with the clear intent of the language, and the language of section 7 clearly authorizes the purchase of land. The item against which the point of order is made carries an appropriation of $50,000 to be expended in accordance with the provisions of the so-called Weeks Act, and, in my judgment, is not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule. The Chair is cognizant of some difficulties in the path of a clearly defined conclusion in reference to this point of order. The Chair in this, as in rendering other opinions, has no desire to be arbitrary or to rule adversely to parliamentary procedure. The Chair pays great deference to the views of the great parliamentarian, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], whose knowledge of procedure and legislative enactments is most profound. Should the ruling of the Chair in this case seem to contravene the practice of the House, the Chair cheerfully welcomes an appeal.

The point of order is that this is an appropriation not authorized by law, and so the question narrows down as to whether the original Weeks Act, so far as authorization for the acquisition of these lands is concerned, is operative or whether that authority terminated June 30, 1915.

The Chair lacks the benefit of having any personal knowledge of the history surrounding the enactment of the original law, and is devoid of the means of ascertaining the intention of Congress in relation thereto. The Chair, while realizing that "intention" is entitled to consideration, yet doubts if it can be balanced against the expressed provisions of the law. I will refrain from rereading the section of the Weeks Act which seems to carry the crux of the matter, except to state that it is section 3, dealing with appropriations, that contains the limitation proviso. It states, "Provided, That the provisions of this section shall expire by limitation on the 30th day of June, 1915."

What puzzles the Chair is the location in the act of this limitation provision, and also its specific reference to "this section." Is it not fair to assume that it is the provisions of section 3 that are limited and not the provisions of the act? Is it not reasonable to suppose that if it was the intention to terminate the authorization on June 30, 1915, as well as the appropriations, the limitation would have come after section 7 and would have referred to the act and not to a section that did not deal with authorization? The Chair answers both questions in the affirmative, and feels that however much the intention of Congress may be stressed as to limitation the statute does not so express it. The Chair, feeling that the authority has not been terminated by the proviso of section 3, must hold that the item in this bill is in order. To further fortify the Chair's opinion, he refers to a ruling of Chairman TILSON on May 8, 1920, who was presiding during the consideration of the sundry civil bill. A point of order almost on all fours with the present objection was overruled by him on grounds similar to those taken by myself. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, this item relates to the Forest Service. Something has been said during the consideration of the bill about the suggested transfer of the Forest Service from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of the Interior. It is not my purpose to discuss that question upon the merits, but simply to call attention to a misapprehension that seems to prevail. In that connection I would like to take a minute or two in noticing an editorial that appeared in the Washington Post of yesterday morning. I quote two or three sentences from the editorial, as follows:

The inquiries made by the commission delegated to map out a reorganization of the executive departments are said to have disclosed many glaring inconsistencies and inexcusable sources of extravagance. The report of the commission is in the hands of President Harding, and when published it is expected to create a sensation because of its recommendations for sweeping changes.

A single example of inconsistent grouping of activities and the evils resulting therefrom is furnished by the commission in its discussion of the Forest Service in relation to the Department of the Interior.

* * * * * * *

The reorganization commission has recommended that the forests be administered by the Department of the Interior, just as other lands are administered, whether mineral, desert, oil-bearing, agricultural, or Indian lands. The commission takes the position, which seems to be logical and unassailable, that one authority should be exercised over public lands, without regard to the particular nature of the lands.

* * * * * * *

Congress will have the reorganization commission's report in due time, with the President's recommendations thereon. It is to be hoped that the people will be given an opportunity to make their land heritage available for proper use.

The body that is supposed to have made the report is described as a commission. Of course, the reference is the Joint Committee on Departmental Reorganization created by the last Congress. The point that I wish to make is that the writer of the editorial is under a misapprehension in assuming that the joint committee has made any report whatever relative to the transfer of the Forest Service or relative to any other matter that is within its province.

It could not have made any report because it has never taken up any of the many questions that have been talked of as likely to be considered. It could not have made any report because it has never had any meeting to take up and deal with any of those numerous questions. As has been said here more than once, the committee, having been created by the last Congress, selected as its chairman the gentleman appointed by the President to cooperate in its work, following which action there has been but one meeting of the committee, and that occurred in June, and the only business transacted at that meeting was to receive a letter from the President saying he would be glad to submit suggestions to the committee for its consideration, and a reply directed to be sent to the President saying that the committee would be glad to receive and consider his suggestions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Since that meeting was held in June not only has no meeting taken place but the committee has not been in contact with its chairman. Therefore, I repeat that no committee report has been formulated and submitted to the President. If there is anything in the nature of a report that has been gotten up it is the product of the chairman of the committee acting apart from the committee and independently of it.

Assuming, of course, that there was no purpose to mislead, I only desire to say that nevertheless the editorial is inaccurate, and say, in addition, speaking for at least one member of the joint committee—and I take it for granted that will be the attitude of all its members—that without any prejudgment of the question of the transfer of the Forest Service from one department to another, the committee, when permitted to do so, will take up that question in a deliberate way, in a sort of judicial way, and only reach a conclusion and make a report after giving the question a thorough investigation in the endeavor to ascertain how the interests of the public can be best protected, whether by the maintenance of the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture or by transferring the service to the other department.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to ask whether under the terms of the resolution appointing this commission the commission was to report to Congress or to the President?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It was to report to Congress. I am not in a critical mood, but I thought the selection as its chairman of the excellent gentleman whom the President appointed to act with the committee was a mistake, and I am confirmed in that view by the fact that the committee has failed thus far to function.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has again expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I noticed in a newspaper account in one of the prominent Washington papers about 10 days ago that the work of the commission was going to be abandoned and that there would be no reorganization. I suppose the gentleman saw that article, and I desire to know whether he had any information as to the abandonment.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The work can not be abandoned, because it was never begun. We have not yet taken any practical step; and, as I have said, the newspaper is mistaken in assuming that we have taken any step whatever with reference to the Forest Service or with reference to any other proposition to reorganize the Government agencies in the way of regrouping or in the way of eliminating or in any other way.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Have the members had any intimation from the Executive or the chairman of the committee that they would be called into consultation on the problems involved at any date?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It is proper to say that while the committee has not received any plan the chairman may have devised, whether called a report or otherwise designated, certain members of the committee—and, I suppose, all of them—did receive three or four weeks ago a letter from the President in which he stated that he was considering the situation and as soon as he could find time he would reach conclusions and communicate them to the committee.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Upon what matter was the President to "reach conclusions," as the gentleman says?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. On the questions, whatever they were, that had been presented to him by the chairman relative to departmental organization or reorganization, the questions not being specified. Doubtless one of the outstanding questions is the question of transfer to Forest Service.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. By this bill $50,000 is appropriated for the purpose of acquiring additional land at the headwaters of navigable streams. I thought it would not be a bad time to call to the attention of this committee the fact that the Senate has just reported an amendment to the District bill of $1,500,000 for additional water supply for the District of Columbia, a very wise policy, indeed, and none too soon. I have said on several occasions that it does seem to me if we are to establish additional waterworks and get water from the Great Falls of the Potomac River, Congress should appropriate sufficient money by which it can acquire the land around Great Falls and along the Potomac River to protect Great Falls and the watershed from pollution and at the same time establish a beautiful park while the land can be purchased reasonably and the magnificent forests and landscape are intact. Mr. William M. Ellicott, of Baltimore, the originator of the idea, and M. F. W. Besley, forester of Maryland, have discussed to great length in a pamphlet termed "A National Forest" the proposition I am advancing.

The water we are to acquire from this additional reservoir must necessarily come through land owned by private individuals. The report of the commission and the appropriation recommended in the Senate contains no provision for the protection of the Potomac River watershed against pollution.

It may be said that the water would pass through a filtration system by which it would be purified, but why have any filtration system when by the expenditure of a reasonable sum of money the watershed itself can be protected and the water come to the citizens of Washington free from contamination?

In practically every instance where water supply has been provided the watershed has been protected. The city of Washington is continually growing. Many people are securing homes beyond the District limits. As the beauty and advantages of the beautiful hills and dales along the Potomac River are realized, the impetus to building in that section will grow by leaps and bounds. This growth, for which no sewerage system has been established, will most naturally pollute this wonderful watershed, and this by all means should be prevented.

It is not necessary to limit this watershed to forests and fields to protect it, but its ownership by the National Government would lead to proper sewerage conditions and secure protection to the watershed.

There is also another great advantage to be derived from the acquisition of the lands along the Potomac River. There are about 10,000 acres of land abounding in beautiful landscape, comprising within its limits the Great Falls of the Potomac River, which has been termed the "Little Niagara" of the Potomac. A national forest reserve could well be laid out, protecting Great Falls, securing from pollution the Potomac River, and providing a wonderful park for the people of the District of Columbia and for those thickly settled communities in Maryland and Virginia adjacent to Great Falls.

It would provide visitors to Washington another beautiful park, which in the years to come would be found one of the best investments the country has ever made. Washington must have more water. It should have the purest which can possibly be obtained. With the laying out of this national forest reserve, comprising 8,000 to 10,000 acres, and the construction of the contemplated water system, both pure and plentiful water will be obtained, a wonderful park will be provided, and all without the expenditure of any large sum of money.

If we wait, land is rapidly increasing in value, the landscape is being gradually depleted of its magnificent forests, and homes will be built and villages established, making expenditure of a much larger sum of money necessary than what it can at this time be procured.

The city of Baltimore is providing an additional water supply at an expenditure of many millions of dollars. The valley of the Gun Powder River is being acquired to prevent pollution. Many homes and several villages have been purchased, and the Gun Powder River, with its beautiful valley, will present a magnificent park appearance and provide pure water for the residents of our city. The city of Boston purchased thousands of acres and has brought its water supply for miles in order to give its citizens pure water.

If municipalities with their credit alone to draw from can do this, why should not the Capital of the Nation, representative of a hundred and ten millions of people, have the highest type of sanitation and purity of water supply? I deplore the fact that this House had not the vision to provide an appropriation for the water supply rather than to leave it to the Senate to amend our bill to that effect.

In due time I shall introduce a bill asking for the establishment of this national forest reserve along the Potomac, the protection of the watershed of the river, and providing funds for this purpose.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture, in cooperation with the authorities of the States concerned, or with individuals, to make such investigations and demonstrations as may be necessary in connection with the development of live-stock production in the cane-sugar and cotton districts of the United States, $46,500: Provided, That at any time during the fiscal year 1922 or thereafter, when the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine that the interests of the Government will be subserved thereby, he is hereby authorized to appraise the buildings, animals, machinery, and all other property of whatever nature or kind appertaining to the experimental farm of the Department of Agriculture, situated at or near New Iberia, La., and to sell the same at public or private sale, at such price or prices, on such terms, and in such manner as he may deem for the best interests of the Government, and in consummation thereof to execute such instruments of conveyance as may be requisite, the proceeds from such sale to be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This farm at New Iberia, La., is in my district. I was somewhat surprised when I read the proviso attached to this appropriation giving the Secretary of Agriculture the right to sell the stock and buildings thereon and to discontinue the work on this farm whenever, in his discretion, it is for the best interests of the Government. I am sure that the committee in this matter acted entirely in good faith, but, as it is situated in my district, and as I know from personal knowledge of the work that has been accomplished and the good that it has done for southern Louisiana, I believe the committee has been misled and misinformed. I shall not oppose the adoption of this provision, because I believe that after the Secretary of Agriculture has instituted an investigation he will become convinced, as I am convinced, that the farm is doing good work, and next year I shall be in a position to convince the subcommittee on appropriations that the farm should be retained; that it would be unwise to discontinue it at this time.

This farm was established in 1914, at a time when it was believed sugar was going on the free list. Under the Underwood law sugar would have gone on the free list on May 1, 1916. Happily for us this did not happen, but in the meantime hundreds of our people actually engaged in the raising of cattle, and have continued in that business ever since. The demonstration work conducted on this farm has been of great benefit to our people in teaching them how to raise cattle economically and at a profit. It has taught them, and is teaching them, the wisdom of replacing their common stock with blooded and graded cattle. It is teaching them the value of silos, and the value as a cattle feed of corn silage, sorghum, soy beans, and other legumes. It is teaching them that the cane tops, which heretofore had been thrown away and burned up, have a considerable value as cattle feed, and in many sections of the country they are now being utilized for that purpose. It is teaching them that the low marsh lands, only a foot or two above the tide level, are splendidly adapted to cattle raising and cattle grazing, and that it is capable of growing in abundance a grass known as paye Finne, which is equal in food value to alfalfa.

In addition to this, it has taught our people to take a deep interest in cattle raising, and hundreds of them are now engaged in that industry. It does not cost the Government the amount of money carried in this bill. Every year the surplus stock and produce is sold and the money therefrom turned into the Treasury.

Last year the amount turned in was but $7,000, but in other years it has gone as high as $20,000, so that the Government gets back a large portion of this appropriation. This farm is doing splendid educational work, and I hope and believe that at the next session of Congress I shall be able to convince the committee not only that the item should be retained but that the appropriation for its maintenance should be increased. [Applause.]

The State is cooperating in making the work on this farm a success. On July 9, 1914, the Legislature of Louisiana by act No. 252 authorized the transfer to the Department of Agriculture for the use of this demonstration work 500 acres of valuable land, and in addition to this in March, 1917, the Louisiana Experiment Station gave the Government the use of 500 additional acres.

The buildings, live stock, and machinery are valued at about $70,000, and to now tear down and remove these buildings would not only be a loss to the Government but the people of this vicinity will be deprived of demonstration work which is worth much more to the country than this meager appropriation. The subcommittee on appropriations having unanimously agreed to this proviso, I realize that a motion to strike it out might result in losing the appropriation altogether. I have therefore concluded it would be best to await the decision of the Secretary of Agriculture and then convince the Committee on Appropriations that it would be a great mistake to abolish and discontinue at this time the splendid work that is being done on this farm.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXPERIMENTS IN DAIRYING AND LIVE-STOCK PRODUCTION IN SEMIARID AND IRRIGATED DISTRICTS OF THE WESTERN UNITED STATES.

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct investigations and experiments in problems connected with the establishment of dairying and meat-production enterprises on the semiarid and irrigated lands of the western United States, including the purchase of live stock and the employment of necessary persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $40,000.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice from the hearings that the committee itself did not feel any too favorably disposed toward this proposition, and I am wondering if this is not to a certain extent duplicating the same thing that is being done by the experiment stations in connection with the agricultural colleges and their experiment stations that are provided in other places in the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not think so. It has been clear for some time that if any success is to be made in these semiarid and dry-land sections some way must be found to produce beef cattle and milch cattle on them, and the object of these stations is the development primarily of the dairy and food-production business.

Mr. SNELL. On the information received, does the gentleman think they have made any real progress.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think they are making progress; yes.

Mr. SNELL. I notice the man who had them in charge said he could not tell how long it would take to work out the problem.

Mr. ANDERSON. Oh, these problems are always continuous. They are never solved in the sense in which we use the word solution.

Mr. SNELL. How many years have those been running?

Mr. ANDERSON. Six years.

Mr. SNELL. And it is not a duplication of work?

Mr. ANDERSON. Oh, no; I think not.

Mr. SNELL. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

FIELD STATION, WOODWARD, OKLA.

For the establishment in connection with the Woodward, Okla., field station of a live-stock department, through which experiments and demonstrations in live-stock breeding, growing, and feeding, including both beef and dairy animals, may be made, $6,500, of which sum the Secretary is hereby authorized to use not exceeding $500 for the purpose of building additional sheds, stalls, and pens for the protection and care of said animals.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, the other day when we had the seed amendment up I was very anxious to speak for a few minutes, and had gone to the trouble of preparing some remarks. The parliamentary situation shifted so that I could not do that then, and I now ask unanimous consent that I may put in the RECORD at the proper place, under the rule, what I would have said if I had had the chance at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to be allowed to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the question of agricultural-seed distribution. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

To conduct surveys and inspections in Texas or in any other State to detect any infestation and to conduct such control measures, including the establishment of cotton-free areas, in cooperation with the State of Texas or other States concerned, as may be necessary to stamp out such infestation, to establish in cooperation with the States concerned a zone or zones free from cotton culture on or near the border of any State or States adjacent to Mexico, and to cooperate with the Mexican Government or local Mexican authorities, or otherwise, by undertaking in Mexico such measures for the extermination of the pink bollworm of cotton as shall be determined to be practicable from surveys showing its distribution, $400,000, of which sum not to exceed $200,000 may be available for reimbursement to cotton-growing States, for expenses incurred by them in connection with losses due to enforced nonproduction of cotton in certain zones in the manner and upon the terms and conditions set forth in Senate joint resolution No. 72, approved August 9, 1921: Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used to pay the cost or value of crops or other property injured or destroyed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. It is subject to a point of order. I wish to ask the chairman of the subcommittee, do some of these States still desire to have Congress reimburse them for the failure to raise cotton?

Mr. ANDERSON. As the gentleman knows, under the State law of Texas the State can establish noncotton zones, and where these noncotton zones are established certain compensation is made to the owners of the land for the losses incident to the prohibition against cotton growing. This provision permitting $200,000 to be used to reimburse the States which have made such payments was originally adopted in Senate joint resolution 72, and we simply continue the policy which was there adopted.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Did the joint resolution make that a continuing proposition or provide continuing authority to divert part of the appropriation for that purpose? My recollection is otherwise.

Mr. MANN. The joint resolution only refers to the current fiscal year.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is correct.

Mr. SNELL. Does the Federal Government pay all the money?

Mr. ANDERSON. No.

Mr. MANN. Not more than one-third. Here is a case where, after having had considerable controversy as to whether we should furnish a little money to buy seed for people who could not cultivate the soil unless we bought the seed, we now propose to pay men for not cultivating the soil. They can not raise a cotton crop profitably and we pay them on the assumption that they could, and pay them if they will not plant cotton. I do not wonder that no one from the cotton States rises to defend the proposition, though, of course, they will vote for it.

Not being able to get a rise, I withdraw the point of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan reserves the point of order.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Can the gentleman from Minnesota tell us how much of that $200,000 has been used?

Mr. ANDERSON. This last year?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am unable to tell the gentleman, but I think only a small proportion of it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. What area was covered? How much vacant or unused land was taken care of?

Mr. ANDERSON. The infested area is not very large. I have a map here, and if the gentleman will look at it he will see that there were only two quite large infested areas last year. One of them was in the southeastern portion of Texas and the other in the southwestern portion of Louisiana. The Louisiana territory was entirely cleaned up this last year, so that there was no bollworm there last year. In addition to the two large areas which I have indicated there are several small infestations along the border. These infestations are very small, however.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The map indicates points very far distant from each other. Does the gentleman mean that the infestation is in the extreme southeastern part of Texas and in the extreme western part?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes. Those infestations in the western part are incident to movement across the river from infested districts in Mexico. They are very small and they are in a section of Texas where very little cotton is grown and there is not very much danger of the spread of the bollworm from those sections if an adequate quarantine is maintained.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I was very much opposed to the passage of that joint resolution because I did not think it was proper for the Federal Government to use money for that purpose; but the House thought differently, and I defer to its judgment.

Mr. ANDERSON. I should like to say in this connection that the whole success of the campaign to eradicate this worm consists in noncotton growing in the sections in which the worm appears in large numbers or appears at all. Without legislation or without the rigid application of the noncotton-zone plan the possibilities of eliminating the worm would be immeasurably reduced.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I do not intend to make the point of order, because the House itself voted upon this question at one time. I wish to ask the gentleman another question. I notice that the bill appropriates money and authorizes investigation as to the existence of the pink bollworm in foreign countries, Mexico, and elsewhere. In what foreign countries besides Mexico is the pink bollworm found?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not think it is contemplated there is to be an investigation in any other place except Mexico, but my recollection is the worm is found in Egypt, parts of South America, and, perhaps, India.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It is found in the Hawaiian Islands?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It destroyed the cotton industry out there.

Mr. ANDERSON. They do not raise cotton now on account of this bug.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. My understanding is they are not raising cotton out there now. Is it because of the ravages of the pink boll worm?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is the report of the department.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That is news to me. Well, is there any intention of making an investigation and use a part of this money in foreign countries other than Mexico?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think not.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It seems to me it would not be wise to use these words "Mexico or elsewhere," because it would justify making an examination and trips all over the world.

Mr. ANDERSON. Of course, with a worm as destructive as this one it is necessary, I think, to make an investigation in the countries in which it exists in order that it may be ascertained how it behaves under different environments and see the extent to which it has been possible to grow cotton in its presence and the methods that have been taken in other countries to make the growing of cotton possible, notwithstanding the presence of the worm. If, for instance, the weevil or worm went outside its present territory and into the cotton belt proper, we would be confronted with the necessity immediately of the adoption of methods which would enable us to grow cotton notwithstanding the presence of the worm. Some preparation ought to be made, it seems to me, for an eventuality of that kind.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think the gentleman is entirely right, but it seems to me his statements after all are inconsistent. As I understand, he said there is no intention of making any investigation in any foreign country except Mexico, and the gentleman in another breath says that the disease is found in a number of other countries, and that it is advisable to make investigations of those other countries.

Mr. ANDERSON. Perhaps I should have said so far as we inquired there was no statement made to us of investigations that are contemplated in any other country now than Mexico.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Another word. Generally speaking, is satisfactory progress being made in this work?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think the work is progressing very well, indeed. There have been some new infestations in the western part of Texas along the Rio Grande, but in the section where noncotton areas have been established there has been very good progress made, and there is a prospect of complete eradication.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It is a terrible pest, and we ought to take hold of it. I know at one time the Government did very good work and the results were satisfactory. I do not understand, however, lately, just what measure of success they have reached.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words, or the requisite number. I remember very distinctly the discussion of this item a year ago. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he has information if this land is adapted to successful cultivation of other crops?

Mr. ANDERSON. I presume some other crops could be raised; a number are.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it is well known to every investigating person that in the progress of our agriculture and its development one of the most important things that has contributed to the increased production of the soil and its successful cultivation is rotation. Now, in the matter of the Hessian fly the farmers have discovered that its ravages can be very successfully combated through rotation. Where alternating crops are raised, it is clearly also demonstrated that better crops are secured through this alternating system. Now, if that might be the case in the sections that are affected by this infestation, why not cultivate this land for other crops?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Let me say to the gentleman that the State of Texas has created a commission on the condemnation of land, and there has been established noncotton zones and has provided for the appointment of impartial appraisers, and those appraisers take into consideration only the difference in what the land would yield in cotton and other crops.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. It was so stated in the discussion a year ago; I remember it now. I would like to ask this question, does the cultivation of other crops or any other crops than cotton contribute to the propagation of this boll worm?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No other crop.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Well, do the weeds that grow on this land?

Mr. BUCHANAN. They have some weeds upon which the pink bollworm feeds, and it has been the policy to destroy those weeds wherever the bollworm appears by the establishment of noncotton zones in reference to that particular weed, and the Agricultural Department has ascertained the weed upon which they feed, which is a weed belonging to the same family as the okra.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Well, the Government has a great task. But it is well known that in many localities of this country infestation that is at present very injurious and destructive to field crops has been entirely eliminated or its ravages have been neutralized successfully through this rotation of crops.

You folks down there tell us that you have improved your conditions agriculturally through alternation and diversity of crop production. Now, the subject to which I alluded a moment ago, the elimination of the Hessian fly, is also true in regard to the corn rootworm, which infests many fields in Iowa, and is common in Kansas, Nebraska, and Missouri; it was entirely eliminated through alternation of crops, and the productivity of the land has been greatly increased thereby. Possibly these discussions and these inquiries are not so pertinent, but I thought about it in this connection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will state to the gentleman that I entirely agree with him. The only thing I want to emphasize as to this appropriation is that the Government has been doing superior work and has stamped out this pest in several sections. Understand that it may appear only in one field, when you establish a cotton zone around it and sprinkle it with oil and burn the trash on the ground. They appeared this year in Ellis County, one of the finest cotton counties in Texas, sometimes making in one year 175,000 bales, and immediately the State and Federal authorities got together and established a zone around the field, and we hope to eliminate it.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. They are alive to the importance of this and are not depending entirely on the Federal Government?

Mr. BUCHANAN. They are.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I want to state that, unfortunately, the farmers upon this land, at least a part of them, did not believe it was the real pink bollworm, or did not want to believe it, and the State and Federal authorities had considerable antagonism from those farmers on whose land the pest appeared first. But finally they have become convinced, and the State is now alive and in splendid condition to combat it. If the State of Texas, in cooperation with the Government, can do that, it will accomplish a great task that will prove its value throughout all time to the American people.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ERADICATION OF THE PARLATORIA DATE SCALE.

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the existence of the Parlatoria date scale in California, Arizona, or any other State, and to provide means for the extermination of this insect in California, Arizona, or elsewhere in the United States, in cooperation with the States concerned, $13,000.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HAYDEN: Page 71, line 10, strike out "$13,000" and insert "$15,000."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the report submitted by the Committee on Appropriations shows that $15,000 was requested for the eradication of the parlatoria date scale. The object of my amendment is to increase the appropriation to the full amount asked for by the Budget Bureau and the Department of Agriculture. We have been told in the course of this debate about the great advantage of promptly suppressing pests of this kind. By appropriating, in one instance, twice as much as was requested the citrus canker was eliminated from the orange groves of the United States. By prompt and adequate appropriations a number of diseases of animals, such as the foot-and-mouth disease and contagious pleuropneumonia, have been completely eradicated. In this instance the department has located the infested date orchards and knows exactly what must be done and has asked for a specific sum of money with which to do it. It certainly would be poor economy not to give them at least that much.

Mr. MANN. Is this work progressing satisfactorily?

Mr. HAYDEN. Entirely so, from all the reports I have obtained.

Mr. MANN. They are doing very good work now?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes, indeed.

Mr. MANN. They have not spent $15,000 this year, and they will not?

Mr. HAYDEN. The department has spent all the money that was appropriated.

Mr. MANN. The appropriation was $15,000, of which $5,000 was to be used in the last fiscal year.

Mr. HAYDEN. Five thousand dollars was used during the spring of 1921 and $10,000 during this fiscal year. I might say to the gentleman from Illinois that there has been a recent importation of about 10,000 date trees from the Old World into this country. It is impossible to bring a date tree from abroad which is not infested with this dangerous scale insect. It is of the utmost importance that these trees be kept free from scale so that the offshoots they produce can be sold to the date growers of the Southwest. In view of this very large importation, one of the largest ever made, it is highly desirable that the appropriation be maintained at $15,000 without reduction, as it is a question of insurance of an industry already worth as many millions as the appropriation calls for thousands. All of the infested orchards must be kept under quarantine.

Mr. MANN. The quarantining part comes under another appropriation.

Mr. HAYDEN. That may be true, but the eradication of the parlatoria scale comes under this appropriation, and that is the reason why the full amount is needed. During the war it was impossible to import date trees, but a number were contracted for and have been recently brought into the United States which, with the stock formerly obtained, will thoroughly establish the date industry in the United States.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Gladly.

Mr. MANN. If the private parties who have these date orchards deliberately import infected date trees from abroad, is it proper to ask the General Government to clean them from the disease?

Mr. HAYDEN. The importation was not made by private individuals, but by the Government of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Are we importing millions of young date trees?

Mr. HAYDEN. No. The Department of Agriculture imported 10,000 this year, and they must all be disinfected.

Mr. MANN. Who gets them?

Mr. HAYDEN. The imported trees are planted in Government date orchards or in cooperative date orchards where the Government has absolute control of the land for 20 years.

Mr. MANN. And give them away to somebody?

Mr. HAYDEN. No. There is an agreement, however, that they shall be sold at a reasonable price.

Mr. MANN. Should that not cover the cost of cleaning them?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is necessary to first bring over the original tree, and then other trees are propagated by removing the suckers from them. There will be no trees to sell from this importation until several years from now, but in the meantime this scale must either be destroyed or the entire date industry will be ruined. The department has asked for this amount of money, and I am interested in seeing that the entire sum requested is appropriated.

Mr. MANN. The bureau got $15,000, and $10,000 for use this year, and they say they are doing all right with it. I think it would be in luck to get $3,000 more.

Mr. HAYDEN. The date experts of the Department of Agriculture are agreed that date culture in this country is almost impossible unless the parlatoria date scale is eradicated completely. Eradication work has been in progress for some years, but the rapid expansion of the date industry has necessitated more active measures to bring about a complete eradication of this very dangerous pest.

The date palm has been successfully introduced from Mesopotamia, Egypt, and the desert regions of North Africa into Arizona, California, and Texas, and of late this promising new fruit industry has been expanding rapidly. It is unquestionably destined to be one of the leading fruit industries of the hot, irrigated valleys of the Southwestern States. Already nearly $10,000,000 is invested in this industry and the investments are rapidly increasing.

The date industry, bringing into utilization lands not now yielding high-priced crops, will undoubtedly return to the Federal Treasury ten times all the moneys expended in establishing this new and promising fruit culture. In Arizona, particularly, both of the two largest plantations in the State, at Tempe and at Yuma, are dangerously infested with parlatoria scale, and this infestation delays the establishment of branch date gardens urgently needed to demonstrate the date-producing capacities of the various irrigated valleys in the State. The same is true in California. Ten or twelve of the date plantations, some of them the largest in the State, are infested with this scale, to say nothing of the 10,000 date offshoots received this year from abroad, every one of which is undoubtedly infested.

I would be pleased to hear from the gentleman in charge of the bill as to what reason there is for not allowing the full amount requested by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. ANDERSON. The reason is very simple. It was expected that this work would be cleaned up this year, or practically so. It is proceeding under the current law on the basis of an expenditure of $13,000. There is no reason in the world for appropriating more than is used this year. The committee think that $13,000 will be entirely ample for the work. There is not an item in this bill in which we have a greater interest than in this, and if we thought for a moment that $15,000 was necessary to advance the work on a satisfactory scale we would not have thought of reducing it at all. But the committee thought it was absolutely certain on the basis of the progress that has already been made that $13,000 would carry it on very well next year.

Mr. HAYDEN. Then it is a question of judgment between the committee and those actually engaged in the work of eradicating this pest. I would rather give the benefit of the doubt to the Department of Agriculture as to the amount of this appropriation, and on that basis I hope that my amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTROL AND PREVENTION OF SPREAD OF THE MEXICAN BEAN BEETLE.

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the recent introduction and rapid multiplication of the Mexican bean beetle in the State of Alabama and other States, and to provide means for the study, experimentation in eradication, and for the control and prevention of the spread of this insect in that State and to other States, in cooperation with the State of Alabama and other States concerned and with individuals affected, including the employment of persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and all other necessary expenses, $25,000.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do so for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question with reference to a provision that has already been passed. On page 69 there is a paragraph authorizing the interchange of appropriations. I notice that it provides that not to exceed 10 per cent of the amount in any of these items may be transferred from one appropriation to another. At the bottom of the paragraph it provides that not more than 10 per cent shall be added to any item of appropriation, except in cases of extraordinary emergency, and then only on the written order of the Secretary of Agriculture. Does not the gentleman think that a good deal of leeway is given in the last provision for transferring an appropriation, say one of the big appropriations, whereby the department might be able to transfer enough to one of the smaller ones to make it several times as large under that provision there?

Mr. ANDERSON. Under the interpretation that the solicitor and the comptroller have placed upon this paragraph the transfers apply only to appropriations within a bureau. There can be no transfer from one bureau to another. The paragraph to which the gentleman has referred does give quite a wide latitude, but I think that is absolutely necessary. As the gentleman well knows, it is impossible to anticipate the breaking out of contagious animal diseases, for instance, and infestations of insects, which may do an enormous amount of damage if they are not reached promptly and stamped out. This provision is intended to permit the transfer of sums in that way in order that the emergency represented by an outbreak of that kind might be promptly met.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Has this provision been carried in past years?

Mr. ANDERSON. It was carried for many years, except last year, when it went out on a point of order. I think it is very important.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

VAULT FOR REFRIGERATING PLANT.

For the construction of a vault for the housing, and the transfer to and the installation therein, of the machinery and apparatus of the refrigerating plant of the Bureau of Animal Industry, $25,000.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, when the item in this bill appropriating $25,000 for the examination, appraisal, and survey of lands in effecting exchanges within the national forests was under consideration by the Agricultural Subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations, Mr. L. F. Kneipp, assistant forester, in charge of the lands division of the Forest Service, discussed the general policy involved in such exchanges. His remarks appear on pages 186 to 188 of the hearings held on February 1, 1922, and are of particular interest because since that time the House has passed the Smoot bill (S. 490) to consolidate national forest lands. On March 10 the Senate concurred in the House amendments to this measure, and it will probably be approved by the President and become a law within the near future. The statement is as follows:

Mr. KNEIPP. The privately owned lands within the national forests amount to 25,154,414 acres, which is 14 per cent or approximately one-seventh of the gross area of the national forests. These lands are largely nonagricultural in character, and the major portion are valuable for forest purposes only. While they represent in part appropriations under the homestead laws, they embrace lands granted to States, railroads, and other grantors, and also lands appropriated under other than the homestead laws.

Mr. ANDERSON. Are they lands that have been cut over, or are they still in timber?

Mr. KNEIPP. Both. Some of them contain timber and some are cut over. The economic value of these lands is primarily for the production of forests. Some of them are valuable for grazing, but how long they will be valuable for grazing purposes in continued private ownership is problematical. These private holdings are widely interspersed among Government lands and by their location create a situation which greatly complicates the use, management, and protection of either the Government or the privately owned lands. Efficient utilization, management, or protection is best conducted within natural units of operation. The timber operator can log most economically and efficiently when he can take all of the timber within a unit, but with part of the land owned by the Government and part by private owners this frequently is impossible. The same condition prevails with relation to grazing use. In protection against fire, insect infestations, etc., complete coordination is necessary but very frequently unobtainable because of reluctance on the part of the private owner to participate in the work to the same degree as the Government, or, in some cases, because of legal restrictions which preclude governmental action along lines proposed by the private owner.

To meet this situation, Congress has already passed 14 acts authorizing exchanges within specified national forests and 7 acts permitting exchange with specifically named owners of private lands. It has pending before it a total of 33 bills for the same purpose. Thus far the Forest Service has consummated 4 exchanges with States involving 756,402 acres of base land, and 44 exchanges with private owners involving 156,422 acres of base land. At the present time four exchanges with States, embracing a total base area of 847,560 acres, are pending. A number of exchanges with individuals have been carried to a tentative or preliminary stage, but have not yet reached the forester's office.

In order that the public interest shall be properly safeguarded and that there shall be absolutely no possibility of conditions such as were created by the old lieu land law, it is necessary that the base lands offered under acts of Congress and the lands to be selected in lieu thereof shall be carefully examined and appraised by officers of the Government. The costs of such examination and appraisal range from 1 cent per acre up to as high as 25 cents per acre in cases where very extensive timber values are involved. The average cost of examination and appraisal, however, is from 2 to 4 cents per acre.

Considering the extent of the legislation already passed by Congress, it may be proper to ask why more extensive exchanges with private owners have not been made? One reason has been the inability of the Forest Service to accept the basic land values demanded by the private owners. The heavy demand for grazing lands during the past several years has caused an advance in the price of that type of land which the Forest Service does not believe to be permanent. We are unable to assent to the values of $2.50, $3.50, or $4 placed by the owners on the property, while they, on the other hand, refuse to assent to the values of $1.25, or $1.50, or perhaps $0.75, which the Forest Service believes to be correct. The result has been a temporary deadlock which has restricted exchange negotiations. Another development has been the frankly expressed view of some private landowners that the public purposes to which the lands are to be devoted by the Government if acquired, and their adaptability to such purposes, warranted the Government in allowing for them a higher value per acre than they would command in the open market. Refusal to accede to this position has also retarded exchange negotiations. The policy of the Forest Service in handling exchange work has been, first, to approve only those exchanges which are in the public interest. Exchanges for the convenience or profit of private landowners are not deemed to be within the purview of the exchange legislation except when also advantageous to the Government.

Of course, because of the conditions previously outlined it is practicable for both the private landowner and the Government to benefit mutually from these exchanges without either party sacrificing any part of its interest. Another point always stressed is that the value of the base and selected lands shall be determined by careful appraisals, and that in making such appraisals only the market values established by transactions between willing purchasers and willing sellers will be recognized. In no instance are theoretical computations or yield or expectation values used in making appraisals. Continued insistence is laid upon the principle that the Government shall not and will not value offered lands at more than a private purchaser would have to pay for them under conditions of voluntary sale. Another point carefully guarded against is the establishment through exchange of a monopoly of the timber within a region or upon which a region is dependent. Another point always guarded against is a reduction in the county's share of the gross receipts from the sale of forest resources which would hurt the county financially.

The volume of future exchange work is wholly problematical, but if half the bills now pending in Congress become laws the exchange work will be very heavy. For illustration: One bill relating to three national forests in northern Idaho, which has passed both Houses in slightly different form and is now with the conference committee, would permit exchanges aggregating almost half a million acres. Senator BURSUM'S bill, S. 920, which has also passed both Houses in slightly different form and is now with the conferees, would authorize exchanges in any forest in New Mexico, and under its provisions a million acres or more may be offered in exchange. Senator SMOOT'S bill, S. 490, which has passed the Senate and is now before the House, authorizes exchanges in any national forest, and thus would embrace the entire 25,000,000 acres of privately owned lands, although, of course, much that would never be offered to or accepted by the Government for forest purposes.

Mr. ANDERSON. There is no legislation now which authorizes exchanges in general language?

Mr. KNEIPP. No, sir. None has been enacted so far. S. 490, introduced by Senator SMOOT, is the one now pending.

The exchange work is important and valuable, first, to the Government in creating conditions whereby its valuable forest properties can be more economically administered, more efficiently protected, and better utilized, and to the private owner by making it possible for him to assemble his private holdings into units susceptible of the best use and management.

Of the 25,154,414 acres of land not owned by the United States, it is estimated by the Forest Service that it would be advantageous if about 10,000,000 acres were in Government ownership. The remainder is principally agricultural or mineral land, and consequently chiefly valuable for development by private enterprise. In order to make available information as to the maximum amount of land that might possibly be exchanged under the terms of the Smoot bill, I shall print the following table, compiled by the engineering branch of the Forest Service and published on June 30, 1921:

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OLYMPIC NATIONAL FOREST.

For emergency expenditures incident to the disposal of wind-thrown and intermingled or adjoining timber on the Olympic National Forest and for emergency measures necessary to protect from fire the timber on the Olympic National Forest, including the repair and construction of roads, fire lanes, trails, telephone lines, or other means of communication, through or along the boundaries of the area or areas of blown-down timber on the north and west sides of said national forest, and for the employment of extra guards and patrolmen as may be found necessary by the Secretary of Agriculture, $33,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on forest fires and the Forest Service generally.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CENTER MARKET, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Operation and management: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture, in carrying out the provisions of the act of March 4, 1921 (41 Stat. L., p. 1441), to pay for ice, electricity, gas, water, fuel, travel, stationery, printing, telegrams, telephones, labor, supplies, materials, equipment, miscellaneous expenses, necessary repairs and alterations, to be reimbursed by any person for whose account any such expenditure may be made; to continue the employment of the necessary persons under the conditions in existence at the time of the taking over of the property by the Secretary of Agriculture, with such changes thereof as he may find necessary; to provide a fund for the payment of freight, express, drayage, and other charges and claims against the commodities accepted for storage, and to require reimbursement thereof with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, and to remove, sell, or otherwise dispose of such commodities held as security for such payment when such reimbursement is not made when due, all reimbursement of such payments and all receipts from such disposition of commodities to be credited to such fund and to be reexpendable therefrom; and to use such other means as the Secretary of Agriculture may find necessary for the proper occupancy and use by the Government and its tenants of said property, $165,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SNELL. I notice under this item that last year a commission was appointed to make an estimate of what it would cost. I wondered whether that commission had given the committee any information as to the cost.

Mr. ANDERSON. The commission has not yet made its findings as to cost. It has until April 4 to do that. Of course, if it makes a determination before that, we shall be able to take it over earlier.

Mr. SNELL. There is nothing to show whether a profit will be made out of this enterprise or otherwise?

Mr. ANDERSON. We have figures showing the receipts and disbursements of the market company and the amount of expenditures to be incurred by the Government. The total revenues, as I recall, last year of the market company were $280,000, as against estimated expenditures for the fiscal year 1923 under Government operation of $175,000.

Mr. SNELL. It is necessary, is it not, for the Government to make extensive repairs in order to put it into proper shape?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; to the extent of about $58,000.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman thinks if we do not pay too much for it we will get out of it without losing much money?

Mr. ANDERSON. Exactly.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph on the ground that it is legislation, unauthorized, on an appropriation bill. That is the point of order. It is legislation.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the law authorizes the taking over of this property, and a commission was appointed to appraise it and make a report by April 4. On this report the Government takes over the property under the law and operates it under very extensive provisions for its operation.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not a fact that so far as the act went it was merely to make a complete survey and report?

Mr. ANDERSON. Oh, no, indeed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It provides for a complete transfer.

Mr. ANDERSON. It provides specifically for the transfer of the property to the Government and that the Government shall have the title immediately upon the filing of the report of this commission as to the value of the property.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing in that act which authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to take over the property in the sense that it also takes over ice, electricity, gas, water, fuel, travel, stationery, printing, telegrams, telephones, labor, supplies, materials, equipment, miscellaneous expenses, necessary repairs, alterations, and so on. There is much of legislation in this particular paragraph.

Mr. ANDERSON. I guess the way to get at it is to read the language for the benefit of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from Minnesota, as a practical market man, if it would be possible to operate the market without the use of ice, electricity, gas, water, and fuel, or could it be operated wholly on hot air? [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON. It is necessary to have all of those things, and it can not be operated on hot air.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule unless gentlemen desire to discuss the point of order.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Rule!

The CHAIRMAN. In looking up the law under which the authorization was given to the Government to take over this market, it sems to the Chair very clear that the authorization exists, and that this provision is in order.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will read:

Chapter 171, Forty-first Statutes, page 1442, approved November 4, 1921: "The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, out of appropriations made by Congress from time to time for that purpose, to employ such persons and to purchase such materials as may be essential to the operation or maintenance of said property and for the proper management and control thereof."

In view of that law, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I make the motion for the purpose of inviting the attention of the chairman of the committee to the relative expense of conducting the market as compared with the conducting of it by its now former owners.

The act of May 20, 1870, leased this property to a corporation for 99 years at an annual rental of $25,000. By a piece of legislative legerdemain the annual rental, in a few months thereafter, was reduced to $20,000; and then in a few months after that it was reduced to $7,500. That rental went for many years to the District of Columbia and is now going to the District of Columbia. The District of Columbia is getting $7,500 a year as rental of that property. For about 50 years the United States Government has been contributing dollar for dollar under the half-and-half plan against that $7,500. So the United States Government has not only been losing the rental of the property, but under the half and half act relative to the District of Columbia, it has been contributing another $7,500. It has appeared heretofore in the inquiries conducted into this matter that that $7,500 rental was only one-tenth of 1 per cent of the value of the property, as fixed by the assessor. Notwithstanding that the United States Government was leasing its own property at one-tenth of 1 per cent of its value, it has been renting surrounding property at many times that rental. In addition to that, while leasing this property to the Washington Market Co. at $7,500 a year, the Washington Market Co. in turn has been charging the District of Columbia as much as $14,000 a year for the rental of one part of it.

But there is one thing that might come up between the conferees to which attention might now be invited, and that is this, that it appears in the hearings that the capital stock of the Washington Market Co. was $1,000,000. A million dollars capital stock was authorized, but the Washington Market Co. throughout all these years has issued only $150,000 of the capital stock. It has been paying 5 per cent dividend on $850,000 capital stock that never has been issued. They have issued $200,000 bonds upon the property, but they need never have done that if they had only issued $200,000 more of its capital stock.

I submit these few remarks for the benefit of those who may have the control of the matter in conference, with the view of controverting any idea that may be suggested by the other body that this transfer will not be a paying investment to the United States Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ENFORCEMENT OF PACKERS AND STOCKYARDS ACT.

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the packers and stockyards act, approved August 15, 1921, $410,500: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $5,000 per annum except one person at a rate of $6,500 per annum.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the proviso. There is no authority for raising salaries, or at least one salary to $6,500.

Mr. ANDERSON. I admit that it is subject to the point of order if the gentleman from Texas insists upon making it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. I offer an amendment in lieu of the matter stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the point of order was made merely against the proviso.

Mr. BLANTON. Just merely against the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman states that his point of order was simply against the proviso in the item on page 81?

Mr. BLANTON. No. Merely against the proviso on page 80.

The CHAIRMAN. On page 80, beginning with line 14.

Mr. ANDERSON. I was under a misapprehension. I now understand that the gentleman made his point of order against the proviso on page 80. I do not concede the point of order upon that. That is a limitation. There is no provision at all limiting the salary under the act.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman think it wise to put the limitation as high as he has placed it?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; indeed, I do.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman thinks that, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. The point of order is not good. I would like to have it ruled upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled. The Chair thinks the only way now to change the situation is by unanimous consent.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. The Chair ruled upon the admission made by the gentleman from Minnesota under a misapprehension. I do not want that ruling to stand as the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota conceded the point of order and the Chair ruled.

Mr. ANDERSON. I conceded it under a misapprehension.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the ruling of the Chair be vacated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

MAXIMUM SALARIES.

That hereafter the maximum salary of any scientific investigator, or other employee engaged in scientific work and paid from the general appropriations of the Department of Agriculture, shall not exceed at the rate of $6,500 per annum: Provided, That for the fiscal year 1923 no salary shall be paid under this paragraph at a rate per annum in excess of $5,000 except the following: Not more than eight in excess of $5,000 but not in excess of $5,500 each, and not more than three in excess of $5,500 each.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. I make a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I will reserve it.

Mr. BLANTON. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a statement in regard to this matter. The question of raising the limit of maximum salaries in the Agriculture Department came before the committee and the Secretary of Agriculture was there with several of his men. I think from his statement in a few of these cases the maximum limit should be raised. But after the hearings the Agricultural Committee reported a bill to the House——

Mr. MANN. I have it in my hand.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Specifically stating that 24 of them should be raised.

Mr. MANN. Not in accordance with the paragraph in the bill?

Mr. KINCHELOE. No.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. All the officials mentioned by the gentlemen are covered by the reclassification bill which the House passed some time ago, and I see no reason why the matter is not taken care of by that bill.

Mr. KINCHELOE. That question was raised before the committee, but the contention of the Secretary of Agriculture was that even if the reclassification bill became a law it could not become a law within the next calendar year, and for that reason they were satisfied with the bill which the Agricultural Committee reported.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that a few years ago the highest pay for this class of employees was $3,000?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It was increased to $3,500, then it was increased to $4,000, and then on March 9 the Committee on Agriculture reports a bill to the House making the highest salary $6,000. This bill was reported with the highest salary $6,500. The reclassification bill covers all of these cases.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I want to say that I am in sympathy with the point of order and expected to make it myself. But this provision in this bill throws the bars down and gives them unlimited authority to increase the salaries as they may see fit, and I do not think it should be done.

Mr. MANN. In the bill that we passed?

Mr. KINCHELOE. No; in this bill here it says in the proviso that it limits it for 1923.

Mr. MANN. It makes the raise in salary permanent legislation.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Absolutely.

Mr. MANN. And the only restriction is for the next fiscal year.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes; for the next fiscal year, and after that anybody engaged in scientific work can be paid any amount.

Mr. MANN. I thought the gentleman was seeking to defend that provision in the bill.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Oh, no; the reason I asked the gentleman to reserve the point of order was to show that the Agricultural Committee had reported a bill only giving them the right to increase the salary of 24 employees in scientific work, while this after the year 1923 will give them blanket authority.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Was not the bill from the Agricultural Committee the result of a conference with the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes; and it was absolutely satisfactory, and then they come to the subcommittee on appropriations and ask that after 1923 they have blanket authority to fix salaries.

Mr. BLANTON. Of course the point of order will have to be sustained and the paragraph go out, but I call attention to the fact that only three employees in the limitation are placed on the salary mentioned in line 10.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I expected to make the point of order if the gentleman from Illinois did not, but the point I am making is that the Secretary of Agriculture came before the Committee on Agriculture and agreed to this bill, and then he goes to the subcommittee on appropriations and gets blanket authority after 1923.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, in connection with the action of the subcommittee, I want to say that this was agreed upon before the action of the Committee on Agriculture in reporting the bill to which the gentleman from Kentucky has referred. So it could not fairly be said that the department, after agreeing with the Committee on Agriculture as to a limitation, came before the subcommittee and asked for a higher limitation.

Mr. GARNER. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. ANDERSON. I have not the floor.

Mr. GARNER. Is it the purpose of the gentleman in the future in the reports to point out and suggest legislation necessary to take care of the departments? I asked the gentleman from Illinois the other day why the committee did not adopt the policy of pointing out to the legislative committees legislation that appeared to the Committee on Appropriations necessary, in order that they might make appropriations that appeal to them, and he said that was going to be the policy in the future. I am wondering if the gentleman is in agreement with the chairman with reference to that?

Mr. MANN. It is the duty of every legislative committee that deals with the matter of appropriations to study the appropriation bills.

Mr. GARNER. I was merely trying to get the legislative committee a primer on which to study these matters from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANN. Some of them do not need a primer.

Mr. ANDERSON. As far as I am concerned, I shall hesitate very much to advise the Agricultural Committee as to what legislation it ought to pass.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it may be possible that there should be some increase in the salaries of the scientists employed by the Government. I do not know who prepared the provision in this appropriation bill. As suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE], it is very shrewdly prepared. Apparently it puts a limit upon the number of salaries that can be paid above $5,000 by providing a limit for the next fiscal year. After that it takes off the limit entirely. Of course, some innocent gentleman somewhere innocently thought that a thing of that sort could go through the House and nobody ever notice it. He will know better the next time. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment in lieu of the paragraph stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON: Page 81, at the top of the page, insert:

"That hereafter the maximum salary of any scientific investigator or other employee engaged in scientific work and paid from the general appropriations of the Department of Agriculture shall not exceed at the rate of $6,000 per annum: Provided, That no salary shall be paid under this paragraph at a rate per annum in excess of $4,500 except the following: Not more than seven in excess of $4,500 but not in excess of $5,000 each; not more than five in excess of $5,000 but not in excess of $5,500 each, and not more than three in excess of $5,500."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment. It is legislation on an appropriation bill. The word "hereafter" makes it legislation, regardless of anything else.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have offered provides the same limitation as was made by the Committee on Agriculture in the bill which it has recently reported. I admit, however, that there is no legislation authorizing it at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. WALSH having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HICKS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10730, the Agricultural appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10663) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. GLASS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the amendment providing for free seeds.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York demands a separate vote on the amendment for the free distribution of seeds. Is a separate vote demanded on any other? If not, the Chair will put the other amendments en gross. The question is on agreeing to the other amendments.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 26, after line 7, insert the following as a new paragraph:

"Purchase and distribution of valuable seeds: For purchase, propagation, testing, and congressional distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants; all necessary office fixtures and supplies, fuel, transportation, paper, twine, gum, postal cards, gas, electric current, rent outside of the District of Columbia, official traveling expenses, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same; for repairs and the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $360,000. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to expend the said sum, as nearly as practicable, in the purchase, testing, and distribution of such valuable seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, the best he can obtain at public or private sale, and such as shall be suitable for the respective localities to which the same are to be apportioned, and in which same are to be distributed as hereinafter stated; and such seeds so purchased shall include a variety of vegetable and flower seeds suitable for planting and culture in the various sections of the United States: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture, after due advertisement and on competitive bids, is authorized to award the contract for the supplying of printed packets and envelopes and the packeting, assembling, and mailing of the seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, or any part thereof, for a period of not more than five years nor less than one year, if by such action he can best protect the interests of the United States. An equal proportion of five-sixths of all seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall, upon their request, after due notification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the allotment to their respective districts is ready for distribution, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents, or mailed by the department upon the receipt of their addressed franks, in packages of such weight as the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General may jointly determine: Provided, however, That upon each envelope or wrapper containing packages of seeds the contents thereof shall be plainly indicated, and the Secretary shall not distribute to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate seeds entirely unfit for the climate and locality he represents, but shall distribute the same so that each Member may have seeds of equal value, as near as may be, and the best adapted to the locality he represents: Provided also, That the seeds allotted to Senators and Representatives for distribution in the districts embraced within the twenty-fifth and thirty-fourth parallels of latitude shall be ready for delivery not later than the 10th day of January: Provided also, That any portion of the allotments to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress remaining uncalled for on the 1st day of April shall be distributed by the Secretary of Agriculture, giving preference to those persons whose names and addresses have been furnished by Senators and Representatives in Congress and who have not before during the same season been supplied by the department: And provided also, That the Secretary shall report, as provided in this act, the place, quantity, and price of seeds purchased, and the date of purchase; but nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from sending seeds to those who apply for the same. And the amount herein appropriated shall not be diverted or used for any other purpose but for the purchase, testing, propagation, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, mulberry, and other rare and valuable trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and Mr. CLARKE of New York and Mr. JOHNSON of Washington demanded a division.

The committee again divided, and there were—ayes 60, noes 45.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is clear that there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 174, nays 141, answered "present" 2, not voting 111, as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ANDERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REGULATING THE BUSINESS OF PAWNBROKERS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6309), known as the pawnbrokers' bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6309) to regulate pawnbrokers and their business in the District of Columbia.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire as to the time. I believe there was a division at the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has consumed 18 minutes in favor of the bill. No time has been consumed in opposition to it.

Mr. FOCHT. I just want to inquire whether the ranking member of the District of Columbia Committee is going to ask for time——

Mr. BLANTON. I expect to ask for recognition; I did the other day, but we can run along under the general rules of the House.

Mr. BURTON. May I ask the gentleman if the gentleman from Texas desires to be heard in opposition to the bill or in favor of it?

Mr. BLANTON. I am against the bill. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6309).

The question was taken and the motion was agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6309) with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6309), which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6309) to regulate pawnbrokers and their business in the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has 42 minutes remaining.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the Chair to this fact, that those 18 minutes that are charged against me were not consumed in any relationship whatever to this bill. I quite generously gave the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL] opportunity to present something, and I do not feel that those 18 miuutes should be taken——

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; the gentleman used three minutes himself and the other was in general debate under the rule.

Mr. FOCHT. Not in any connection with this bill whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no option in the matter. The gentleman from Pennsylvania yielded to the gentleman from Maryland and therefore the time is charged to him.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in opposition to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania claim the floor at this time?

Mr. FOCHT. Yes, sir; I certainly do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 42 minutes remaining.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in presenting a bill of this character, bringing it from the committee, there might be such a thing as an apology offered if it were not for the fact that the system of charging rates of interest for the use of money has obtained throughout the history of the world, even from the time when the Master drove the originators of the scheme out of the temple. That seems to have met the whole matter, anything aside from what is duly prescribed by law, and assumes that dignity of what they call a banking system. Unfortunately in the District of Columbia, the loaning of money has descended to a point where it is characterized and denominated as a species of graft operated and conducted by loan sharks, or whatever they are. There are two kinds of systems or two divisions of this money-lending business throughout the United States. It is recognized and sanctioned by law in every State in the Union. There was at one time a flourishing business in the District of Columbia up until February 4, 1913, when there was enacted a law here governing pawnbrokers and what they called loan sharks, holding the rate of interest allowable to 1 per cent a month. As a consequence of that law, I am advised that not one loan under its restrictive provisions has been made since that time, hence the demand has come to Congress through the Committee on the District of Columbia, the agency or the medium through which these matters are presented to the Congress, and we find here in the report submitted May 18, 1921, an appeal for relief from this 1 per cent which makes it prohibitive to secure loans from pawnbrokers. There are at least 30 different associations who have asked for the essential features of this legislation, as follows:

The Central Labor Union of Washington, D. C.
The Chamber of Commerce of Washington, D. C.
The Central Union Mission of Washington, D. C.
The Private Soldiers and Sailors' Legion.
The Benning Citizens' Association.
The Central Citizens' Association.
The Bradbury Heights Citizens' Association.
The Citizens' Northwest Suburban Association.
The West End Citizens' Association.
The Howard Park Citizens' Association.
The South Washington Civic Association.
The Capitol Heights Citizens' Association.
The Brightwood Citizens' Association.
The Seat Pleasant Citizens' Association.
The Civic Betterment Association.
The Northwest Washington Citizens' Association.
The Deanwood Citizens' Association.
The Chilum-Castle Woodburn Citizens' Association.
The Randle Highlands Citizens' Association.
The Prince Georges County Citizens' Association.
The Southeast Citizens' Association.
The Southwest Washington Citizens' Association.
The Hillsdale Citizens' Association.
The East End Suburban Citizens' Association.
The Georgetown Citizens' Association.
The Langdon-Woodridge Citizens' Association.
The East Washington Citizens' Association.
The National Woman's Party.

Now, that is the source from whence comes the importunity to restore some method by which more loans can be made. The rate charged by the different States runs all the way from 3 per cent to 10 per cent, and in most of the States there is an added fee.

Mr. BURTON. That is, per month?

Mr. FOCHT. Yes; per month. I submit the rates charged by the different States:

PAWNBROKING RATES ALLOWED BY LAW IN THE DIFFERENT STATES.

New York: Three per cent per month for six months, less than $100; 2 per cent per month thereafter; 2 per cent per month first six months, over $100, or 1 per cent per month thereafter.

All interest must be paid in full at the expiration of 12 months or new ticket issued, starting the transaction over again.

New York cities.	On amount of—
	$1	$10	$25	$50	$75	$100
Albany	$0.03	$0.30	$0.75	$1.50	$2.25	$3.00

Buffalo	.10	1.00	1.25	1.25	1.25	1.50
Elmira	.10	1.00	1.75	3.00	3.75	5.00
Niagara Falls	.20	1.00	2.00	2.50	3.75	.....
Olean	.10	.60	1.25	1.25	1.87½	.....
Rochester	.10	1.00	1.75	3.00	3.75	5.00
Schenectady	.05	.50	1.25	2.50	3.75	5.00
Syracuse	.25	1.00	2.50	3.00	.....	.....

Massachusetts: On loans of $1 or less, 5 per cent for the first week and 2 per cent for each week thereafter; on loans of from $1 to $3, 4 per cent for the first week, 2½ per cent for each week thereafter; on loans of $3 to $10, 3 per cent for the first week and 2 per cent for each week thereafter; on loans of over $10 to $25, 1 per cent a week; on loans over $25 to $100, 3 per cent a month and each fraction thereof; on loans of over $100, 2 per cent a month and each fraction thereof.

New Hampshire (Concord): On loans of $1 or less, 5 cents for the first week, 2 cents for each week thereafter; over $1 to $3, 4 per cent for the first week and 2½ per cent each week thereafter; over $3 to $10, 3 per cent for the first week and 2 per cent each week thereafter; over $10 to $25, 2½ per cent for the first week, 2 per cent each week thereafter; over $25 to $50, 2 per cent for the first week and 1 per cent each week thereafter; over $50 to $100, 1½ per cent for the first week, 1 per cent each week thereafter; over $100, 1 per cent per week.

Virginia: 10 per cent per month on loans of $25 or less; 5 per cent per month on loans of over $25 and not more than $100; 3 per cent per month on loans over $100.

Rhode Island: 5 per cent per month on loans of $50 or less first six months; 2½ per cent per month on loans of $50 thereafter; 2½ per cent per month on loans of more than $50.

Connecticut: 5 per cent per month on loans up to $15; 3 per cent per month on loans up to $50; 2 per cent per month on loans over $50.

Vermont: 5 per cent per month up to $50; 3 per cent per month over $50. Law also allows a storage charge, agreement to be made by both parties.

New Mexico: 10 per cent per month.
Ohio (Cincinnati): 10 per cent per month on small loans.
Texas (El Paso): 10 per cent per month.
Indiana: 3½ per cent per month.
Maine: 3½ per cent per month.
Arizona: 4 per cent per month.
Colorado: 3 per cent per month.
Illinois: 3 per cent per month.
Montana: 3 per cent per month.
Oregon: 3 per cent per month, with no charge less than $1.
Michigan: 3 per cent per month, with no charge less than 50 cents.
Delaware: 8 per cent per month and 3 per cent per month extra, storage.
Pennsylvania: 5 per cent per month storage, one-half per cent interest per month.
Maryland: 2½ per cent per month.
Georgia: 5 per cent per month, and 25 cents for storage.
Wisconsin (Racine): General practice is to charge 10 per cent per month. No law as to what shall be charged.

I might say, for instance, in a great State like Ohio they charge 3 per cent a month and fees, making a considerable sum, that gives latitude and opportunity for some sharp practice if they desire to perpetrate it upon the poor fellow, the victim who has to borrow the money.

Now, what is known as the Sage Foundation was very much interested originally in measures of this kind, and they thought that 1 per cent would be sufficient, but I find here in a bulletin of the National Federation of Remedial Loan Associations where they appeal for rates of interest and claim that money can not be profitably loaned for less than 3 per cent. I find also here that in the State of Ohio, in an act, section 6339-3, passed in the general assembly May 14, 1921, and approved June 7, 1921, filed in the office of the secretary of state June 8, 1921, it says:

No licensee shall charge, receive, or demand in excess of 5 per cent per month interest on any loans, or discount on any conditional purchase, up to and including the sum of $25, or in excess of 3 per cent per month on loans or discounts above the sum of $25.

Now, that leaves the matter with you, my friends, as to the amount. It matters not to me at all. I am simply the agent that brings this bill before the House and to present such facts, in the brief time that we have here, that we have gathered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. LAMPERT and myself, as a subcommittee, spent many weeks gathering information on this subject. We have prepared a bill. I wish to say, my friends, that whatever virtue may be in any other bill, that really the whole crux of the matter is on this question of percentage, outside of this fact: That I wish to state that we have incorporated in this bill (H. R. 6309) a number of features which have not been in any bill that has been in operation in the District of Columbia, or that is perhaps either here or in the Senate, and I would call the attention of those who are interested in the subject——

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOCHT. Just for a question.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I do not know if I understand the bill thoroughly or not. Does section 10 here legalize the rate of interest of 3 or 2 per cent a year?

Mr. FOCHT. Oh, no.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I am reading this part:

If interest and charges on this loan in excess of the rate of 3 per cent per month up to and including $35 or of the rate of 2 per cent per month over $35 thereof be charged, asked, or received——

Mr. FOCHT. Up to $35.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Three per cent up to $35?

Mr. FOCHT. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does the gentleman think it is wise business for Congress to authorize and legalize the charging of those rates?

Mr. FOCHT. I condemn all kinds of usury, for my part, but how are you going to do business? This is the basis on which it is done.

Mr. JONES of Texas. But if you enact this law you legalize it.

Mr. FOCHT. You did in your State, and in all States. They do it in Pennsylvania. It is an evil that we must meet, but we are going to demand that there be protection. Otherwise there will be no restriction or control.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Have we not a usury law here?

Mr. FOCHT. We are going to make one if we pass this bill. You pass the bill and we will hold them all right.

I will read you a couple of paragraphs from the Pennsylvania law as something new in these bills.

In section 23 of this bill, in addition to the bond above mentioned, which was referred to in these other laws, it says:

That in additon to the bond above mentioned, every such pawnbroker before entering business as aforesaid shall be required to take out a policy or policies of insurance against loss by fire or theft sufficient in amount to cover the fair market value of all articles left with him in pledge as security for loans.

So it does not matter as to the value of what you put up as a pledge. It is absolutely secured by fire and theft insurance, something that never was before incorporated in any of these laws, but which we have in Pennsylvania.

Section 4 provides:

That no person, being a pawnbroker or the employee of a pawnbroker, shall make any loan or advance, or permit to be made any loan or advance, to any minor under the age of 16 years.

That is legislation here to keep the minors out of the thieving business and passing the goods over to the pawnbroker.

In section 27:

That it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation, being in possession of goods and chattels of any description belonging to another, either a storage or warehouseman, pawnbroker, second-hand dealer, or junk dealer, to conceal from any marshal or deputy marshal intrusted with the execution of any writ any such goods or chattels, with intent to prevent any such goods or chattels from being taken or levied upon under any such writ.

The warehouseman, or junk dealer, or any other agency—what they may call the "fence" man.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does this bill legalize the contract between the pawnbroker and a minor between the age of 16 and 21?

Mr. FOCHT. I think they all do. This is the only one that ever limits it.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FOCHT. Yes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will the gentleman address himself to this phase of the subject: There is an abuse in Washington now existing by the business being carried on over the line by a State that charges 10 per cent a month and having their agencies in Washington.

Mr. FOCHT. They can charge 10 per cent. But in the State the gentleman comes from they charge 20 per cent, and they have charged 30 per cent. The whole thing is an outrage. There is some sort of a cloak being covered over it to obscure what is known in Washington, and better known by Mr. JOHNSON than myself, because he has dug deeper into the matter, as the loan shark. They do not want a pawnbroker's bill. They want to go on with the business themselves, in some manner, with a system of notes. I do not know how they do it. They loan the money, and it is reported before the committee that they get as high as 22 instead of 3 per cent.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the bill as a member of the committee.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Pennsylvania introduced a bill, H. R. 5015. Now, that bill had the indorsement of the District Commissioners, did it not?

Mr. FOCHT. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. I hold in my hand a bill (H. R. 5015), which was introduced by yourself.

Mr. FOCHT. Yes; some time ago.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Now, I understand that that bill has the indorsement of the District Commissioners.

Mr. FOCHT. Yes; if they indorsed that bill they will indorse this, because of the added feature of protection to the one who puts up the pledge.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. I understand that they do not indorse this bill. I understand they oppose this, but indorse that.

Mr. FOCHT. I do not think so. I think this has a universal indorsement. There might be a thousand people against it where there are 250,000 for it.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a further question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. FOCHT. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. Does this proposed bill repeal the existing law of February, 1913?

Mr. FOCHT. As to pawnbrokers only. It has no reference to anything but pawnbrokers, separating them from what they call the loan-shark business, a species of banking where they use notes. This is where they receive pledges.

Mr. BURTON. The gentleman's idea is that the existing law continues to be effective as to loans made not secured by pledges?

Mr. FOCHT. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. Will the gentleman state whether there is a Morris plan bank in the District of Columbia?

Mr. FOCHT. No. That was all discussed in statements made before the committee. We understand that that has been operating in some cities; but now, according to the last report read to you from the Sage Foundation, they can no longer loan money or attempt to do it at 1 per cent a month. They must have 3 per cent.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania reserves 25 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, this bill embodies legislation that originally was brought before the House in a bill prepared and introduced by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], who for several years, as you know, was chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia. Later on, as I understand it, or it may have been prior thereto, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] introduced a bill embodying similar legislation, and when that bill was considered before the House it was amended so that it forms the present law here in the District, under which, as the chairman stated, loan sharks operate. Instead of charging you the 1 per cent provided in that legislation, I understand in some instances they charge 30 per cent.

I am against one provision in this bill, and with that provision remaining in the bill I would vote against it. But with that provision changed I would vote for the bill. I refer to the charge of 3 per cent per month interest up to the sum of $35, and after you reach the sum of $35, then with respect to all other amounts the blue sky is the limit as to the maximum amount that is loaned at a charge of 2 per cent. In other words, a transient person, say, some rich actor or some rich person traveling through this city, who would run out of money and would want a large sum immediately and could not get it through the bank on jewelry as collateral, could take diamonds to the extent of $2,000 or $3,000 to one of these pawnbroker shops, and under this law he would have to pay 24 per cent a year on that loan. If they borrowed from $35 down they would pay 36 per cent a year. That is entirely too much interest. I think that provision ought to be changed. With this change, I say, I am in favor of the bill.

Now, I want to discuss another subject for a few minutes. This bill has to do with people's purses. It has to do with the amount of money that the loan sharks can take out of a man's purse in recompense for making loans, little and big. It has to do with purses, and we learn in our early schoolbooks that he—

> Who steals my purse steals trash; * * *
> But he that filches from me my good name
> Robs me of that which not enriches him
> And makes me poor, indeed.

That is the substance of it; I may not have gotten it correctly. But it suffices to make a text for me on this occasion.

Some time ago in the House my colleagues—and I do not question the motive or act of any colleague—saw fit to pass a censure upon me when I thought I was doing my solemn, conscientious duty under my oath. I have never said an unkind word about any colleague who saw fit to take that action; not an unkind word. I have never questioned your motives or your intentions. But self-defense is the first law of nature. It is against the law of the land for one man to take the life of another, but when that life is taken in defense of one's own life it is justifiable under the law. The animal recognizes this law. It is the law of God and man that self-defense is the first law of nature, and that is true with respect not only to a man's person; it is true with respect to a man's good name and his reputation in the country in which he lives.

The country found out what you thought of my act for which I was censured. Do you know that I have received several thousands of communications—from Seattle, Wash., to Florida, and from the extreme northeast to the extreme southwest of this land; from lawyers, from judges on the bench, distinguished Federal judges, doctors, ministers of the gospel, teachers, college professors, professors of high standing in the leading universities of our land, and, yea, more than that, from some of the best women in our country—to the effect that, "Mr. BLANTON, with all due respect to the judgment of your colleagues, I have examined the matter upon which they passed, and, instead of censuring you, I want you to know that I commend you as a citizen of the United States"?

I think it is due to myself and to my family and to the record that I have made for 49 years in my native land that you, my colleagues, against whom I say again I have no malice—I have none against any of you—I think it is mete that you should know something of what your own colleagues, distinguished men and women of this Nation, think of the matter. Let me read you just a few extracts from some of these communications, because I want you to see them and I want the RECORD in behalf of my family in the future to show what the people of the Nation, leading men and women, think about this question.

WILMINGTON, DEL., October 28, 1921.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: I feel it is a privilege to commend the good work you are doing. The unpleasant incident will eventually be of the greatest help to you. Good luck to you.

From Hon. Joseph N. Brown, twice governor of Georgia. Now, if any colleague objects to this I will eliminate it, but this is from a man who has been twice governor of Georgia. This is what he said—and, of course, I offer it with a grain of salt:

In my opinion, every Representative and Senator in the United States, with the exception of Representative BLANTON, of Texas, is afraid of the labor unions.

Well, I know of some men in here who are not, so the governor made a mistake on that. I know a few men in this House with whom I am intimately acquainted who are not afraid of them and not afraid of anything else.

DONNELLSON, IOWA.

CONGRESSMAN BLANTON: I congratulate you as the only man in Congress with sand enough to stand up squarely for the people against the many "holdups" in Congress.

ALBERT BONNELL.

That comes from Iowa. I am not responsible for it.

From the distinguished educator, Dr. William Starr Myers, professor of history and politics in Princeton University:

PRINCETON, N. J., January 18, 1922.

MY DEAR MR. BLANTON: Please accept my sincere thanks for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS. They are exactly what I desired in order to go over the whole case for myself. In reading the accounts of your censure in the newspapers I suspected you had not received a square deal, and I am now confident of it.

Personally I am not opposed to labor unions, but I do feel that the closed shop is not only un-American but absolutely detrimental to the integrity and welfare of this country and the best interests of labor itself.

Permit me to congratulate you on the brave and patriotic thing you have done.

With all good wishes and kindest regards, believe me,

Very sincerely, yours,

WM. STARR MYERS.

CHICAGO, November 24, 1921.

Quite a change is noticeable in the attitude of some of his colleagues toward Representative BLANTON, of Texas. It proved just how far professional agitators will go to carry their point.

Congressman BLANTON certainly was courageous. Neither the threats of the Gompers, nor the appeals of spineless associates prevented him from exposing the methods pursued by professional labor leaders to tyrannize over better men. His attitude is beginning to be understood.

Mr. BLANTON was made to suffer much, has been abused and persecuted, but he has won a great victory for independent labor and genuine Americanism.

[From Ridgly Club, Harvard University.]

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The members of the Ridgly Club, of Harvard University, have instructed me to dispatch to you a note of sympathy and understanding because of the recent vote of censure which the House of Representatives deemed necessary to pass upon you. It seems to us that this vote was an unprincipled attack upon the position which you had assumed and upon your own personal character. The vote of censure itself, the words of the Speaker of the House, the mysterious innuendoes of the press have all contributed to obscure the real issue and to cast upon you personally the odium which not you but the union printers in the Government Printing Office should bear.

It is indeed regrettable that a true conception of this unfortunate incident can not be drilled into the public. In the meantime, we trust that you will accept our expression of sympathy at this time of deplorable persecution.

Very truly, yours,

EDWARD C. KIRKLAND, Secretary.

From the distinguished jurist, Hon. Fred Lamb, judge of the twelfth judicial circuit of Missouri:

MY DEAR MR. BLANTON: Having watched your career with some interest, and I may say admiration, I have studied carefully the record which was the foundation of this attack upon you.

Being accustomed to weighing matters of this kind, I have no hesitancy in pronouncing the attack upon you as an unjustifiable outrage, the like of which finds no precedent in the record of the doings of our Congress.

This was a vile affidavit, but it was a part of your case made against the union-labor element in the Public Printing Office, and I am not sure yet that it was not properly placed in the RECORD. In any event, your good faith in the premises can not be questioned, and if it was an error it can furnish no justification for the attempted expulsion or the reprimand that followed. Many of our people who keep in touch with Congress are of the opinion that you have rendered the country invaluable service in Congress, and we hope that you keep up the fight. Now of all times we need men there with patriotism, brains, and courage to defend the common country. I think you are the right man in the right place. I hope you stay on the job. I hope you go back to your people and upon your record ask a vote of confidence, and I have faith enough in the patriotism and discriminating judgment of the good people of Texas to believe they will stand behind you.

Very sincerely, yours,

FRED LAMB.

DENVER, COLO., November 4, 1921.

Congressman CHARLES FULLER—

I will take some of this out, because it may give offense—

You voted to expel Congressman BLANTON. I recall, however, that you are the man who, when his country was assailed by a savage enemy, sinking our ships and drowning American men, women, and children, voted against America going to war.

There are those who believe your action was due to a pusillanimous knuckling to a disloyal element in your district. No one questions the patriotism of Congressman BLANTON. I still think you should have resigned in 1914.

REV. HARRY E. PURINTON.

From Judge Roy McKittrick:

SALISBURY, MO., November 5, 1921.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: I take the liberty of expressing to you my hearty congratulations for the wonderful fight that you have been making in Congress the last four years for the people of this Nation. I hope you will continue to block the "pork-barrel" Congressmen. The people understand that the reason certain leaders wanted to throw you out was to get rid of your interfering with them. The House censured you, but the people have not. The people of Missouri will not rebuke you, but approve of your efforts in their behalf.

ROY MCKITTRICK.

JACKSON, MISS.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: The Mississippi employing printers, of which I am president, heartily indorse your attitude. I congratulate you. Public sentiment is with you.

J. WOFFORD TUCKER.

[From Father George Zurcher, president of the League of Catholic Priests, fighting in Washington for Americanism and morality.]

Congressman COCKRAN denounced the act of Congressman BLANTON as "deplorably obscene and unspeakably loathsome." But neither Congressman COCKRAN nor any other Congressman said aught against men who may be in the habit of uttering, under the nose of the Government, words characterized by Congressman MONDELL as "unspeakably vile, foul, filthy, profane, blasphemous, and obscene." Is vile language to be ignored and condoned as long as it is not made public? Congressman BLANTON, unable to bring the bad behavior of Government printers to the attention of Congress, brought it to the attention of a higher authority—the people. Are we to ignore the "horrible stuff" as long as it is uttered among men exclusively? If so, we are arrant pharisees or "whited sepulchres." If one Congressman with the help of the Public Printer succeeded in banishing gambling from the Government printing shops, 434 Congressmen ought to banish from it foul language and blasphemy.

HARRISBURG, PA.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: I have carefully read your extended remarks, for inserting which you were publicly reprimanded, and I feel a sense of shame that the reprimand should have been administered for bringing to the light the circumstances.

I write thus to assure you of the sympathy of one unafraid American, who happens to represent the printing interests of a large productive territory, at an infliction wholly undeserved, and to wish more power to you.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: You are one of the few men in public life with nerve enough to blaze the trail to freedom, and you will find that the great majority of the American people are with you, though for business and political reasons they will not give you the encouragement and assistance your splendid effort deserves. More power to you.

F. H. EBELING.

[From Salem (Oreg.) Journal.]

Representative BLANTON has been consistently the champion of the open shop and American plan in Government bureaus, and hence has been a marked man. All the pressure of organized labor has been exerted against him, and the effort at expulsion was due to pressure of labor lobbyists upon Congress to get rid of a man courageous enough to expose their methods.

MARION, OHIO, December 2, 1921.

CANTON, N. Y., November 1, 1921.

The condemned affidavit published was practically in cryptic language. A clean-minded woman or child might say there was some profanity in it, but they would never recognize the filth. That would have to be deciphered by the student of filth and obscenity. Who would ever have heard a word about it were it not that Congress picked it up and went into the scare-head business?

BLANTON was up against a lot of people who wanted to "get" him. Union labor wanted to "get" him, the Woodmen of the World wanted to "get" him, and many others wanted to "get" him, including scores of Congressmen who were forced to vote yes or no on questions when they wished to avoid being put on record. It would seem that the House of Representatives was in deplorably small business.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: It may interest you to know that there are a lot of northern Republicans who agree with you. I applaud your nerve.

BLAINE GAVETT.

I have just a few more that I want to read, and I am reading them only to let you know that the people from one side of the United States to the other, Republicans of high standing in their party—and it is a great party—do not approve of the condemnation I received. They are a little severe on you. In justice to you I want to say their being severe on you because of your having been severe on me is not going to cause me to do you an injustice, and I wish to say that many of you are men of lovable character and disposition, whom I love yet, regardless of the action that you took against me. I can sit and listen to you and discuss matters heart to heart, and I do it every day. There is not a day that passes that I do not sit in friendly relations with men on the floor, men who voted to censure me, but I say again that I have no malice against them. I do it simply in behalf and in defense of my good name for which I have fought and builded for 49 years in this country. Now, I will take a few minutes more time to show you that this sentiment is not from one section, but all over the country, from every State, from your constituents as well as mine.

[From the editor of the Sedgwick Sun, Colorado.]

DEAR MR. BLANTON: Thousands of citizens feel as I do, that you are a martyr to the cause of real Americanism. Personally I am a Republican, but that does not keep me from sending you my expression of sympathy.

Here's hoping you continue your fight and win.

FLAGSTAFF, ARIZ.

That the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is a Sunday-school paper which all the children read is silly rot. BLANTON is a rabid Democrat, but he was doing the whole people a service.

[From Little Rock Daily News.]

NOVEMBER 8, 1921.

BLANTON employed initial letters and dashes to indicate the vile words. Had BLANTON not in some way brought the language out in his speech, he would not have made out his case.

The News wants even one Member of Congress, who so violently opposed BLANTON'S use of the initial letters and dashes, to tell us just how BLANTON would have gotten the facts before the Congress if he had not used them.

Be it said to BLANTON'S credit that if he fights hard he also fights fair, and that he fights for what he conscientiously believes is right.

BLANTON did not indorse such language; he was condemning it. No little child and no woman would understand the letters and dashes. BLANTON believed that the people should know about it. And why shouldn't they? Does not the Government Printing Office belong to the people? Are they not entitled to know the conditions there?

The tempest in the teapot would have been not so riotous if BLANTON'S exposé had not somewhat unsettled ancient customs at Washington and thrown the searchlight of public disapproval on some Government secrets that had been hidden in the closets these many years.

Right and justice are American qualities, and by holding BLANTON up to public scorn Congress can not cover up the fact that the Government Printing Office at Washington is the most disgracefully conducted department in the whole American Government. BLANTON may be able to come back.

[From the Kansas Official, issue December, 1921, p. 20.]

There is one man in the National House of Representatives at Washington, and the accent should be on man. There are no doubt others, but 317 utterly failed to assert their manhood when they sat supinely by, heard the masterful answer of Congressman BLANTON to his traducers, voted to expel, or evaded a record vote by refusing to answer the roll call October 27. Gompers and the unions had them "buffaloed."

The press and the Congressmen gave it out that Mr. BLANTON had used in his speech exposing the rottenness prevailing in the Government Printing Office under union domination language that was "vile, foul, filthy, profane, and obscene." The report sent out by Floor Leader MONDELL, and contained in his resolution to expel, was that the objectionable words were BLANTON'S, and the people were led to believe that they were his own words, his own sentiments, and that he was not a fit man to occupy a seat on the floor of the House. This was carefully constructed, premeditated, and conceived to mislead not only the Members of the House, but the public, and to bolster up and curry favor with the head of the Federation of Labor, Samuel Gompers, and his henchmen.

Unafraid and with his conscience and God as his guide, Mr. BLANTON, against great odds, manfully combated this state of things and refused to be influenced or coerced by Gompers, or to permit by silent acquiescence the usurpation of Government control by union labor. Other Congressmen quailed in the presence of this "high and mighty" set of bulldozers, but not BLANTON. He was right, he knew he was right, and being right he had the "innards" to tell others that they were rabbity. BLANTON would not buy his seat in the House at the sacrifice of honor. Our guess is that nobody can buy BLANTON.

It was shown that a union foreman had called one nonunion man a "black-hearted scab," and threatened, "If the Public Printer and BLANTON fooled with them they would have their heads taken off and lose their jobs, as the unions had the greater influence with Congress." Instead of joining BLANTON in resenting such insinuations and presenting a red-blooded American front against such usurpation of Government authority, Congressmen blanched and shrunk from the warning hand of Gompers. When Gompers demanded the unseating of BLANTON, Congressmen took the cue and sought to politely kill the one man that had the nerve to comply with his oath of office, and do so openly.

And who is BLANTON? A Texas Democrat, every inch a man, whose life and standing in the community in which he has lived has been an open book. Starting out at 10 years of age as the principal breadwinner of his family, for 49 years he made for himself an enviable name by hard knocks and self-denial. On his forty-ninth birthday the vote was taken on his expulsion. The vote was 204 yeas. One weak sister answered "present." Since going to Congress from a service of eight years on the district bench, Mr. BLANTON has persistently fought the usurpation of Government authority. He nettled the "rabbits" in Congress by his persistence, and especially when he compelled a roll call 126 times on measures before the House.

[From the editorial page of the New Sky Line.]

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., November 19, 1921.

Doubtless it failed to penetrate the ivory domes of the Congressmen that if the contents of the affidavit were obscene they were not the words of Congressman BLANTON, but that they did represent what a union agitator on the Government pay roll had during working hours, and in the presence of other workers, hurled at another Government employee. Congressman BLANTON has performed a great public service.

[From the Freeman, New York, Nov. 9, 1921.]

Frankly we suspect a "plant" against Mr. BLANTON, because he has made himself effectively disliked by several powerful political and quasi-political interests. The House went into one of those spasms of morality for revenue only in which it often indulges, and the disgusted spectator may get what satisfaction is to be had out of the acute observation of Remy de Gourmont, that "when morality triumphs no end of indecencies take place."

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 2, 1921.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: Inclosed is clipping from the Dispatch. I wanted you to know the tide had turned and you were vindicated. The goody-goody Congressmen will find that they are not sustained in their persecution. Continue your work for the people in stopping extravagance.

BENJ. F. EWING.

[From the Columbus (Ohio) Dispatch.]

The influence which Republican Leader MONDELL is supposed to have over Ohio Members of Congress has been subjected to severe strain as a result of the leader's drastic efforts to force the expulsion of Representative THOMAS L. BLANTON from the House. A number are saying they are through with Mr. MONDELL'S leadership.

The dissatisfied ones assert that Mr. MONDELL'S course in the BLANTON expulsion affair was punitive in the extreme and was inspired by a desire to get the Texan out of Congress, where he always has been a disturbing factor.

It is but natural that after Leader MONDELL had gone to such lengths to oust the Texan and had failed there should be a weakening of his leadership, and the reaction is plainly noticeable in the Ohio delegation. The Ohioans say it was pressure that governed their votes in favor of expulsion and that they regret having yielded to the pressure.

Representative CHARLES J. THOMPSON, of the Defiance district, is one of those who finally yielded to importunities to cast his vote to put BLANTON out of Congress, and now he is sorry he did. He says that his conscience is hurting him.

"If I could recall my vote I would do so," he said. "I am very glad the resolution providing for expulsion did not pass."

Representative JAMES T. BEGG, of the Sandusky district, is said to feel the same way about it. As assistant whip of the House he was hardly in a position to resist pressure from above, but it is understood he has taken the position that never again will he be controlled in a similar way against his inclinations.

Representatives SPEAKS and RICKETTS were the only two Ohio Members who broke with the House leader at the time the vote was taken. Gen. SPEAKS has stated that he would have voted against expelling BLANTON if he had been the only one of the 435 Members to do it. Gen. SPEAKS believes there is no Member of Congress who leads a cleaner life than BLANTON and that his personal conduct is above reproach.

Hon. CARL W. RIDDICK,
National Republican Fund, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. RIDDICK: I just received a second appeal from you for funds for the national Republican fund. I had laid the first appeal on my desk for action, when the Blanton incident occurred. You seem to support FRANK W. MONDELL, accredited floor leader in the House. in his vicious and misleading attack on Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON. Now, Mr. BLANTON has been doing a tremendous amount of public good in combating red, disloyal, and criminal labor unionism (he is not opposed to respectable labor unions), and in fearlessly cutting out appropriations that have no business to be in the undercover positions in which efforts are made to get them through. MONDELL'S attack was evidently a mere pretext to injure a man who is fighting for the public's rights, and it has utterly disgusted me, as well as many other members of the party, and expressions of strong disapprobation have reached me from influential Republicans in California, the New England States, and many points between. I do not feel, under the circumstances, like subscribing, although I otherwise would have done so.

It would give me great pleasure to grasp your hand and indorse your actions in the strongest terms.

G. E. JACK.

[From the distinguished W. S. McCarthy, of Salt Lake City, Utah.]

The language to which such serious objection was raised was not Mr. BLANTON'S, was not offered with his approval, nor was it so printed that anyone who had never heard it could read it understandingly, and it seems to me that only by publishing the matter in its entirety could he show the deplorable conditions existing in the Government Printing Office.

I think, and my view is shared by everyone with whom I have discussed the matter, that instead of being censured Mr. BLANTON is entitled to a vote of thanks. The House, however, saw fit to ignore the vital principle which Mr. BLANTON so courageously upheld and saw fit to drown it in a flood of claptrap oratory.

W. S. MCCARTHY.

[From San Francisco Daily News, Nov. 4, 1921.]

THOMAS LINDSAY BLANTON, whose expulsion from Congress was demanded by Republican Leader MONDELL, lives up to all Texas traditions as a scrapper. He rushes in where others fear to tread, and because of his sledge-hammer attack, his resourcefulness, and his knowledge of parliamentary law he quite often accomplishes his end.

That end, however, is most often trying to defeat some measure or move.

He is concededly the hardest worker in the House.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF., November 1, 1921.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BLANTON: I have read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing the article complained of, and can not see in what way Congress was justified in censuring you. It looks very much to me as if this was an underhanded way pursued to revenge itself on you for justifiable criticisms.

[From the Buffalo Commercial, Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 28, 1921.]

Proof that the ogre of unionism still lives and dominates at least a number of Congressmen and that it will stop at nothing in the fight to retain its death grip upon the throat of a number of important Government departments is contained in the attack recently launched upon Congressman THOMAS L. BLANTON, of Texas, in which the Members of Congress had the sheer audacity to propose that BLANTON should be expelled.

BLANTON'S offense was something that made unionism thirst for his heart's blood. He fearlessly exposed abuse after abuse, crime after crime, that were daily committed by agents of the closed shop unionism.

Congressman BLANTON, who is rapidly acquiring a national reputation as a 100 per cent American, exposed to his colleagues the whole rotten situation. We believe that he has performed a great public service.

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 28, 1921.

MY DEAR MR. BLANTON: Would that I could find words to express my indignation over the annoyance those hypocritical politicians are trying to give an honest, upright man.

Their pretended shock and fastidiousness is far-fetched. Women seldom read the RECORD. The many years my only brother was in Congress from Virginia, I never read a RECORD. I voice the opinion of many people when I say it would take more than what is in that RECORD to "shock" those "birds" over there.

They strain at gnats and swallow camels. It is all a tempest in a teapot. Their censure is more flattering to you than their regard. Everyone knows it is politics, and will retroact on them. It is your power they fear. You are thrice armed for your cause is just.

[Excerpt from Texan's letter in Washington Herald, Nov. 1, 1921.]

Brace up Mr. BLANTON and hold your head high, the people of Texas know your value and have not forsaken you by any means. Your past efforts in the interest of the people, the integrity with which you discharge the duties of your office, are not unknown to your people.

The courage and strength with which you have faced bitter opposition when you knew you were right has won for you the undying confidence and appreciation of the people of the Lone Star State.

PALESTINE, ILL., October 28, 1921.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN BLANTON: I am on your side. Ever since you have been in Congress I have been intensely interested in your activities. While we all abhor the obscene and profane it is not getting at the truth to omit it at all times, and I do not believe that there is much danger that "the prurient curiosity of children" will be excited by anything appearing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Speaker GILLETT unconsciously made a grim joke of a serious matter.

I have talked to several others who read the article, and, like myself, they feel that you have been wronged, and to this extent Congress stands rebuked. My father (a minister) also read the article and shares my feeling.

CLARENCE PHILLIPS.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: Your defense was a classic. How the gangs hate to be exposed. I thank you for publishing the rotten conditions there.

WASHINGTON, October 27, 1921.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BLANTON: I borrowed a CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and read your remarks. I can not conceive of minds being so warped as to desire to expel you for same. The press has given the people a very different conception of what actually happened. I know because since reading the RECORD I have explained the true facts to many.

Every great man who tries to serve the public is persecuted. The greater and more powerful you become, the more you must expect to be cruelly censured. I am for you and wish you the greatest success in your wonderful career.

DR. THOMAS L. MILLER.

NEW YORK, N. Y., October 28, 1921.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: If we only had more Blantons in Congress the people's interests would be better served. Continue your great work against dishonesty and graft.

MARTIN GARVEY.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Can I have 10 minutes more? This is all the defense I have, my good name is involved, and there is but little more in conclusion. I ask unanimous consent that I have 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, have I any time remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 23 minutes.

Mr. FOCHT. I have listened to the gentleman from Texas with much interest. I would like to ask him if he feels, after all this, that he was entirely justified in putting those things in the RECORD?

Mr. BLANTON. Let me say to the gentleman that the denunciatory remarks upon me are all in the permanent RECORD.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes more.

[From a colored Baptist minister.]

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BLANTON: It is a duty and pleasure to commend your effort in the House yesterday. While presumed to be on the side of the classes, you are here fighting for the poor who can not pay prohibitive prices. I spent 20 years in educational work in Kentucky, Virginia, and Alabama, and closed my career as a teacher in Howard University in Washington in 1918. In your manly stand for justice, law, and order you are my ideal. Were you a candidate where I had a vote Republicanism would count nothing. Will you accept this humble tribute from my very soul?

Congressman R. C. COLE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As a lawyer, and looking at the matter from a purely legal standpoint, I can not follow the logic of voting to either expel or censure Representative BLANTON. He was calling attention to conditions which demand a most rigid investigation; and if true, are intolerable. His own language in doing so was temperate and unexceptionable. He should be thanked, not censured.

WALTERBORO, S. C., October 28, 1921.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: The unanimous censure passed upon you was due not to the fact of the matter you had printed but rather to the strangle hold the labor unions of America seem to have on the administration of our public affairs. If the suggestion of obscenity had been omitted by you in publishing the affidavit, then the enormity of the disgusting situation would not have been disclosed to the public. I think that you are exactly right in your denunciation of conditions.

[From the Hardware World, January, 1922.]

The Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON, Representative from Texas, has for years waged a most courageous war in the House of Representatives against the red and criminal type of labor unionism, which has tried to dominate the country. In doing this he has aroused their bitter enmity.

A REAL CHAMPION OF THE PEOPLE.

The records show a long, continuous, arduous service by Mr. BLANTON in, among other things, watching appropriations. The pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD are full of points of order successfully raised by Mr. BLANTON against such appropriations.

Now, these points of order can only be successfully raised against items which have no business to be where they are, and the very success of these numerous points of order attests the correctness of Mr. BLANTON'S position and his service to the public in checking waste and extravagance. But, of course, those Members who are thus checked have not a kindly feeling toward the man who upsets their plans.

Mr. BLANTON is a consistent champion of the public's interests. He was for eight years a circuit judge in Texas and is an elder in the Presbyterian Church and a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and a Knight Templar.

[From Sunday Times, Chattanooga, Tenn., Feb. 20, 1921.]

It has been left for Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON, of the seventeenth Texas district, to take his seat in the House of Congress and live down prejudice and to be recognized as a useful Member, who is doing work that the average Member shirks. The man who was first referred to as "Blatant BLANTON" is now treated with the greatest consideration. Members who were wont to smile "when BLANTON turns loose" now give the Texas Member rapt attention. Newspaper men, who once scorned upon the Lone Star Congressman and sauntered from the press gallery when he arose, now give him an audience, because they know he has something to say. It can, in fact, be said that Mr. BLANTON is now one of the most useful men of the House. He is what might be called a free lance. His main object appears to be to stop expenditures in various departments and force the earning of salaries. By indomitable energy and perseverance he is succeeding. He has established himself in the House as a man of force and purpose, his purpose being to save the people's money.

Representative BLANTON performed a public service which will be nullified if labor unionism has its way. * * * The men who censured him always suffer from cold feet where the sacred labor union is concerned. * * * Unless Members of Congress have shut their eyes and stuffed their ears they saw and heard these things. But the people did not know of them, and would not but for the disclosure by Mr. BLANTON. An aroused public opinion should now administer a rebuke to our union-scared Congress, and tell it that there is no room in any Government department for an un-American organization setting itself above the law.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: I received the expunged report. And I started to reading it, and it was so fascinating and interesting that I could not lay it down until I had finished.

I want to say this, that all of the outrages that were ever perpetrated by Congress was when they refused to hear your report. And the outrage was still greater when they attempted to expel you. * * * I heartily applaud your courage in making this exposure.

I also feel that all of the Texas Congressmen who voted to censure you for making this report should be elected to stay at home and to retire to private life at the coming election. I think that any man who seeks to win public favor, either locally or otherwise, by trying to dishonor a man who is trying to do what is right should be eternally, politically, and religiously damned. Stand up for what is right, even if you have to stand alone. I salute you with esteem and respect.

[From Abilene Daily Reporter, Nov. 24, 1921.]

A glowing tribute to Congressman BLANTON'S work in the House was paid by Judge Fred Cockrell, who introduced the speaker. Judge Cockrell said: "An American citizen in the Government Printing Office appealed to Judge BLANTON for aid. Judge BLANTON took this man's affidavit and filed it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and then the crash came. They tried to expel him from Congress. I will give my last bit of influence, the last drop of blood in my veins for the west Texan, who was brave enough, who was courageous enough to make the fight." This assertion by Judge Cockrell was greeted with prolonged applause, and cries of "Hurrah for BLANTON!" went up from the audience. Judge Cockrell continued: "This native-born Texan had the nerve to fight them to the last ditch; is a born fighter. He is the most useful Member in Congress to-day, and he has stopped the expenditure of more of the Government's money than any other man in Congress."

A big demonstration lasting for several minutes, in which the majority of his large audience participated, greeted Congressman BLANTON. There were yells "Hurrah for BLANTON!" and loud and prolonged applause. Long before the hour set for Mr. BLANTON to speak the district court room was packed to capacity, and when he appeared all aisles were filled, many standing along the walls and out in the hall outside the room. At the conclusion of his speech hundreds crowded around Congressman BLANTON and assured him of their support.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the extraordinary exhibition we have just witnessed, the letters that we have heard read, illustrate more than anything else could the enormity of the offense against this House and against decency committed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], and for which he received the censure of the House by unanimous vote. His offense was so awful, so unspeakable, so unprintable, that the people can not be informed of the details. The people who have written these letters could not be informed of the exact character of his offense without some one sending them the objectionable matter; in other words, without the commission of a crime that would send one to the penitentiary. What he had printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for men, women, and children to read was so unspeakably vile that except through the commission of a crime in mailing it or transporting it or of a grievous offense against decency in telling it could these people know all its vile, nasty, frightful character. The only way that anyone can know just what he did, other than through receiving the printed page in violation of the law, is for some one to tell them, and no man of decency and self-respect would want to repeat it. [Applause on the Republican side.] And so he has, he says, received commendatory letters, no doubt some of them from honest people, well-intentioned people, in the main from people who see red, people who are prejudiced against union labor and against labor organizations, and so misinformed as to believe that the gentleman from Texas has influence as against these organizations or with regard to anything else.

Hailing him as a champion of their jaundiced and prejudiced opposition to organized labor, and believing, imagining—which no one here does—that he has some little influence as against those organizations, wholly uninformed as to the exact character of the offense, because there is no way of learning of it except by some one either violating the law or all the canons of decency, they write him these letters. I venture this assertion, because I have confidence in the American people—I believe that in the main they are clean-minded; that they hate obscenity—I venture the assertion that few, if any, of those commendatory letters would have been written if the individuals who wrote them could have understood the vileness of the affidavit the gentleman from Texas placed in the RECORD. It was so vile that, in my opinion, no really clean-minded woman and few clean-minded men could have fully understood the depth of the filth and the vileness it contained. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The vote to expel was just a trifle less than two-thirds of the membership of this House, but the vote under which the Speaker administered the censure and condemnation of the House was unanimous. Therefore, if the Congress is to be condemned for what it did, the condemnation rests upon us all. All of the assaults that have been made against the honor and the dignity of this body, all of the offenses that have been committed against the House and its good name since the day of its organization, all rolled into one, would not equal the enormity of the offense of the gentleman from Texas. And yet the very unspeakable character, the very vileness of the offense, in a measure protects him. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield me two or three minutes? Unless he is willing to do that, I shall ask recognition in my own right.

Mr. FOCHT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that the regrettable incident which has been discussed here this afternoon would never arise again in the House. [Applause.] What the House did, it did, whether deliberately or in an hour of hysteria—of course, each man who voted will have to answer for himself—but since it has arisen again this afternoon it is in my mind to say something that I have very frequently thought of since the occurrence. I have never even made an inquiry privately about the matter, but I would like to know—and I wonder if any gentleman here can tell me—whether the employee in the Printing Office who used the language contained in that affidavit, for the insertion of which in the RECORD the gentleman from Texas was censured upon a motion made by myself, is still in the employ of the Government?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I can not speak as a matter of personal investigation, but I was informed by a gentleman who ought to know that this employee has not been for some time at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I simply wanted to say this, that if, as many of us thought, Mr. BLANTON deserved censure for inserting the affidavit containing his language in the RECORD, surely the man who used such language ought not to be permitted to remain in the Government service. [Applause.] I hope it is true, as the gentleman from Wisconsin understands it to be, that he has been separated from the service.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee, I ask for recognition in opposition to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for one hour.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time to the gentleman from Ohio as he may desire.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, this bill has to do with the general question of interest and specifically refers to loans of small amounts, where, presumably, the security is somewhat uncertain. There are many strong arguments against usury laws. The school of Bentham and of Mill maintains that interest to be charged for the use of money is determined by just the same principles as the prices of commodities, and that three controlling factors will determine the rate of interest, namely, the supply available for investment, the trouble involved in making contracts between creditor and debtor, and, third, the risk involved. The lawmakers of England accepted these ideas and abolished usury laws. Some of our own States have abolished usury laws, though I think most, if not all, have restored them. At one time there was no usury law in the District of Columbia.

The American idea in regard to interest is that usury laws serve two useful purposes, one, that they restrain from speculative and injudicious enterprise. If a man contemplates an undertaking that is especially risky and desires to borrow money, he would be refused by the bank or the lender, because the person to whom the application is made can not afford to take the risk at the ordinary rates of interest, and thus if a limit is fixed on rates of interest that class of undertakings which result in disaster will be prevented. The other reason, which applies in this bill here, is that the necessities of the borrower should be taken into account, and, unless there is a limit upon the rate which can be charged, it is within the power of one who has money to exact a compensation which is altogether unreasonable. And so it may be called the settled American doctrine that usury laws shall prevail. The rates fixed are five, six, seven, eight, and so forth, as general rates, with authority sometimes for a higher rate, if agreed upon by the parties to the contract. There is a great variety of regulations in the different States of this country.

Now, I do not favor this bill, Mr. Chairman. The solution of this perplexing question as to loans by pawnbrokers and loans in small amounts with uncertain security, it seems to me, can be more readily reached by an amendment of the existing law. The existing law came into effect on the 4th of February, 1913, limiting interest upon loans of less than $200 without pledged security and loans made by pawnbrokers to 1 per cent per month. That rate was advocated by persons with the very best of humanitarian intentions but without any adequate comprehension of conditions as between the borrower and the lender. Attention was called at the time to the fact the law would not be effective, and the very strong statement has been made that not a single loan has been made under the law of February, 1913, at 1 per cent of interest per month. Now, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the chamber of commerce, the board of trade have requested an amendment of that law, only changing a few lines to make it read interest at 2 per cent per month instead of 1 per cent per month. Two per cent is a rate below that in vogue in most of the States. I think across the river in Virginia it is 10 per cent per month on smaller loans, and the ordinary rate in a number of States is 3 per cent. I do not believe it is necessary to make the rate so high as that. There are a couple of objections to our passing any law fixing a rate higher than 2 per cent. In the first place, this Congress in legislating for the District of Columbia has a responsibility for passing laws which may be accepted as a model for legislation elsewhere. We ought not, I think, to pass a bill which shall be accepted in the States as a sanction for so high a rate as 3 per cent. Then there are a great many borrowers here employed in the departments who have a regular salary, so that they can readily meet their obligations, and there is not the risk that there would be in a great industrial community, where men are frequently thrown out of employment.

I remember some years ago a letter carrier was discharged in my own State because he did not pay his debts. The rule that persons in the Government service must meet their financial obligations was strictly enforced. So 2 per cent it seems to me is as high a rate as should be fixed here in the District. Now, there is one very vital objection to this bill as presented by the committee. It applies only to the pawnbrokers. Why, I ask, should it not apply to loans that are made in these smaller amounts where there is no security? Is not there an element of absurdity almost in saying that when a pledge is given and security is lodged with the lender there can be charged 2 per cent, and when there is entire absence of any security the lender can only charge 1 per cent? A great variety of persons would be able to obtain loans from friends or from organizations which might be established, something similar to the Morris Bank or Morris plan, without offering any security. This system will certainly prove ineffective if you limit these smaller loans to 1 per cent.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the Government recognize the assignment of salary?

Mr. BURTON. I do not think so; but each department perhaps has a rule for itself.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. My understanding is that the Government will not recognize any assignment of salary. That being so, how are we going to provide for loans for borrowers except upon a pawn or pledge for security?

Mr. BURTON. There are many loans made on the personal security of the borrower.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Certainly, but I mean security to the lender?

Mr. BURTON. Well, the lender, of course, must take his chances. I am credibly informed there are persons or organizations ready to go into the business here of making loans at 2 per cent outside the pawnbroker business, providing they are authorized. They feel that they can not do business profitably at 1 per cent and could do business profitably at 2 per cent.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman think that the lenders of money would lend only upon the personal security of the borrower?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; and if there is any difference, the one who loans only on the personal security of the borrower should have the higher rate.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. He takes a bigger risk.

Mr. BURTON. Under this bill the lender without security would have to pay 1 per cent, and you permit the borrower, who has diamonds and other valuable security, to pay 2 per cent.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I presume the gentleman can not find anything in this bill which at all affects the lending of money upon personal credit only?

Mr. BURTON. No. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] responded to a question I asked, that this bill did not repeal the act of February 4, 1913, which authorized loaning on mere naked notes at 1 per cent.

Mr. FOCHT. I will say that the gentlemen who are advocates of having this measure apply to the bare note without pledge have argued, and you will find it in the hearings at great length, that 1 per cent is all they need, and that even 1 per cent would be all that a pawnbroker would need, but the pawnbroker makes the contention that he needs more, and we are discussing the contention of the pawnbroker rather than the man that is satisfied. That is the answer to that.

Mr. BURTON. I am very well satisfied that both of them are wrong. One reason why the pawnbrokers expect a higher rate of interest is that it is a phase of occupation or business that is in bad odor in the community. There are a number of instances where we are paying higher prices because of the disrepute that attaches to the person with whom we deal. While there is a certain amount of difficulty in keeping watches and things of that kind, the more adequate security more than makes up for the difference.

Mr. LONDON. Has the gentleman given any attention to the question of municipal institutions attending to the needs of those poor devils who are obliged to borrow money?

Mr. BURTON. I have. I will say to the gentleman from New York that I do not believe in it at all. It is impossible to establish a municipal loan office without putting it into politics, and the managers will make loans where they think they will obtain votes. Maybe the gentleman from New York may have some arguments in favor of municipal loan offices.

Mr. LONDON. In the District of Columbia it can not be a question of votes. They are voteless here. And then I would like to save the soul of the pawnbroker. I think that is one of the most contemptible of professions. I would simply like to put him out of existence.

Mr. BURTON. The gentleman has an easy task in that.

Mr. FOCHT. Permit me to ask the gentleman a question. He speaks of the pawnbroker. I have no brief for him. I have never pawned anything, and I hope that I never will have to do so, but I would like to know where he stands in more degradation and shame than the Shylock that will stand behind the counter and take from a clerk $100 when he loaned him only $50?

Mr. LONDON. And you might go further, to the bankers who rob the farmers or the bunch of financiers that held up the United States and compelled them to put up the interest on the bonds.

Mr. BURTON. It seems that we are getting a little too far afield here.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURTON. I would like 10 minutes more.

Mr. LONDON. The gentleman mentioned an institution, I believe, which he called the Morris plan bank. I believe my attention was called to it several years ago. How does that institution work? It is a sort of a charitable institution, is it not?

Mr. BURTON. No; it is not a charitable institution. It takes deposits and makes loans. They, in large measure, make their loans to persons who can not obtain money at an ordinary bank. They usually require two indorsers as security, and I am told that their losses are not large.

Mr. LONDON. And they lend with or without interest?

Mr. BURTON. As I understand it, more than the usual interest, ordinarily.

Mr. LONDON. I thought the interest was nominal.

Mr. BURTON. The interest has been placed larger than in the ordinary bank. I will answer further the question of the gentleman from New York by saying that I do not believe in municipalities going into the business of loaning money under any circumstances.

I wish to present a memorandum as to pending small-loan legislation in the District of Columbia, prepared by the citizens' committee on remedial loan law, with a supplement. These state the case very strongly against this bill and in favor of another.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in my remarks the full text of these documents, including a memorandum on the pawnbrokers' bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by the insertion of the documents indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following are the documents referred to:

Memorandum as to pending small loan legislation in the District.

CITIZENS' COMMITTEE ON REMEDIAL LOAN LAW,
Washington, D. C., March 10, 1922.

The Citizens' Committee on Remedial Loan Law urges that Congress do not pass the "pawnbrokers' bill," H. R. 6309–S. 2260, for the following reasons:

1. The District now has a pawnbrokers' law which provides for the regulation of pawnbrokers and their business, with ample provisions as to licenses and the protection of borrowers, which has proved to be a wise law.

2. Any loan law which does not provide for those who need to borrow small sums on notes as well as on pledges is entirely inadequate.

3. The limitation of the rate allowed, to 1 per cent per month, is the only reason why loans of both kinds are not being made under the existing law of February 4, 1913.

4. An increase in the rate to 2 per cent per month, as originally asked for by the Citizens' Committee and by the District Commissioners in their bill, H. R. 5015, will be sufficient to establish the business in both small loans and pawnbrokers' loans, and to successfully meet all demands of this character.

5. The "pawnbrokers' bill," H. R. 6309, will afford no relief to the class of persons, probably larger in Washington than in other cities, who need small loans, but have no pledges to put up.

6. The existing law has been sustained by several decisions in the Court of Appeals and two in the Supreme Court of the United States, one of which declared it to be a pawnbrokers' law.

It has been so effectively enforced by the District Commissioners that it has closed up all the offices of illegal money lenders in the District.

7. Congress is therefore earnestly urged to pass the bill introduced by the commissioners, H. R. 5015, increasing the rate in the present law to 2 per cent per month.

8. The "pawnbrokers' bill," H. R. 6309, repeals the existing law, and as it would be a new law and makes no provision for loans except on pledges it would permit the return of the illegal money lenders, whom the commissioners have driven out.

It would be a decided mistake to pass such a new law to take the place of the one which has been so effective in stopping all illegal business, and which can be made fully effective for legitimate loans by restoring the rate to 2 per cent per month in the present law, as asked for by the commissioners.

9. The District Commissioners, the Board of Trade, the Federation of Citizens' Associations, and the Citizens' Committee have all definitely disapproved of the "pawnbrokers' bill" after careful consideration, and Congress is again urged to pass the commissioners' bill, H. R. 5015, which is indorsed also by the chamber of commerce.

Respectfully submitted.

Charles S. Shreve, William J. Eynon, John Van Schaick, jr., Mrs. Archibald Hopkins, Evelyn Wainwright, George S. Wilson, Corcoran Thom, William F. Gude, William H. Baldwin, H. C. Gauss, John Joy Edson, P. H. Marshall, Evan H. Tucker, Walter S. Ufford.

Memorandum on the pending pawnbrokers' bill (H. R. 6309) as compared with the commissioners' bill (H. R. 5015), which amends the existing law.

The rate of 3 per cent would cover the great bulk of pawnbrokers' loans, which are ordinarily less than $35, and putting two rates into the bill renders it liable to evasion.

The language at the upper part of page 5, which is intended to protect the pawnbroker—not the borrower—as to the 3 per cent rate, is confusing. No one can tell its exact meaning in relation to the whole law until it is interpreted by the courts, and it might be construed to nullify the penalties laid down in the law.

A new law to provide for the pawnbrokers' business is not necessary. Mr. DYER insisted on taking the pawnbrokers in under the present law because the District committee considered the 3 per cent per month that they were then getting exorbitant. Mr. FOCHT voted for the bill in this form as well as for the rate of 1 per cent, which is all that prevents pawnbrokers' loans under the present law.

To make a separate provision for pawnbrokers, while the impossible rate in the existing law prevents loans on other security, would be to give pawnbrokers a monopoly of the small loan business in the District. Any such monopoly is objectionable.

A separate law for pawnbrokers is not needed. Laws passed in Maine and in Indiana in 1917, which cover other loans as well as pawnbrokers' loans, have been found satisfactory. There has been no complaint of the operation of the District law, except as to the rate.

In the existing law Congress very wisely charged the District Commissioners with the responsibility of its enforcement and of making all rules and regulations necessary for the conduct of the business, which expressly covered pawnbrokers' loans as well as other small loans. The commissioners made these regulations, which are still in force. No complaint has been made of them, and we feel that it is undesirable for Congress to enact the commissioners' rules into a law.

The District Commissioners are now charged by Congress with the responsibility of making and enforcing regulations for the erection of buildings, the motor traffic, and other rules and regulations even of more importance than the making of small loans and pawnbrokers' loans.

The laws of 1917 in Maine and Indiana do not contain detailed regulations as to pawnbrokers' loans. These are made by the officials in charge in each State, and they work satisfactorily.

If for any reason, however, it seems wise for Congress to enact the regulations into law, instead of having the commissioners make them, the regulations should be incorporated in the existing law, which covers pawnbrokers, and not in a new law proposed.

It is felt that more effective and better results are secured where the commissioners are given the authority, as in the present law, for making regulations as to details than when they are enacted into law, as has been proved in the past.

The statement that the opposition to the pawnbrokers' bill comes from bankers who wish to make small loans at higher rates of interest is not correct. No banker would be willing to accept such loans, which could be made only by a company which took out a license under the law and organized especially for making small loans.

Any objection to providing that needy borrowers may obtain loans at 2 per cent on indorsed notes or other security, it is inconsistent with allowing 3 per cent for loans on pledges, which can be made at a lower rate than other loans.

Such a provision for small loans would be for the benefit of needy borrowers, who have no pledges to put up, as against the bill which would give pawnbrokers a monopoly of all such loans at 3 per cent.

You can say unequivocally that bankers do not desire to avail themselves of making small loans at 2 per cent, and that no banker of the citizens' committee has any interest in such business.

Mr. BURTON. The present law has been subjected to an investigation by the courts. Its provisions have been interpreted, and the new law would have to go through that same ordeal of consideration by the courts, with some degree of uncertainty as to what the decision would be.

I desire to say, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that there are some provisions in the law as proposed here which I think it would be well to include. Bear in mind there are two bills before the committee—one, the bill H. R. 6309, favored by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and the other, H. R. 5015, the so-called commissioners' bill. The best way to solve the situation is by amendment of the existing law, changing the rate of interest from 1 per cent to 2 per cent and inserting at least one provision of the pending bill. That provision is this: It requires a pawnbroker to maintain insurance on property that is pledged and left with him. As it is now, he would be only compelled to exercise ordinary diligence, and if in case of fire the pledges should be burned he would not be responsible for them.

I do not feel quite clear about this provision in regard to minors. The point has been made that the proposed section forbidding loans to minors under 16 years of age, by implication, makes valid loans to minors over 16 years of age. I do not see how this act can be made to legalize the act of a minor. Of course, Congress could by legislation upon that subject fix the age of majority at 18 or 19 years or even at 16 years. But I do not quite understand how that provision forbidding loans to minors under 16 can be effective in validating loans made to persons over 16 years of age.

Now, there is a decided difference between these two bills, which I think the committee ought to understand. I will briefly summarize the existing law. First, it provides that no one shall make loans of this type, pawnbrokers or otherwise, without the application for and granting of a license and payment of $500 a year. Next it provides that a bond of $5,000 shall be given. Then it provides that every person, firm, and so forth, shall keep a record, and that record shall be open to the commissioners and to the officers of the law. In the following section it is provided that the rate of interest shall not be more than 1 per cent. There is a clause to the effect that complaints may be made to the commissioners and the commissioners may revoke a license.

In section 7 a penalty for the violation of the law is imposed. Section 8 provides that no attorney's fee shall be charged at more than 10 per cent of the amount found due. Section 10 is not vital. "Nothing contained in this act shall be held to apply to the legitimate business of national banks." I do not see any need for that word "legitimate" being inserted there. I do not believe any bank would wish to make this type of loans of an amount less than $200. I suppose that other institutions would be established for that purpose. Section 14 provides that the administration of this law shall be intrusted to the commissioners, and they are empowered to make rules and regulations for the conduct of the business. Under that provision, as I am informed, they have made regulations to the effect that a pledge shall be left for a year after the maturity of the loan before it can be sold. The pending bill would make this regulation a permanent law. As to that I am not very sure. In making these statutes the legislators are almost always bearing in mind the welfare of the borrower, but they overlook certain plain facts. If a man goes to a pawnbroker and wishes to borrow money and the pawnbroker knows that he can not sell the security until a year after the loan is due, he will charge him accordingly; so in the long run the query arises whether that is desirable for the borrower. I think it is well to leave such subjects as that to regulations made by the commissioners, and they have very broad and sweeping authority.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. BURTON. I would like to have just a few minutes more; five minutes more.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. BURTON. Now, there is one provision in the old law that is not in the pending bill and that awakens an inquiry. It is to the effect that no one who has been found guilty of a violation of the law shall retain his license or shall obtain another.

I do not wish to enter into any of these personal controversies in this matter, but there are certain facts that are well known. When this act of 1913 was under consideration there was a large subscription raised by the pawnbrokers here to defeat it. That was all brought out in the report on lobby activities made by the committee headed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. It appears that these pawnbrokers, of whom one man in particular was prominent, raised $8,000 and endeavored to defeat the bill. The leading one who did most of the business made no loans here after the law was passed, but went over into Virginia and started a business there. According to the reports, if a person came to him here in the District of Columbia he furnished that person an automobile to take him over into Virginia, and there they could make almost any kind of a contract, 10 per cent a month on small loans, and this pawnbroker was doing a thriving business. The handicap of not being able to make loans here in the District of Columbia was more than offset by the character of the exactions which he could make upon borrowers in Virginia. He was arrested, tried, and convicted. The case was taken to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court decided that his conduct in transacting business in this indirect way was a violation of the law. He was the head of the syndicate that raised some $8,000, and under the existing law he would not be able to obtain a license to do business in the District of Columbia. Under the bill which is here before the committee he could obtain a license, because there is no prohibition against anyone who has been convicted under the law. I do not care to revive that controversy, but these facts are worthy of consideration.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I think there are some good points in this bill pending before the committee, among them the one about insurance. And possibly it is well to embody in the statute the provision that no sale shall be made of a pledge until a year after the loan has become due, though I am inclined to think it better to leave that to the commissioners. But we can best solve this situation not by passing a law under which pawnbrokers can charge 3 per cent up to loans of $35 and 2 per cent above that but by a straight 2 per cent rate, both to those who offer pledges and to those who offer no security. All this can be done by an amendment to the present law in comparatively brief language.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LONDON. The provision relating to the right to sell pledged property a year after the loan has become due carries with it a provision for interest, does it not?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; for interest all the while. The gentleman knows enough about business to know that if the interest was suspended, every one of the borrowers would wait until the end of the year. The interest goes on at the rate fixed.

Mr. LONDON. Three per cent a month?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; and then, again, the borrower is compelled to pay for an advertisement in a newspaper of general circulation, and the sale must be made by a licensed auctioneer, which, I take it, is also at the cost of the borrower.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I have just communicated with the Public Printer by phone. I asked him if the man who was by Mr. BLANTON charged with having used that vile language was in the office still. He said, "He is. He is now in the employ of this office." I said, "I thought he was separated from the bureau." He said, "No; he is still in the employ of the office." I said, "How does that happen?" "Well," he said, "I conducted an investigation, heard those who were witnesses, and I am convinced that he never used the language. Those who listened to it said he did not. French, the complainant, was the only one who made that statement."

Mr. UNDERHILL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Texas. I thank the gentleman, but I do not care to speak now, and I yield back the time.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SCOTT].

Mr. SCOTT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, on January 6 last I introduced House joint resolution 251 which authorizes and requests the United States Supreme Court to make an exception and reopen and rehear on its merits and redecide the case of William M. Farrington, plaintiff in error, against Rolf S. Saunders, collector of internal revenue for the United States for the western district of Tennessee, defendant in error, waiving for the United States all defense by reason of statute of limitations, lapse of time, laches or rules prohibitory for reopening, rehearing, reconsideration, and decision of this case by the United States Supreme Court.

Mr. Chairman, realizing that the provisions and purposes of this resolution are extraordinary and without precedent makes it properly deserving of thorough consideration by each Member of Congress before its final disposition. In view of this fact I am anxious to briefly present the reasons and grounds upon which I shall urge its passage in case it is favorably reported to the House by the committee before which it is now pending.

This resolution, though without precedent as to form and purpose, is nevertheless founded upon a principle that is fundamentally right, certainly within the Constitution, and I sincerely believe will be so regarded once its intentions are comprehended by this honorable body.

For approximately half a century various and sundry bills have been proposed to Congress seeking to adjust and settle the very question which this resolution is designed to bring to a constitutional finality. Some of these measures have sought to appropriate out of the United States Treasury and refund to the original taxpayers moneys collected under the acts of Congress of July 1, 1862, March 7, 1864, July 13, 1866, March 2, 1867, all of which were repealed February 3, 1868. This relief legislation was proposed and urged out of respect to the earnest appeal of a great mass of citizens and legal authorities, who insisted that Congress had no right to impose a direct tax on the ownership of personal property without being apportioned among the States of the Union on the basis of population.

Lawyers of recognized ability on constitutional questions throughout the Nation during the existence and since the repeal of the direct cotton tax laws have declared the tax to be violative of the Federal Constitution in that it was not an excise tax on the sale or use or other disposition of personal property, but a direct tax on the ownership of personal property without being apportioned among the States on the basis of population, as required by the Constitution. More than $68,000,000 was collected from the producers and owners of cotton in 23 States of the Union before a revolting public sentiment succeeded in inducing Congress to repeal what is now practically conceded by all constitutional authorities to be an unconstitutional tax law. Tennessee, my home State, paid more than $8,000,000 of this cotton tax. Article I, section 2, clause 3 of the Federal Constitution says:

> Representatives and direct taxes shall be opportioned among the several States of the Union, according to their respective numbers.

The Constitution then provides that these numbers shall be determined by the decennial census. Article I, section 9, clause 4 says:

> No direct tax shall be laid unless in proportion to the census enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken.

I submit that a direct tax on the ownership of either land or personal property is constitutional if it is levied by the rule of apportionment among the States on a population basis, but if it is levied without such apportionment it is unconstitutional and void. This cotton tax was levied without such apportionment. The plain language of the Constitution shows that this cotton tax violated the supreme law of the land. The Supreme Court of the United States, however, when that act was passed (1862), had never decided this question one way or the other.

The first time the question was squarely and unescapably presented to the court was in the Farrington case. Farrington brought suit in that case to get back from the United States the taxes he had paid the internal-revenue collector at Memphis, Tenn., on his cotton. He alleged that the tax was unconstitutional; that was the sole and only question in the case. The judge of the United States district court at Memphis, Tenn., held that the tax was constitutional and decided against Farrington. Farrington appealed to the United States Supreme Court in 1868. Only eight judges heard the case. It was argued for Farrington by Judge Benjamin R. Curtis, of Boston, John A. Campbell, of Mobile, who had themselves previously been members of the United States Supreme Court; William M. Evarts, of New York, subsequently Secretary of State, and counsel for the United States in the Geneva arbitration on the Alabama claims; William M. Sharkey, former chief justice of the State of Mississippi; John G. Carlisle, afterwards Speaker of the House of Representatives; Alexander H. Garland, subsequently Attorney General in the Cleveland Cabinet; and Gen. Albert Pike, one of the greatest lawyers of that time. They all filed printed briefs against the constitutionality of this cotton tax which are still on file in the office of the Clerk of the United States Supreme Court. The Government was represented by the then Attorney General, E. R. Hoar, and Hon. C. H. Hill, one of his Assistant Attorneys General. After the case had been in the United States Supreme Court over two years the court entered a judgment, reciting that—

> The court is equally divided in opinion and is unable to agree.

Not a single member of the court wrote or filed an opinion. By reason of this equal division of the court, Chief Justice Chase being absent, not participating in either hearing or consideration due to illness, the decision of the United States district court at Memphis stood affirmed, and that is the way the matter has been resting ever since. As a matter of fact, no final judgment or decision as to the merits of the Farrington case was rendered by the court. The court was equally divided and so recited, which is a matter of record. No opinion was written, and the vital question as to the constitutionality of the cotton tax laws was left suspended in the air.

Mr. Chairman, the prime purpose of House joint resolution 251 is not to appropriate money out of the United States Treasury. This resolution seeks only a rehearing and decision of the Farrington against Saunders test case by the Supreme Court of the United States, which was heard in 1871 by only eight members of the United States Supreme Court, resulting, as stated before, in an equal division of the court. Only eight members having participated, the ultimate action being an equal division, did not determine the question of constitutionality of the cotton tax law within the meaning of the Constitution, since the affirmative or negative action of the court must constitute a majority of the court to make final a decision. In the light of these facts, which the United States Supreme Court records confirm, I can not appreciate how it could be urged that the Farrington against Saunders test case was regularly and constitutionally adjudicated.

Mr. Chairman, this question involves the constitutional rights and financial interests of citizens in perhaps every State in the Union. I am sure it is neither the desire nor purpose of any Member of this Congress to deny these citizens an opportunity to formally represent this vital and significant question to the United States Supreme Court, that the original issue, the question as to the constitutionality of the cotton tax act, which as it now stands remains a bone of serious contention in the minds of so many, may be finally and constitutionally adjudicated without the color of doubt. If it is possible, and I believe that House joint resolution 251 rightly makes it possible, for the reopening, rehearing, and decision of this test case, and in my humble judgment it is the solemn duty and obligation of Congress to make possible the proper legal and constitutional determination of this important question, which vitally affects the interests of so many of the Nation's citizens. [Applause.]

As stated heretofore, numerous bills have been introduced on this subject. During the Sixty-fifth Congress Hon. FRANK CLARK of Florida introduced a bill providing for an appropriation of the amount of taxes to be paid the heirs of the people who originally paid taxes under the cotton tax law. This bill was reported favorably by Mr. CLARK from the War Claims Committee of the House on January 30, 1919, in a very complete, clear, and convincing manner, which strongly urged Congress to pass the bill. This report is of such length that I would not attempt to read it into the RECORD or repeat its contents. However, I will ask, Mr. Speaker, leave to incorporate it in my remarks by extending it in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report referred to is as follows:

[House Report No. 1017, Sixty-fifth Congress, third session.]

MONEYS COLLECTED UNDER THE DIRECT TAX LEVIED BY ACTS OF CONGRESS ON RAW COTTON.

Mr. CLARK of Florida, from the Committee on War Claims, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 6019:

Measures similar to H. R. 6019 have been introduced into many Congresses during the past 50 years, and the subject matter has at different times been considered by committees, but for one reason or another justice has been delayed until now. No good reason exists or has ever existed to prevent the passage of a measure of this character. Governments should be scrupulous in dealing with its citizens as it demands one citizen shall be in dealing with his fellow man. The case as presented is as follows: There were four different acts of Congress levying a tax upon raw cotton. One was the act of July 1, 1862, which levied a tax of one-half of 1 cent a pound. The next act was the act of March 7, 1864, which levied a tax of 2 cents per pound. The third was the act of July 13, 1866, which levied a tax of 3 cents per pound, and the last was the act of March 2, 1867, which levied a tax of 2½ cents per pound. On the 3d day of February, 1868, Congress passed an act repealing the four acts mentioned. In order that the House may fully understand the legislation in this behalf we call attention to these different acts of Congress. The several statutory provisions levying taxes on cotton are as follows:

[Act of July 1, 1862.]

"On and after the 1st day of October, 1862, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of one-half of 1 cent per pound on all cotton held or owned by any person or persons, corporations, or association of persons; and such tax shall be in lieu thereon in the possession of any person whomsoever. And further, if any person or persons, corporation, or association of persons shall remove, carry, or transport the same from the place of its production before said tax shall be paid, such person or persons, corporation, or association of persons shall forfeit and pay to the United States double the amount of such tax, to be recovered in any court having jurisdiction thereof: Provided, however, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized to make such rules and regulations as he may deem proper for the payment of said tax at places different from that of the production of said cotton: And provided further, That all cotton owned and held by any manufacturer of cotton fabrics on the 1st day of October, 1862, and prior thereto, shall be exempt from the tax hereby imposed." (12 Stat. L., 465.)

[Act of Mar. 7, 1864.]

"From and after the passage of this act, in lieu of the duties provided in the act referred to in the first section of this act, there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all cotton produced or sold and removed for consumption, and upon which no duty has been levied, paid, or collected, a duty of 2 cents per pound; and such duty shall be and remain a lien thereon until said duty shall have been paid, in the possession of any person whomsoever. And further, if any person or persons, corporation, or association of persons, remove, carry, or transport the same, or procure any other party or parties to remove or transprt the same from the place of its production, with the intent to evade the duty thereon, or to defraud the Government, before said duty shall have been paid, such person or persons, corporation or association of persons, shall forfeit and pay to the United States double the amount of said duty, to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction: Provided, That all cotton sold by or on account of the Government of the United States shall be free and exempt from duty at the time of and after the sale thereof, and the same shall be marked free, and the purchaser furnished with such a bill of sale as shall clearly and accurately describe the same, which shall be deemed and taken to be a permit authorizing the sale or removal thereof." (13 Stat. L., 15.)

[Act of July 13, 1866.]

"There shall be paid by the producer, owner, or holder, upon all cotton produced within the United States, and upon which no tax has been levied, paid, or collected, a tax of 3 cents per pound, as hereinafter provided * * * and such tax shall be and remain a lien thereon, in possession of any person whomsoever, from the time when this law takes effect, or such cotton is produced, as aforesaid, until the same shall have been paid." (14 Stat. L., 98.)

[Act of Mar. 2, 1867.]

"On and after the 1st day of September, 1867, a tax of 2½ cents per pound only shall be levied, collected, and paid on any cotton produced within the United States." (14 Stat. L., 471.)

[Act of Feb. 3, 1868.]

"All cotton grown in the United States after the year 1867 shall be exempt from internal tax; and cotton imported from foreign countries on and after November 1, 1868, shall be exempted from duty." (15 Stat. L., 34.)

When the taxes of 1862 and of 1864 were levied the country was in the throes of civil war and there may be something in the idea sometimes advanced that the exigencies of war demanded and justified the setting at naught of statutory laws and constitutional provisions. We do not subscribe to that doctrine, because we believe that in a republican government such as ours there can arise no circumstances, there can exist no conditions, there can be no emergencies, which would justify the National Legislature in violating the solemnly enacted provisions of the organic law. However, if there should be anything in that contention it must be rememberd that the act of 1866 and the act of 1867 were both passed in a time of profound peace and, therefore, can not in any wise be regarded as war measures, and the fact is that the great bulk of the taxes levied and collected on raw cotton came from the acts of 1866 and of 1867, under which, respectively, were levied and collected a tax of 3 and 2½ cents per pound. In order that the House may get a clear idea of the amounts collected in the different years from the different States in pursuance of these acts of Congress we submit herewith a tabulated statement of such amounts as furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury.

By exhaustive research we have been able to find only one case and that was brought to test the validity of the act of July 13, 1866. The facts of that case are as follows: On the second Monday in June, 1867, William M. Farrington began an action in law in the court of Memphis, Tenn., against Rolfe S. Saunders, a collector of internal revenue, for damages for the seizure of 148 bales of cotton which had been assessed by an internal-revenue assessor for taxes amounting to $2,005.74. The case was removed to the United States circuit court for the sixth circuit and that court decided the case in favor of Saunders, and therefore in favor of the constitutionality of the act which had been directly attacked. In due time Farrington appealed the case to the Supreme Court on December 6, 1867, and the judgment of the court below was affirmed by the Supreme Court because it was a divided court, there being only 8 justices who heard the case, and they stood 4 in favor of affirming the judgment and 4 in favor of reversing it. This took place on February 20, 1871. The record of this case can only be found in one volume and that is a volume known as "Records of Briefs," volume 216. The case in the Supreme Court was never reported, and nothing of the case can be found except the agreed statement of facts and copies of the pleadings and briefs of counsel. It will be noticed that the judgment was affirmed solely because of a divided court. The facts in the case as stated were agreed upon and filed in the circuit court at the September term, 1867, and were as follows:

"The plaintiff and defendant have agreed that the above cause, now pending in the Circuit Court of the United States for the district of west Tennessee, shall be tried by the court without the intervention of a jury, upon the following facts, which are submitted and agreed upon by both parties, to wit:

"1. That on the 26th day of June, 1867, the plaintiff, William M. Farrington, was the holder and owner, in his own right of 148 bales of cotton of the net weight of 66,858 pounds. That said cotton was the growth of and produced within the United States.

"2. That no internal revenue or other tax had been levied, paid, or collected upon said cotton.

"3. That on the said 26th day of June, 1867, H. F. Cooper, assistant United States assessor for the eighth district of the State of Tennessee, within which said district said cotton then was, acting under the provisions of the act of Congress of the United States, approved July 13, 1866, assessed a tax of 3 cents per pound upon said cotton, making in the aggregate the sum of $2,005.74, and returned said assessment on that day into the office of the defendant, who is the United States revenue collector for said district.

"4. That the plaintiff on the same day protested against said assessment, for the reason that said assessment was without authority of law, said act of Congress of the 13th of July, 1866, being contrary to the provisions of the Constitution of the United States of America and void.

"5. That on the 27th day of June, 1867, the defendant, who is the legally authorized United States internal-revenue collector for said district, the said cotton being then within said district, demanded said tax of 3 cents per pound on said cotton, amounting in the aggregate to the said sum of $2,005.74, from the plaintiff.

"6. That the plaintiff then and there protested against said tax, and protested against the defendant's demand, and objected to paying the same for the reasons assigned in his protest against the assessment of said tax, and was removing said cotton from said district.

"7. That the defendant then and there, on the day aforesaid, averred that he would, as internal-revenue collector, seize said cotton, and threatened the plaintiff then present that he would forthwith seize said cotton unless said tax was paid to him.

"8. That the plaintiff thereupon and by reason of said threats paid to the defendant the said sum of $2,005.74, lawful money of the United States, that being the amount of said tax, under protest.

"9. That on the same day the plaintiff demanded said money back from the defendant; that the defendant refused to refund it, and the plaintiff thereupon on the same day duly appealed to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington, according to the provisions of law in that regard and the regulation of the Treasury established in pursuance thereof.

"10. That the plaintiff's appeal, the same containing a properly certified record of the acts of the said assessor and the defendant, and the reasons of plaintiff's protest, were duly forwarded to and laid before the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington, who examined the plaintiff's claim for the refunding of said sum of $2,005.74 and rejected it, for the reason that he regarded the law imposing a duty of 3 cents per pound upon cotton as constitutional.

"11. That the action of the commissioner was on the 1st day of August, 1867, and within six months before the suing out of summons and commencement of the plaintiff's action in this cause.

"12. That the plaintiff and defendant were forthwith notified by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of his action in the premises, and on the 10th day of August, 1867, the plaintiff again, and after notice as above to the defendant, demanded to have said sum of $2,005.74 paid back to him, which the defendant refused.

"13. That the amount in controversy in this cause is more than $2,000.

"14. That the following tabular statement shows the growth and production of cotton within the United States from the year 1820–21 to the year 1866–67, inclusive, in bales:

1820–21	430,000	1844–45	2,394,503

"That of the above annual yield and product, three-fourths to five-sixths of the number of bales have been annually exported from the United States, except in the years 1865–66 and 1866–67, the exports for those years being about two-thirds to three-fourths, and that the returns received at the Statistical Bureau at Washington show that 667,137,870 pounds of cotton have been exported from the United States for the year ending June 30, 1867, of the value of $202,807,910.

"Now, it is agreed between the plaintiff and defendant that this cause shall be tried by the court upon the foregoing facts admitted by both parties, and the court may draw all inferences and make all deductions from said facts that a jury might or could legally draw or make, and the questions at issue between the parties which the court is asked to adjudge and determine is as to the validity and constitutionality of the various acts of Congress imposing a tax upon cotton, and particularly to the act of Congress approved July 13, 1866, imposing a tax of 3 cents per pound upon cotton produced within the United States. And if upon the trial of the cause and argument of counsel the court should be of the opinion that said act of Congress of the 13th of July, 1866, imposing said tax of 3 cents per pound upon the cotton produced within the United States is constitutional and valid, then the judgment of the court shall be simply for the defendant and against the plaintiff and his security for the costs of the cause. But if the court shall be of the opinion that said act of Congress imposing said tax is unconstitutional and invalid, then the judgment of the court shall be for the plaintiff, that he recover of the defendant the said sum of $2,005.74, with interest from the 27th day of June, 1867, and the costs of the cause.

"The right to appeal, or to take an appeal in the nature of a writ of error or to prosecute a write of error to the Supreme Court of the United Sattes, at Washington, or wherever the same shall be held, is reserved to both parties, to be taken by the losing party at his option, according to law and the rules of practice in the circuit and Supreme Courts of the United States regulating the practice in appeals and writs of error from the circuit court to the Supreme Court.

JUDGMENT.

"Upon the foregoing case agreed Judge Trigg rendered judgment as follows:

"And upon consideration of the same the court is of the opinion that the said act of Congress of the 13th of July, 1866, imposing an internal-revenue tax of 3 cents per pound upon cotton grown and produced within the United States is constitutional and valid and that the law of the case upon the facts agreed is with the defendant. It is therefore considered by the court that the defendant go hence and recover of the plaintiff, and T. A. Nelson, his security therefor, the costs of this suit, and that execution issue.

"In the Supreme Court of the United States briefs were filed by P. Phillips, W. L. Sharkey, Albert Pike, James Hughes, Robertson Topp, J. A. Campbell, Robert W. Johnson, and B. R. Curtis, for Farrington, and by Attorney General Akerman, Assistant Attorney General C. H. Hill (and later by Attorney General E. R. Hoar), and Assistant Attorney General W. A. Field, for Saunders."

Counsel for Farrington contended that the acts laying the tax on cotton violated all the provisions of the Constitution of the United States delegating the right to levy and collect taxes. Counsel for Saunders, the revenue collector, controverted this position and relied mainly upon the case of Hylton v. United States (3 Dal., 171). Their contention was summarized in the brief of Attorney General Hoar, as follows:

"If the cotton tax imposed by the act of 1866 was a direct tax, then, inasmuch as it was not laid by the rule of apportionment, it must be pronounced unconstitutional. It must also be pronounced unconstitutional if it was an export tax. But if, on the other hand, the tax was an indirect one simply, it is submitted that there was no conflict between the provision referred to and the Constitution, and its validity should be affirmed. He also contended that the tax on cotton of 1866 is not a direct tax, being neither a tax on land nor a tax on slaves or other capitation tax."

It will be seen that Attorney General Hoar admitted in his brief that "If the cotton tax imposed by the act of 1866 was a direct tax, then inasmuch as it was not laid by the rule of apportionment it must be pronounced unconstitutional." The whole proposition then resolves itself into the question, What is a direct tax? We desire to call attention to the constitutional provisions applicable to this tax. Upon an examination of the Constitution it will be found that it contains only four provisions relating to Federal taxation, and they are as follows:

"1. Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons." (Art. 1, sec. 2, clause 3.)

The fourteenth amendment modified this provision so that the whole number of persons in each State should be counted, Indians not taxed excluded.

"2. The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States." (Art. 1, sec. 8, clause 1.)

"3. No capitation or other direct tax shall be laid, unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken." (Art. 1, sec. 9, clause 4.)

"4. No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State." (Art. 1, sec. 9, clause 5.)

In the light of these constitutional provisions, we desire to call attention to the objections which lie to the levy and collection of all these taxes. First, we insist that each and every one of the acts referred to levied a direct tax upon raw cotton which was violative of that provision of the Constitution which prohibits the levy of a direct tax, except it be done by the rule of apportionment. That Congress has the power to levy direct taxes is not now and never has been questioned since the Constitution itself was adopted. The Constitution says, in Article I, section 2, clause 3, that "Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective numbers."

Again, in Article I, section 9, clause 4, we have this provision: "No capitation or other direct tax shall be levied unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken." We respectfully submit that in none of these tax acts will you find any provision that these taxes are to be laid "in proportion to the census" as is positively required. It is an historical fact that so great was the fear of members of the Constitutional Convention that Congress might have or claim the power to levy direct taxes without regard to the rule of apportionment or the population of the different States, as shown by the census, that the Constitution itself would never have been adopted by the people of the different States if they had not been solemnly assured by the leading statesmen of that day it would never result in oppressive taxation or violate in that respect the principle of equality. (See the Federalist, No. 36.)

In the argument of Mr. Phillips, of counsel for Farrington, who was plaintiff in error in the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Farrington against Saunders, in referring to these constitutional provisions we find this strong language:

"By these restrictions the States supposed that they had protected themselves against partial or corrupt legislation. For indirect taxation they established uniformity; for direct they secured apportionment according to the census."

Perry on Political Economy, page 443, defines a direct tax as follows: "A direct tax is levied on the very persons who are themselves expected to pay it; an indirect tax is demanded from one person in the expectation that he will pay it provisionally, but will indemnify himself in the higher price he will receive from the ultimate consumer. Thus the income tax is direct, while duties laid on imported goods are indirect."

Surely these taxes come squarely within the definition of a direct tax given by Perry.

Undoubtedly the best defense that has ever been made for the levy of these cotton taxes was made in a letter to Hon. George S. Boutwell, then Secretary of the Treasury, by the Hon. Israel Kimball, at that time Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The opinion of Mr. Kimball can be found in Executive Document No. 181, Forty-second Congress, third session. It is covered in a letter from the Hon. George S. Boutwell, Secretary of the Treasury, under date of February 4, 1873, and directed to the Hon. James G. Blaine, at that time Speaker of the House of Representatives. Mr. Kimball consumes some 14 pages undertaking to defend the right of the Government to insist upon these taxes. But when his entire argument is brought down to its last analysis the one main reason he gives to support his contention that these taxes were indirect and not direct is his statement, unsupported in reason or by fact, that the producer did not in fact pay the tax; that the tax was added to the selling price and the consumer paid it. With all due respect to Mr. Kimball, this contention is little short of the absurd because everybody knows that the farmer, whether he live in the South, North, East, or West, has no more to do with fixing a price for his products than has the man in the moon. It is notoriously true that the price of cotton has always been fixed in the market at Liverpool.

Messrs. Hughes & Sharkey, of counsel for Farrington, have, however, answed this contention perfectly as follows:

"Is it [this tax] levied on the person who pays it, or does some other person ultimately pay it? Can the planter add this to the price of the cotton when he sells it? The court must assume this; otherwise it is a direct tax. Can the court assume it in the face of facts? Liverpool is the great cotton mart of the world and controls the price of cotton. Can the planter who ships his cotton to Liverpool add this tax to the price? If the Southern States had entire control of the market, or a monopoly, perhaps he might, but there the cotton of the United States comes in competition with the cotton of about 12 or 15 other countries, and the planter's price must conform to the standard there fixed. Consequently he is not remunerated to the value of a farthing a bale. The whole loss falls on him. He is the person who pays it."

An examination of the debates had in the Constitutional Convention on this subject of taxation will show that the contention made by the plaintiff's attorney in the Farrington case is absolutely correct. It will be found that as the taxing power was originally introduced in the report of the committee of detail it stood as follows:

"The Legislature of the United States shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises." (See Madison's Debates, p. 378.)

If this clause had stood as the committee of detail originally reported it, it would have given to Congress unlimited power of taxation, which might have been used to the advantage of some States and to the prejudice of others, and for this reason, which was conceded by all, when this taxation matter came before the convention itself for adoption, it was amended by adding thereto these words: "But all such duties, imports, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States." And right here is the provision of the organic law under which it is sought to justify the levy of these taxes. The insistence of those who support the legality of the tax levy is that the tax is laid by the rule of uniformity, as it is stated in the act that the tax is to be levied on all cotton produced within the United States.

This clause is quoted, and gentlemen say that as the tax is laid upon all cotton in the United States it is necessarily uniform and fully complies with the constitutional requirement. If cotton were grown in all the States in the Union, this contention would be eminently correct, but when it is known to the courts and to the Congress and known to everyone that at the time of the levy of these taxes cotton could not be grown in any but 11 States, and while the act levied the tax upon all cotton grown within the United States, it would not cost some States one penny and would extort from the pockets of the people in other States millions of dollars, the plea of uniformity vanishes into thin air.

The case relied on by the advocates of the legality of these acts is the case of Hylton v. The United States, to be found in 3 Dallas, page 171. This was a case of an act of Congress levying a tax upon carriages, and an investigation of it will show that the court sustained the constitutionality of the act largely, and, in fact, we might say wholly, upon the ground that it was a tax on the consumer of an article. The three learned judges in that case, who delivered written opinions, concurred in intimating (they say expressly that they do not give a judicial opinion) that the direct taxes contemplated by the Constitution are only two, to wit, the capitation tax and the tax on land. Even if the intimation of these judges were correct, and that direct taxes as referred to in the Constitution were limited to two, and that those two were the capitation tax and a tax on land, then the contention which we make would be sound. We assert this because the courts and the law writers of approved authority all concur in the holding that the product of land, whether it be in rentals or whether it be in crops, stands upon exactly the same footing as the land itself. In other words, if the levy of a tax upon land would be a direct tax, and it should be required that the tax be levied by the rule of apportionment, then cotton, corn, wheat, or other raw product of the land itself would likewise be considered as land and the rule of apportionment would necessarily have to be complied with.

We desire to call attention of the House to the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States, when it delivered the opinion in the Hylton case, was denied access to the debates in the Federal Convention. It is recognized in all courts that one of the very best rules of statutory or constitutional construction is the will or the meaning of the legislator as contained in the debates leading up to the adoption of the particuar enactment. The debates in the Federal Convention were secret. No copies were allowed, and when the convention adjourned the journals were placed in charge of the President, and they were not laid before Congress or the country or published until after the decision in the Hylton case was made. This statement we get from Mr. Robertson Topp, of counsel for appellant in the Farrington-Saunders case, and Mr. Topp after making this statement says:

"Thus it will be seen that the court was deprived of one of the best means of determining the real meaning of the Constitution, viz, the reasons given by those who made it."

Referring to the fear that some of the States would be in the power of the others and that grave injustice would be done the weaker ones in the matter of taxation, Mr. Madison, in the convention, said:

"It is represented to be oppressive that the States which have slaves and tobacco should pay taxes on these for Federal wants when other States who have them not would escape. But does the Constitution on the table admit of this? On the contrary, there is a proportion to be laid on each State according to its population."

Mr. Topp, in his argument in the Farrington case, submits some figures taken from the census of 1860 which strike us as being a powerful exposition of what might occur and of the injustice which might be perpetrated, and which, in fact, was perpetrated, in the levy of these cotton taxes. We desire to call attention to the table referred to:

By referring to the census of 1860 it will be seen that the total population of the United States was	31,445,089
By the same table the population of the 11 cotton-producing States was	9,103,333
By the same table the value of real and personal property of the United States in 1860 was	$16,159,616,068
Of the 11 cotton-producing States	5,402,165,107
By referring to the agricultural report of 1867, page 90, it will be seen the corn crop of that year was worth	$610,948,390
The wheat crop	421,796,460
The oat crop	172,472,970
The hay crop	372,864,670
The cotton crop	201,470,495
And that including rye, barley, buckwheat, potatoes, and tobacco, the whole crop was worth	2,007,462,231

By referring to the census of 1860 it will be seen that the cotton crop, except 100 bales raised in Missouri and 6 bales in Illinois, was entirely raised in the 11 cotton States, and such has been the case since the existence of those States and since cotton was produced for export.

By referring to the tax laws of the United States it will be seen that cotton and sugar were the only crude products of the soil taxed, and that corn, which grew in every State from Maine to Texas, worth treble; wheat, worth double; hay, worth nearly double the cotton crop; that, in fact, the whole crop of every character and description passes free, whilst cotton, less than one-tenth in value, is singled out and made to bear ruinous burdens—1867, 33⅓ per cent of the gross value—whilst more than two-thirds of the people escaped the tax.

Is this fair? Is this just? Is this uniform?

The attorneys for the Government in the Farrington case, in addition to the contention that these taxes on cotton were not direct taxes, took the further position that the tax on cotton was an excise and that therefore the rule of apportionment did not apply. Let us examine this contention under the light of the Constitution. The Encyclopedia Britannica, under the article "Excise," defines an excise to be—

"A term used in finance to signify the duty charged in a country upon articles produced in it before they are permitted to get into the possession of the public."

Judge Storey says:

"An excise is an inland imposition or duty; a duty or tax laid on certain articles produced or consumed at home."

Accepting these definitions as being correct, how stand the cotton taxes with relation to clause 1, section 8, Article I, of the Constitution of the United States? That clause reads as follows:

"The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States."

Were these taxes uniform throughout the United States? That is the gist of the whole question, and upon the correct answer to the question must stand or fall the cotton taxes.

We are permitted in the discussion of a question like this, whether that discussion take place in the courtroom or in the legislative halls, to take notice of the physical conditions of the country. We are permitted to consider those things which are matters of common information. Acting upon this rule, the Congress must have known that when these taxes were levied cotton was grown in only 11 of the States of the Union. Outside of those 11 States I believe that no cotton was grown in the United States except about 100 bales in the State of Missouri and about 6 bales in the southern part of the State of Illinois. This being true—and no one will question its correctness—can it be contended that these acts were uniform throughout the United States?

In order that the Congress may see and know and understand just how uniform these acts were in their practical operation, if they will turn to the table that we have incorporated herein they will see that under these four acts of Congress levying taxes upon raw cotton the State of Georgia paid into the Treasury of the United States $11,897,094.98, while the State of Kansas, with a population almost as large, only paid into the Treasury of the country $286.15. And so in many other cases these figures are of themselves fully sufficient to show the injustice and gross inequality of these cotton taxes. But we have discovered in the act of August 5, 1861 (12 Stat. L., pp. 294–295), some figures which by comparison with those of the table referred to will make the inequality still more impressive from another point of view. That act laid a direct tax of $20,000,000 upon land in the United States and apportioned the same among the several States according to population. It was a constitutional act, and it is highly instructive to compare the amounts apportioned under it to the several cotton States with the amounts actually collected under the operation of the unconstitutional cotton-tax acts. We have done this in a tabular statement which we now present.

Direct taxes apportioned to the several cotton-growing States by act of Aug. 5, 1861, and amounts collected in same States under the cotton-tax acts.

State.	Apportionment under act of 1861.	Collected under cotton-tax acts.
Georgia	$584,367	$11,897,094
Alabama	529,313	10,388,072
Mississippi	413,081	8,742,995
Louisiana	385,886	10,008,501
Florida	77,522	918,944
Arkansas	261,886	2,555,638
Tennessee	669,498	7,873,460
North Carolina	576,194	1,959,704
South Carolina	363,570	4,172,420

The direct taxes laid by the act of 1861, in conformity with the Constitution, have been refunded to the States from which they were collected, while these illegal and unconstitutional cotton taxes have been covered into the Treasury and used for the benefit of the United States, and no restitution made. It is an unusual case. Suppose the acts of Congress imposing these taxes had provided that 11 States, naming them, should pay these taxes and that the remaining States should be exempt therefrom. Would it be contended for a moment that this was a compliance with the constitutional provision which required that such taxes should be uniform throughout the United States? Certainly not. Can Congress by simply placing the words "all cotton produced in the United States" evade this provision when Congress knew, or must have known, that the whole burden would fall upon 11 States and would not and could not[1] be made uniform in its operation throughout the United States?

[1] Law of nature prevented. A tax on iron ore would violate Constitution for same reason; a tax on coal likewise.

Such a contention would merely be a juggling with words and a prostitution of a solemnly enacted provision of our organic law unworthy of the merest tyro in constitutional law. If our Constitution can be distorted and emasculated by such legislative legerdemain, then the right to live, the right to be free, and the right to pursue happiness, for which our fathers fought and died in the Revolution, are not protected by our sacred bond of union.

Not in anger, but in a broad spirit of brotherly love and patriotic devotion to our beloved country, let us appeal to the Congress to right this most grievous wrong to constitutional government.

We also take the position that these taxes are obnoxious to another provision of the Constitution. Clause 5 of section 9, Article I, provides: "No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State."

That cotton, when these different acts were passed by Congress, was an article of export was well known. Practically every pound of cotton grown in the Southern States during the period 1862 to 1868 was grown expressly for export and export to foreign countries. The courts and the law writers of approved authority agree that the clause of the Constitution to which we have just called attention applies as well to articles exported from one State in the Union to another State in the Union as it does from one of our States to foreign countries. It is said that the cotton crop of 1867 was 2,240,282 bales, of which 1,657,015 were shipped to foreign parts, leaving for home consumption 553,267 bales, of which it is estimated that about 60,000 bales were manufactured in the cotton-growing States. In other words, 60,000 bales out of a total of 2,240,282 bales remained in the States where the cotton was grown, thus showing that the great bulk of the crop was exported and establishing raw cotton as an export beyond all question. That this constitutional provision applies to the exporting of goods from one State to another in the Union, we desire to call attention to the definition of the word "export" given by Webster. He says that exporting means—

"To carry out, to convey, or transport any traffic, produce, or goods, from one country to another, or from one State or jurisdiction to another, either by water or land. We export wares and merchandise from the United States to Europe. The Northern States export manufactures to South Carolina and Georgia."

In the case of Almy v. California the court decided that articles of export from one State to another could not be taxed. No court in this country has ever rendered an opinion, not even excepting the Hylton case, that is contrary to the contention which we make for the refunding of this money wrongfully exacted from the people of these different States.

In the case of Pacific Insurance Co. v. Soule the learned judge who rendered the opinion in that case said:

"The taxing power is given in the most comprehensive terms. The only limitations imposed are that direct taxes, including the capitation tax, shall be apportioned; that duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform, and that no duty shall be imposed on articles exported from any State. With these exceptions the exercise of the power is in all respects unfettered." (7 Wall., p. 446.)

In asking the passage of this bill and insisting upon this measure of retarded justice, we stand squarely upon the law as laid down by the court in the case of Soule. This Government ought to have the right to tax anything and everything when the necessities of the Government require it. But this Government in the exercise of that right should strictly comply with every provision of the Constitution, else constitutional government is a failure. Every man who loves his country and who honors the flag must agree in preserving without variance each and every clause of our organic law as framed and handed down to us by the patriots who planted the seeds of liberty in the friendly soil of this Western World. Since we have referred to the direct tax act of 1861, it may be well in this place to refer to other acts amendatory of it and to certain decisions of the courts construing the same. The acts of June 7, 1862 (12 Stat. L., 422), January 6, 1863 (12 Stat L., 640), March 3, 1865 (13 Stat. L., 501), and the resolution of February 25, 1867 (14 Stat. L., 568), made provision for the assessment and collection of this tax. All these acts were construed by the Court of Claims in the case of Seabrooke v. United States (21 Ct. Cls. Rept., 39), Harrison's case (20 id., 176), and Thompson's case (20 id., 270). In all these cases it was held that where a tax has been illegally collected the money should be refunded. And in Miles v. Johnson (59 Fed. Rep., 38, 40) it was held that the word "tax" includes taxes which have been illegally levied as well as those which have been illegally collected, though legally levied. In nearly all jurisdictions provision is made by statute for the refunding of taxes illegally exacted. (27 American and English Encyclopedia of Law (2d ed.), 756–757.) And the word "exacted" includes the levy as well as the collection.

The act of June 8, 1872 (17 Stat. L., 339), restored to the former legal owners all lands then held by the United States under the direct tax acts upon payment of taxes, interest, expenses, etc., and released the title of the United States to the said lands. And subsequent statutes have refunded the entire amount collected under the act of 1861 and the acts amendatory of it to the several States. See the act of March 2, 1891, "to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861" (26 Stat. L., 822). By this act it was enacted that "it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to credit to each State and Territory of the United States and to the District of Columbia a sum equal to all collections by set-off or otherwise made from said States and Territories and the District of Columbia, or from any of the citizens or inhabitants thereof, or other persons, under the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861, and the amendatory acts thereto, and that all moneys due to the United States on the quota of direct tax apportioned by section 8 of said act are hereby remitted and relinquished." And an appropriation was made of a "sum sufficient to pay all money found due to them under the provisions of this act."

In almost every general deficiency bill which has passed the House within 20 years there has been an appropriation for refunding taxes illegally collected. We will cite only two instances out of many—the act of April 30, 1890 (26 Stat. L., 547), appropriated $31,156.43 "for the refunding of taxes illegally collected"; the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. L., 891), appropriated $12,317.42 for the same purpose. Section 3689 of the Revised Statutes contains a general provision requiring all such taxes to be refunded upon application of the party aggrieved. Now, we claim that the cotton taxes were not only illegally collected but illegally levied; because, in addition to the violation of the rule of apportionment, Congress, in laying these taxes, also violated the constitutional provision against laying duties on exports from any State and those provisions relating to due process of law. But a literal compliance with the mandatory provisions of the Constitution, whether affirmative or negative, is a condition precedent to the validity of any law levying taxes on the property of the people. Nor does it matter, therefore, whether this cotton tax was a war tax or was not, for the taxing power is restricted and qualified in respect to all taxation by all the general limitations which are imposed upon its authority by the Constitution. (Wilkes Co. v. Coler, 180 U. S., 506, 525.)

Furthermore, these acts violate the fundamental principle of all taxation. We are inclined on any and all occasions to boast that under our beneficent form of government "all men are equal before the law." The rich and the poor, the great and the small, the strong and the weak, we have always been taught, must, in proportion to ability, aid in bearing the burdens of government while permitted to share its blessings.

That principle, which is as fully applicable to the action of the Federal Government as to that of any State, county, or municipal government, was stated by Judge Cooley in the case of The People v. Town of Salem (20 Mich., 452, 474), as follows:

"The tax must be laid according to some rule of apportionment, not arbitrarily or by caprice, but so that the burden may be made to fall with something like impartiality upon the persons or property upon which it justly and equitably should rest. A State burden is not to be imposed upon any territory smaller than the whole State, nor a county burden upon any territory smaller or greater than the county. Equality in the imposition of the burden is of the very essence of the power itself, and though absolute equality and absolute justice are never attainable, the adoption of some rule tending to that end is indispensable."

Under this legislation the Government of the United States collected, mainly from the people of the Southern States, who had no voice in laying these taxes, the sum of $68,072,388.99, and disposed of that sum as it did of legitimate revenue. Every man, no matter from what State he hails, or what may be his politics, should support this measure as an act of simple justice to the people who were wronged. In all fairness, that sum should be refunded to those from whom it was extorted.

Surely those who were compelled to pay these unconstitutional taxes should not be treated worse than those persons who, acting under the provisions of the sugar bounty law, spent money in improvements and machinery needed for the production of sugar. When the sugar bounty was declared unconstitutional by the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia (Miles Planting Co. v. Carlisle, 5 D. C. App., 138), Congress refunded to them, by the act of 1895, the money which they had expended in accordance with the act of 1890, known as the "McKinley bill." In construing the act of 1895, the Supreme Court of the United States, in the celebrated Sugar Bounty case (United States v. Realty Co., 163 U. S., 442–443), said:

"Among the latest examples of payments that are not of a right or of any legal claim, but which are in the nature of a gratuity depending upon equitable consideration, are the cases just decided by this court of Blagge v. Balch, Brooks v. Codman, and Foote v. Women's Board of Missions, reported as one case in One hundred and sixty-second United States Statutes, 439. The claims in those cases are what have been known as the "French spoliation claims," being based upon depredations of French cruisers upon our commerce prior to July, 1801. An appropriation for their payment was made by Congress in 1891 upon the conditions and to the class of persons named in the act. Questions arose as to the proper interpretation of the act and as to the character of the payments provided for therein. The court held the payments were purposely brought by Congress within the category of payments that are not of right, but which are in the nature of a gratuity and as an act of grace, though founded upon a prior moral or honorable obligation to pay to some one who might be said in some way to represent the original sufferers. No question of the power of Congress to make such appropriation was raised by anyone.

"The power to provide for claims upon the State founded in equity and justice has also been recognized as existing in the State governments. For example, in Guilford v. Chenango County (13 N. Y., 143), it was held by the New York Court of Appeals that the legislature was not confined in its appropriation of public moneys to sums to be raised by taxation in favor of individuals to cases in which legal demands existed against the State, but that it could recognize claims founded in equity and justice in the largest sense of these terms or in gratitude or in charity.

"Of course, the difference between the powers of the State legislatures and that of the Congress of the United States is not lost sight of, but it is believed that in relation to the power to recognize and to pay obligations resting only upon moral considerations or upon the general principles of right and justice, the Federal Congress stands upon a level with the State legislature.

"In truth, the general proposition that Congress can direct the payment of debts which have only a strong moral and honorable obligation for their support is not, as we understand it, denied by the learned counsel for the United States."

No one can deny that the claim of the cotton planters is altogether as valid as the "sugar-bounty claims" or the "French spoliation claims." The cotton planters acted under the guaranty of the Constitution of the United States that their products should not be taken from them without just compensation or due process of law, unless by means of direct taxes apportioned among the several States according to numbers. This guaranty was violated by the Federal Government. Under the guise of taxation, the Government compelled them to contribute a large portion of their property to public uses. In the "income-tax cases" it was clearly demonstrated that any law of this kind was invalid. What, then, is the legal consequence? Is it not clear that the Government assumed the responsibility of refunding to those from whom it took the money in question every cent so taken? But for the prevalence of sectional ill feeling these claims would have been paid 33 years ago. In the Forty-third Congress bills were introduced, with that end in view, by Mr. McKee, of Mississippi; by Mr. White, of Alabama, on behalf of Mr. Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia; by Mr. Blount, of Georgia; and also by Mr. Sheldon and Mr. Cook. In the Forty-fourth Congress a similar bill was introduced by Mr. Roger Q. Mills, of Texas. These bills, respectively, were: H. R. 2250, Forty-third Congress, first session, to refund certain taxes collected by the Government of the United States on raw cotton during the years 1865, 1866, 1867, and 1868, introduced March 2, 1874, by Mr. McKee; H. R. 2338, Forty-third Congress, first session, to refund the cotton tax, introduced by Mr. White, on behalf of Mr. Stephens, who was absent on account of sickness; H. R. 1076, Forty-third Congress, first session, to refund taxes collected by the United States on raw cotton during the years 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866, 1867, 1868, introduced by Mr. Cook; H. R. 1632, Forty-third Congress, first session, to extend the time for collecting the cotton tax and reviving such claims as are now barred, introduced by Mr. Blount; H. R. 3448, Forty-third Congress, first session, to refund the cotton tax, introduced by Mr. Sheldon; H. R. 982, Forty-fourth Congress, first session, refunding the cotton tax to the producer of the cotton, introduced by Mr. Mills. All of these bills except Mr. Blount's were referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, but were never reported back. The men who prepared them were among the best lawyers then in Congress; but the animosities engendered by the late war were still too strong to secure for them a respectful hearing.

Another reason and a very cogent one, and one which should appeal strongly to the conscience of Congress, is the fact that when these taxes were levied, when these acts of Congress were enacted, the 11 States affected by them and which had to bear the burden of over sixty millions of dollars of taxation, had no Representatives in either branch of this Congress; no Representative in this House and no Senator at the other end of the Capitol was here to raise his voice or to cast his vote on these questions which so vitally affected the impoverished people of the 11 cotton-growing States.

Therefore that provision of the Constitution with reference to representation and taxation was violated. It seems that this objection to the validity of the taxes in question ought to appeal more strongly if possible to the conscience of Congress than even the other clauses which were violated by these different acts. The Constitution says:

"Representation and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union according to their respective numbers."

It has been said that—

"representation constitutes the genius of this Government, and to impose taxes or burdens without it is to change its character. But for taxation without representation the Government itself would never have existed."

The Stamp Act, the act placing a duty on tea, and other acts of the British Parliament brought on the Revolution on the ground, pure and simple, that it was legislation without representation. This Government had its origin in the protest of the fathers against taxation without representation. In 1766, on the question of the repeal of the Stamp Act in the British Parliament, Lord Camden, formerly Chief Justice Pratt, said:

"My proposition is this:

"'I repeat it and will maintain it to the last hour. Taxation and representation are inseparable. Opposition is founded in the law of nature. For whatsoever is a man's own, it is absolutely his own. No man has the right to take it from him without his consent. Whoever attempts to do it does him an injury. Whoever does it commits a robbery.'" (See 5 Bancroft's History, pp. 446–448.)

In discussing the question of the right of Parliament to tax America, William Pitt in the House of Commons said:

"I will only speak to one point—the point which seems not to have been generally understood. I mean the right. Some gentlemen seem to have considered it a point of honor. If gentlemen consider it in that light they leave all measures of right and wrong to follow a delusion that may lead to destruction. It is my point that this Kingdom has no right to lay a tax on the Colonies. At the same time, I assert the authority of this Kingdom over the Colonies to be sovereign and supreme in every circumstance of government and legislation whatsoever. They are the subjects of this Kingdom, entitled with yourselves to all the rights of mankind and the peculiar privileges of Englishmen, equally bound by its laws and equally participating in the constitution of this free country. The Americans are the sons of England. Taxation is no part of the governing or legislative power. The taxes are a voluntary gift and grant."

Mr. Pitt took this position solely on the ground that the Colonies were not represented, and it must be remembered that taxation without representation was the great rallying cry of the colonists and their chief cause of complaint when they severed their relations with the mother country.

James Burgh, the celebrated Scotchman, in discussing this same question, said:

"No pretext can justify taxing them (the Colonies) so long as they continue unrepresented."

The States affected by the cotton taxes were not only not represented when these several tax acts were enacted, but they were positively denied representation in both the Senate and House of Representatives by solemn resolution of both bodies.

In December, 1865, the House of Representatives passed a resolution to this effect:

"That all papers which may be offered relative to the representation of the late so-called Confederate States of America, or either of them, shall be referred to the joint committee of 15 without debate, and no members shall be admitted from either of said so-called States until Congress shall declare said States, or either of them, entitled to representation."

On February 20, 1866, the House passed, and on March 2, 1866, the Senate passed, this resolution:

"Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in order to close agitation on the question which seems likely to disturb the action of the Government, as well as to kill the uncertainty which is agitating the minds of the people of the 11 States which have been declared to be in insurrection, no Senator or Representative shall be admitted into either branch of Congress from any of said States until Congress shall have declared such State entitled to representation."

As it has been repeatedly held by the Federal courts, and by all the departments of Government, that these States were never out of the Union, you have here a Congress denying them representation and at the same time exacting taxes from them. "Taxation without representation is robbery." The remarkable spectacle was presented to the world of 11 States of this Republic, solemnly declared by the different departments of Government to be States in the Federal Union, yet by solemn resolution denied representation in the law-making body, and that law-making body exacting taxes from them on their principal product of over $60,000,000. Surely, now that the clouds of Civil War have vanished and sectional hate, we are told, lies buried never to be resurrected, in this day of national unity and general good feeling and brotherly love, you will refund these moneys that have been wrongfully, unjustly, unconstitutionally, and illegally exacted.

In 1868 Congress repealed the tax on raw cotton. Why should this tax have been repealed? If the tax were just and constitutional and right, why repeal it? If it was constitutional and proper in 1862, 1864, 1866, and 1867, why was it not constitutional and right in 1868? And if it were constitutional, why not retain it?

The Supreme Court of the United States has more recently passed upon this question in the case of Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. As reported in United States Supreme Court Reports, volume 158, at page 601, the Supreme Court of the United States has squarely and fairly declared these taxes to be illegal and unconstitutional. In the case stated Hylton v. The United States (3 Dallas, p. 171) is further considered and, in view of the historical evidence cited, shown to have only decided that the "tax on carriages involved was an excise and was an indirect tax."

Chief Justice Fuller, in rendering the opinion in that case, said:

"In distributing the power of taxation the Constitution retained to the States the absolute power of direct taxation, but granted to the Federal Government the power of the same taxation upon condition that in its exercise such taxes should be apportioned among the several States according to numbers, and this was done in order to protect the States, which were surrendering to the Federal Government so many sources of income, the power of direct taxation, which was their principal remaining resource."

The Chief Justice further said:

"Taxes on real estate being indisputably direct taxes, taxes on the lands or incomes of real estate are clearly direct taxes."

Again he said:

"Taxes on personal property or on the income of personal property are likewise direct taxes."

The Chief Justice further in the decision uses this language:

"The tax imposed by sections 27 to 37, inclusive, of the act of 1894, so far as it applies to the income of real estate and of personal property, being a direct tax within the meaning of the Constitution and therefore unconstitutional and void because not apportioned according to representation of those sections constituting one entire scheme of taxation, is necessarily invalid."

These were the "income-tax cases," and it will be remembered that the Chief Justice and four of his associates concurred in the opinion rendered by the majority of the court. It is true that four associate justices—namely, Mr. Justice Harlan, Mr. Justice Brown, Mr. Justice White, and Mr. Justice Jackson—dissented from the opinion, Mr. Justice Harlan using this language:

"The recent Civil War, involving the very existence of the Nation, was brought to a successful end and the authority of the Nation restored in part by the use of vast amounts of money raised under statutes imposing duties on income derived from every kind of property, real and personal, not by the unequal rule of apportionment among the States on the basis of numbers but by the rule of uniformity operating upon individuals and corporations in all the States, and we are now asked to declare, and the judgment this day rendered in effect declares, that the enormous sums thus taken from the people and so used were taken in violation of the supreme law of the land."

There can be no possible question, in view of the decision of the court in the "income-tax cases," that it is the duty of Congress to refund the moneys collected by virtue of these tax statutes. It is said by some that Congress can not afford to do it because it involves such a large amount of money, more than $68,000,000. But when gentlemen view the case from that standpoint they must remember that the Government has had the use of this $68,000,000 for 40 years and more; that it was originally wrung from the lean purses of people who were impoverished by four years of cruel, ceaseless war; that it was wrung from the lean purses of people whose homes had been laid in ashes and whose every household was in mourning. They must remember that this money was taken from people who had no voice in the levying of it; that it was taken from a people who could least afford to bear the burden, and that now, after this rich, powerful Government has had the use of it without interest for more than 40 years, these people are simply asking that the principal be refunded. The Supreme Court of the United States has said, in effect, that it ought to be refunded; has said, in effect, that it would not be honest on the part of the Government to retain it.

There have been no laches on the part of the claimants for the return of these taxes as is evidenced by bills introduced in Congress, as follows:

[H. R. 2354, Fifty-third Congress, first session. By Mr. Enloe.]

"That the Secretary of the Treasury issue to the governors of the several States in which cotton taxes were paid United States bonds in amounts specified for each State and equal to the amount of taxes collected within the State. These bonds to be held by said States, to be refunded and distributed to the parties who paid the tax. In case of a surplus remaining, the funds to be devoted to the school fund."

(There was no report on this bill.)

[H. R. 281, Fifty-third Congress, first session. By Mr. Money.]

"That the Secretary of the Treasury issue noninterest-bearing Treasury notes in such denominations as may be deemed expedient to the several States in amounts equal to the cotton taxes collected therein, as indicated by the internal-revenue report. That the sum so paid shall be held in trust by the several States for the benefit of the cotton producers, to be paid to them under such provisions as each State may deem it proper to make. In case the producer can not be reimbursed, the sum not distributed shall become the property of the State. The claims must be filed with each State within two years after the passage of an act by such State providing for the distribution of the money refunded. That these notes shall become legal tender and shall not be canceled by the United States when received at the Treasury, but used as other money."

(No report.)

(H. R. 2356, Fifty-third Congress, first session, is same as 2354.)

[H. R. 196, Fifty-third Congress, first session. By Mr. Wheeler.]

"That the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay money equal to the amount collected in cotton taxes to each State, said State to designate who shall be custodian of the fund. In case the tax was paid by the person to whom the cotton was shipped residing in another State, the State where said cotton was grown shall be the recipient."

(No report.)

[H. R. 138, Fifty-third Congress, first session. By Mr. Oates.]

"In the case of the Supreme Court holding the law under which cotton taxes were collected unconstitutional, any citizen who had paid the tax shall be permitted to bring suit for its recovery in the Court of Claims. Within 60 days after judgment either the petitioner or the United States shall have the right of appeal to the Supreme Court, and when such appeal shall have been taken the court shall not try any case until the appeal case has been decided. The Court of Claims shall decide all suits which are brought within one year of the Supreme Court's holding the original tax law to be unconstitutional."

(No report.)

[H. R. 124, first session Fifty-third Congress. By Mr. McRae.]

"That the Secretary of the Treasury pay to each State a sum equal to the cotton taxes collected therein, the said States to pay to such producers as shall make claim within two years after the passage of this act. The remainder, if any, shall be used as a permanent school fund. In no case shall payment be made to any assignee of such claim."

(No report.)

(H. R. 2640, first session, Fifty-second Congress, is same as 124, first session Fifty-third Congress. No report.)

(H. R. 2607 same as H. R. 196, first session Fifty-third Congress. No report.)

(H. R. 650, first session Fifty-second Congress, same as 2354, first session Fifty-third Congress. No report.)

[H. R. 8365, first session Fifty-second Congress. By Mr. Oates.]

"This bill is same as introduced by Mr. Oats in Fifty-third Congress. The House report is 2528, first session Fifty-second Congress."

[H. R. 8366, first session Fifty-second Congress. By Mr. Oates.]

"That the Secretary of the Treasury pay to each State an amount equal to the cotton tax collected within said State, to be disposed of by such State as their next legislatures shall direct."

(No report.)

[H. R. 700, second session Forty-second Congress. By Mr. Golladay.]

"That the Secretary of the Treasury refund to all persons the cotton tax collected by the United States, and that he shall make such rules as he may deem necessary in connection therewith."

(No report.)

[H. R. 1592, second session Forty-second Congress. By Mr. McKee.]

"That restitution shall be made of all moneys collected as cotton taxes. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall issue bonds of $500 and $1,000 denomination and Treasury notes to cover amounts less than that. That a commission shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, which shall adjudicate all claims. That such commission shall sit for two years and all claims must be filed within that time." (The rest of this long bill prescribes the manner of taking testimony and the duties and powers of the commission.)

We present with this report extracts from the opinion of the court as well as from the dissenting opinion of the justices in the income-tax cases, and from which it will be seen that the contentions made were amply sustained by the highest court in the land, the most exalted judicial tribunal in all the world.

[Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., U. S. Supreme Court Repts., vol. 157, p. 429.]

Chief Justice Fuller:

"The men who framed and adopted that instrument [the Constitution] had just emerged from the struggle for independence, whose rallying cry had been that 'taxation and representation go together.'

* * * * * * *

"The mother country had taught the colonists in the contests waged to establish that taxes could not be imposed by the sovereign except as they were granted by the representatives of the realm, that self-taxation constituted the main security against oppression.

* * * * * * *

"Thus in the matter of taxation the Constitution recognizes the two great classes of direct and indirect taxes and lays down two rules by which their imposition must be governed, namely, the rules of apportionment as to direct taxes and the rule of uniformity as to duties, imposts, and excises.

* * * * * * *

"And this view was expressed by Mr. Chief Justice Chase in the License Tax cases (5 Wall., 464–471), when he said: 'It is true that the power of Congress to tax is a very extensive power. It is given in the Constitution with only one exception and only two qualifications. Congress can not tax exports and it must impose direct taxes by the rule of apportionment and indirect taxes by the rule of the uniformity. Thus limited, and thus only, it reaches every subject and may be exercised at discretion.'

* * * * * * *

"Ordinarily all taxes paid primarily by persons who can shift the burden upon some one else, or who are under no legal compulsion to pay them, are considered indirect taxes; but a tax upon property holders in respect of their estates, whether real or personal, or of the income yielded by such estates, and the payment of which can not be avoided, are direct taxes.

* * * * * * *

"In the convention of Massachusetts, by which the Constitution was ratified, the second section of Article I being under consideration, Mr. King said, 'It is a principle of this Constitution that representation and taxation should go hand in hand.'

* * * * * * *

"And John Adams, Davis, Sumner, King, and Sedgwick all agreed that a direct tax would be the last source of revenue resorted to by Congress."

"In Virginia Mr. John Marshall said: 'The objects of direct taxes are well understood; they are but few; what are they? Lands, slaves, stock of all kinds, and a few other articles of domestic property.'

"Mr. Randolph said: 'But in this new Constitution there is a more just and equitable rule fixed—a limitation beyond which they can not go. Representatives and taxes go hand in hand; according to the one will the other be regulated. The number of Representatives is determined by the number of inhabitants; they have nothing to do but to lay taxes accordingly.'

"In discussing the case of Hylton v. United States (carriage-tax case), the Chief Justice says: 'It will be perceived that each of the justices, while suggesting doubt whether anything but a capitation or a land tax was a direct tax within the meaning of the Constitution, distinctly avoided expressing an opinion upon that question or laying down a comprehensive definition, but confined his opinion to the case before the court.

"'By the act of July 14, 1798, when a war with France was supposed to be impending, a direct tax of $2,000,000 was apportioned to the States, respectively, etc.

"'By the act of August 2, 1813, a direct tax of $3,000,000 was laid and apportioned to the States.

"'The act of January 9, 1815, laid a direct tax of $6,000,000, which was apportioned, assessed,' etc.

"These acts are attributable to the War of 1812.

"The act of August 5, 1861 (12 Stat., 292–294, c. 45), imposed a tax of $20,000,000, which was apportioned and to be levied wholly on real estate, and also levied taxes on incomes whether derived from property or profession, trade or vocation (12 Stat. L., 309), and this was followed by the acts of July 1, 1862 (12 Stat. L., 432, 473, c. 119); March 3, 1863 (12 Stat. L., 713, 723, c. 74); June 30, 1864 (13 Stat. L., 223, 281, c. 173); March 3, 1865 (13 Stat. L., 469, 479, c. 78); March 10, 1866 (14 Stat. L., 4, c. 15); July 13, 1866 (14 Stat. L., 98, 137, c. 184); March 2, 1867 (14 Stat., 471, 477, c. 169); and July 14, 1870 (16 Stat., 256, c. 255).

"He finds:

"First. That the distinction between direct and indirect taxation was well understood by the framers of the Constitution and those who adopted it.

"Second. That under the State systems of taxation all taxes on real estate or personal property or the rents or income thereof were regarded as direct taxes.

"Third. That the rules of apportionment and of uniformity were adopted in view of that distinction and those systems.

"Fourth. That whether the tax on carriages was direct or indirect was disputed, but the tax was sustained as a tax on the use and an excise.

"Fifth. That the original expectation was that the power of direct taxation would be exercised only in extraordinary exigencies, and down to August 15, 1894, this expectation has been realized.

"In Pacific Insurance Co. v. Soule (7 Wall., 433) the validity of a tax which was described as 'upon the business of an insurance company' was sustained on the ground that it was 'a duty or excise' and came within the decision in Hylton's case.

"In Veazie Bank v. Tenno (8 Wall., 533, 544, 546) a tax was laid on the circulation of State banks or national banks paying out the notes of individuals or State banks, and it was held that it might well be classed under the head of duties and as falling within the same category as Soule's case (8 Wall., 547).

"And in respect of the opinions in Hylton's case the Chief Justice (Chase) said:

"'It may further be taken as established upon the testimony of Paterson that the words "direct taxes," as used in the Constitution, comprehended only capitation taxes and taxes on land, and perhaps taxes on personal property by general valuation and assessment of the various descriptions possessed within the several States.'

"Scholey v. Rew (23 Wall., 331) was the case of a succession tax which the court held to be 'plainly an excise tax or duty' upon the devolution of the estate or the right to become beneficially entitled to the same, or the income thereof, in possession or expectancy.

"In Railroad Co. v. Collector (100 U. S., 595, 596) the validity of a tax collected of a corporation upon the interest paid by it upon its bonds was held to be 'essentially an excise on the business of the class of corporations mentioned in the statute.'

"The case of Springer v. United States (102 U. S., 586, 602), chiefly relied on and urged upon us as decisive.

"That was an action of ejectment brought on a tax deed issued to the United States on sale of defendant's real estate for income taxes. The defendant contended that the deed was void because the tax was a direct tax not levied in accordance with the Constitution. Unless the tax were wholly invalid, the defense failed.

"The opinion thus concludes:

"'Our conclusions are that direct taxes, within the meaning of the Constitution, are only capitation taxes, as expressed in that instrument, and taxes on real estate; and that the tax of which the plaintiff in error complains is within the category of an excise or duty.

"While [says Chief Justice Fuller] this language is broad enough to cover the interest as well as the professional earnings, the case would have been more significant as a precedent if the distinction had been brought out in the report and commented on in arriving at judgment, for a tax on professional receipts might be treated as an excise or duty, and therefore indirect, when a tax on the income of personalty might be held to be direct.

"Be this as it may, it is conceded in all these cases, from that of Hylton to that of Springer, that taxes on land are direct taxes, and in none of them is it determined that taxes on rents or income derived from land are not taxes on land.

* * * * * * *

"The requirement of the Constitution is that no direct tax shall be laid otherwise than by apportionment—the prohibition is not against direct taxes on land, from which the implication is sought to be drawn that indirect taxes on land would be constitutional, but it is against all direct taxes—and it is admitted that a tax on real estate is a direct tax. Unless, therefore, a tax upon rents or income issuing out of lands is intrinsically so different from a tax on the land itself that it belongs to a wholly different class of taxes, such taxes must be regarded as falling within the same category as a tax on real estate eo nomine. The name of the tax is unimportant. The real question is: Is there any basis upon which to rest the contention that real estate belongs to one of the two great classes of taxes and the rent or income which is the incident of its ownership belongs to the other? We are unable to perceive any ground for the alleged distinction. An annual tax upon the annual value or annual user of real estate appears to us the same in substance as an annual tax on the real estate, which would be paid out of the rent or income. This law taxes the income received from land and the growth or produce of the land. Mr. Justice Paterson observed in Hylton's case, 'Land, independently of its produce, is of no value'; and certainly had no thought that direct taxes were confined to unproductive land.

* * * * * * *

"Nothing can be clearer than that what the Constitution intended to guard against was the exercise by the General Government of the power of directly taxing persons and property within any State through a majority made up from the other States. It is true that the effect of requiring direct taxes to be apportioned among the States in proportion to their population is necessarily that the amount of taxes on the individual taxpayer in a State having the taxable subject matter to a larger extent in proportion to its population than another State has would be less than in such other State, but this inequality must be held to have been contemplated, and was manifestly designed to operate to restrain the exercise of the power of direct taxation to extraordinary emergencies, and to prevent an attack upon accumulated property by mere force of numbers.

* * * * * * *

"But the acceptance of the rule of apportionment was one of the compromises which made the adoption of the Constitution possible, and secured the creation of that dual form of government, so elastic and so strong, which has thus far survived in unabated vigor. If, by calling a tax indirect when it is essentially direct, the rule of proportion could be frittered away, one the great landmarks defining the boundary between the Nation and the States of which it is composed would have disappeared, and with it one of the bulwarks of private rights and private property.

* * * * * * *

"'We are of opinion that the law in question, so far as it levies a tax on the rents or income of real estate, is in violation of the Constitution and is invalid.'

"Mr. Justice Field first calls attention to the debates in the 'convention,' and particularly to the unwillingness of the coast States to relinquish their right to levy duties upon imports, and of the small interior States to confer upon the General Government the right to levy direct taxes, and says: 'It was feared at times that the effort to form a new government would fail. But happily a compromise was effected by an agreement that direct taxes should be laid by Congress by apportioning them among the States according to their representation. In return for this concession by some of the States, the other States bordering on navigable waters consented to relinquish to the new Government the control of duties, imposts, and excises, and the regulation of commerce, with the condition that the duties, imposts, and excises should be uniform throughout the United States; so that on the one hand anything like oppression or undue advantage of any one State over the others would be prevented by the apportionment of the direct taxes among the States according to their representation, and, on the other hand, anything like oppression or hardship in the levying of duties, imposts, and excises would be avoided by the provision that they should be uniform throughout the United States. This compromise was essential to the continued union and harmony of the States. It protected every State from being controlled in its taxation by the superior numbers of one or more other States.'

"'If the court sanctions the power of discriminating taxation and nullifies the uniformity mandate of the Constitution,' as said by one who has been all his life a student of our institutions, 'it will mark the hour when the sure decadence of our present Government will commence.

"'There is no safety in allowing the limitation to be adjusted except in strict compliance with the mandates of the Constitution, which require its taxation, if imposed by direct taxes, to be apportioned among the States according to their representation, and if imposed by indirect taxes, to be uniform in operation and, so far as practicable, in proportion to their property, equal upon all citizens.'"

We beg leave to quote House Report 2528, Fifty-second Congress, second session, made by the Hon. W. C. Oates, then a Member of Congress from the State of Alabama, a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

[House Rept. 2528, 52d Cong., 2d sess.]

"The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8365) entitled 'A bill to provide for refunding the tax laid and collected on raw cotton in the event that the Supreme Court holds the law under which the same was collected to have been unconstitutional,' make to the House the following report:

"By the act of Congress approved July 1, 1862, and subsequent amendatory acts, a tax was imposed on raw cotton, under which collections were made and the money paid into the Treasury of the United States, aggregating $68,072,388.99. This money was collected in the years 1863 to 1868, both inclusive.

"At the beginning of the late war a large part of the crop of 1860 was held by brokers and factors in the Northern States for the benefit of the producers. A large part of the crop of 1861 in the border States also went into the hands of northern factors, which accounts for the fact that a considerable amount of this tax was collected in New York, Philadelphia, and other points in the Northern States, but all of the cotton upon which the tax thus collected was grown exclusively in the Southern States. This tax was enforced and collected upon all these cottons as well as those grown subsequent to its enactment; $64,935,121.56 of this tax was collected in the Southern States, either directly or indirectly, from the producers.

"Section 8 of Article I of the Constitution empowers Congress to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises for three general purposes, viz, first, to pay the debts of the United States; second, to provide for the common defense of the United States; and, third, to provide for the general welfare of the United States. The latter part of that section contains the following restriction upon this exercise of power: 'But all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.'

"Subdivisions 4 and 5 of section 9 are as follows: 'No capitation or other direct tax shall be laid unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken'; and 'no tax or duties shall be laid or articles exported from any State.'

"The original act taxing cotton read as follows:

"'There shall be paid by the producer, owner, or holder upon all cotton produced within the United States, * * * a tax of 2 cents per pound,' etc. The last one of the amendatory acts in relation to said tax was approved July 13, 1866, entitled 'An act to reduce internal taxation,' etc., but in fact it increased the tax imposed upon cotton from 2 to 3 cents per pound. Under the latter amendment three-fourths of the total amount of the tax was collected. It will therefore be observed that it was not a war tax, but enacted more than a year after the peace. It is yet an open question as to whether these acts were constitutional. If the tax laid was a direct one, then it is unquestionably unconstitutional for want of uniformity in apportionment. If the tax aid on raw cotton was indirect, it was constitutional, unless it was a tax upon exports, in which latter event it was unconstitutional.

"The question of the constitutionality of the laws laying this tax was brought before the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Sanders, from Tennessee, and very ably argued upon both sides before that tribunal. Eight of the justices sat in the case. Chief Justice Chase, being indisposed, did not sit in the case; and after full consideration the court was found to be equally divided, four justices maintaining that the acts were unconstitutional and four maintaining that they were constitutional. Before the question could be again presented the law was repealed, after which a case could not be made. If this tax was imposed by a constitutional law, however oppressive its operation upon the people of the Southern, or cotton-growing, States, there is no legal ground or claim for refunding the tax. On the other hand, if the law imposing the tax was unconstitutional, the money was wrongfully collected, and there is an implied promise upon the part of the Government to refund it; or, in other words, it is a debt against the United States Government which should be paid. A great many people, and among them many of the very best lawyers in the country, believe that the law was unconstitutional. The argument of ex-Justice John A. Campbell before the Supreme Court is very convincing. The Government of the United States is one which proceeds in its civil operations according to law, and it never was intended to be administered in any of its departments otherwise. Your committee think the question of sufficient importance to provide a means by which the Supreme Court may determine the question of constitutionality and thereby forever set at rest the question as to whether this large sum collected as taxes was rightfully or wrongfully collected. The bill provides for opening the Court of Claims to those who paid the tax until a case is made and appealed to the Supreme Court, and then for a stay of proceedings until that court decides the question; and should the court hold the acts to be unconstitutional it allows one year thereafter to all persons interested to bring their suits in said Court of Claims. On the contrary, if the law is sustained, that would put an end to all these claims.

"Your committee, therefore, believing it just, report said bill favorably to the House and recommend its passage."

This committee is firmly of the opinion that this money should be refunded by the Government of the United States to the people who paid these taxes. We believe that any impartial, conscientious man who will take the time to examine the record and the law must come to the conclusion that the four acts of Congress mentioned were illegal, unconstitutional, and void, and that after a lapse of more than 50 years surely the principal, without interest, should be refunded, all of which is respectfully submitted.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. WALSH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6309) to regulate pawnbrokers and their business in the District of Columbia, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. BLANTON, indefinitely, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Tuesday, March 14, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

A bill (S. 3284) granting an appropriation for the acquirement of a site and the erection thereon of a new marine hospital at San Francisco, Calif.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. NORBECK:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 176) for the relief of Capt. Harry G. Weaver, United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FRANCE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 177) to authorize the President of the United States to send a commission to Russia and to invite a Russian commission to the United States, to hold informal conversations with the de facto government of Russia for the purpose of arriving at a basis of understanding between the United States and Russia (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 227) extending the term of the National Screw Thread Commission for a period of five years from March 21, 1922, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

FOUR-POWER TREATY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole and in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty submitted by the President of the United States between the United States, the British Empire, France, and Japan, relating to their insular possessions and insular dominions in the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I regret that the work before the Committee on Finance has been such as to deprive me of the opportunity of taking an active part in the consideration of the several treaties which grew out of the Disarmament Conference.

I have been unable so far to present my views either before the Foreign Relations Committee or on the floor of the Senate. The brief statement which I shall make to-day will be directed to one general phase of all the treaties, namely, their value in maintaining international accord in Pacific and Asiatic waters and through that accord blazing the pathway for general world peace and amity.

Considerable debate seems to have arisen over the first declaration of the treaty now under consideration, the second clause of which provides:

> If there should develop between any of the high contracting parties a controversy arising out of any Pacific question and involving their said rights which is not satisfactorily settled by diplomacy and is likely to affect the harmonious accord now happily subsisting between them, they shall invite the other high contracting parties to a joint conference to which the whole subject will be referred for consideration and adjustment.

I confess, Mr. President, that I can scarcely imagine how anyone could read into that clause a declaration that we were to interfere by force or could be led into such interference, either directly or indirectly. Nevertheless, I asked that my vote be recorded in the Committee on Foreign Relations in favor of the resolution prepared by the chairman of the committee, not because I considered it was at all necessary, but because there were some who felt that it should be inserted and might possibly keep us out of future trouble. Therefore I will vote for that reservation for the purposes indicated.

Mr. President, the Disarmament Conference in its effective results surpassed my fondest expectations. It not only puts a stop to the ruinous race for naval supremacy, which has been sapping the very life of the greater nations of the earth, but in addition to this most beneficent result it provides for a vast reduction in the tonnage of present naval armaments by an agreed scrapping of many war vessels, thereby reducing the heavy cost of present maintenance.

For all this the tax-ridden world owes a debt of gratitude beyond measure to the President of the United States; the Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes; to Senators Lodge and Underwood; and Mr. Root.

From the time that Secretary Hughes, with an audacity which startled Old World diplomacy, declared just what the United States would do in the reduction of the American Navy by the scrapping of many vessels of war and cessation of all work on our Navy building program, and challenged each nation to show its good faith and purpose by following that example—from that moment the applauding world looked for results, and its expectations have been splendidly fulfilled.

But, Mr. President, I do not believe the people of the United States ever had any conception of the difficulties that had to be smoothed out and settled before this achievement could be consummated. I do not believe we shall ever fully realize the delicacy of some of the situations which our delegation had to meet.

The wounds of the greatest conflict the world has ever witnessed were still unhealed. The agony of battle was still in the hearts of the people of each nation so lately emerged from that contest. Out of placid skies had burst a lurid flame which had scorched the whole world. Powerful nations had been almost literally wiped off the face of the earth. The spectacle of death and devastation and bankruptcy still haunted the minds of those charged with the future destiny of their respective countries. Those nations which had stood the brunt of conflict for years and which, in the light of new instrumentalities of destruction, realized their own vulnerability, were nervously alert, centering their every thought on future defense and safety. Those nations approached the conference eager, yet timid and fearful lest by any error of judgment their capacity for self-defense might be weakened.

Not even the brave words of Secretary Hughes could at once transform this apprehension and fear into that international assurance and amity so necessary to a successful termination of the great disarmament project.

This was the situation and this the delicate work imposed upon the American delegation, and the treaties before us are the fruition of their efforts so ably and well performed.

But, Mr. President, the mere scrapping of ships, the mere cessation of great naval programs, the 10-year holiday in ship construction—all these visible results in decreased taxation, in releasing the energies of hundreds of thousands of men and billions of dollars hitherto spent on engines of death and hatred, and dedicating those earnings and that capital to the upbuilding of a shattered world—great as are all these, they are nevertheless insignificant compared with that invisible force, that world conscience which found its birth and expression in the coming together of these nations, war wounded and weary, to devise some way to avert another such world calamity.

The real, the vastly more important achievement is that the potential power of human conscience, the sense of justice and right, are assured their full and free expression in the clear light of a public understanding of every international dispute. If clouds of distrust ever appear, these nations agree with each other that they will all consult together, just as they have done in the Disarmament Conference, and such consultation will mean in the future, as it has meant in this conference, the dispelling of fear and suspicion and the assurance of good will and amity.

From the standpoint of disarmament alone, these several treaties may not mean much for world peace. In their broader contemplation there is something of human weakness, an innate ridiculousness in their provisions. If two factions engaged in feudal warfare—and such a condition still exists to some extent in our mountainous regions—should meet and solemnly agree that no man should carry more than six revolvers or maintain on his premises more than five repeating rifles, we can imagine the spirit of acrimony which would color the press reports of such an arrangement. Recognizing that in a civilized community the only legitimate use for arms of this character is self-defense or to guard against robbers and burglars, we could not refrain from suggesting to these factions that they meet again and conclude a more sensible agreement to dispense with all suspicion-breeding firearms except such as are properly and legitimately necessary.

So we might with equal justice ask these great nations, Why not reduce your navies to just what may be necessary to defend yourselves and for your police protection?

But, Mr. President, we can not expect a world that has thought war and dreamed war for centuries and which came out of this late conflict war mad to become lucid all at once. It is encouraging, however, to know that these agreements lead toward world sanity. The fact that the feudists have met and talked over their fears and suspicions, the fact that each has insisted that he has no desire to destroy the other but that his warlike proclivities were animated solely by the universal principle of self-defense, all this will bring them to a better understanding and from that better understanding will develop a trust which will finally end in cemented friendship.

So, Mr. President, the Washington conference has breathed the living soul of peace into the physical bodies of these disarmament treaties. It has prepared the soil and has planted the seed of international right and justice which, if followed by bringing other great powers into the fold, will ripen into a harvest of world peace.

The Versailles treaty, with its League of Nations, was top-heavy and required many reservations before it would be made acceptable to this country. When such reservations were adopted by the Senate then the sponsors of that treaty refused to ratify it as amended.

The treaties now before the Senate contain all that I contended for as of real value in the late Versailles treaty with none of its dangers which had to be eliminated. They contain everything that is necessary to prevent war among the signatory powers. They invite other nations of the world, like the still powerful German Empire, to become parties to the agreement.

These treaties will be ratified, and I hope to live to see the day when the principles enunciated in them shall be written into a compact that shall include all the great nations of the world.

Mr. President, long before the Versailles treaty was sent to the Senate, and while the treaty was in process of construction, I took occasion to express my views, which I hoped would be inserted in that treaty, and which, I thought, so far as an international agreement was concerned, should be the limit of our contractual obligations. The thought then in my mind is reflected in the treaties presented by the Disarmament Conference.

I proposed at that time that all the great nations of the world, including Germany, Austria, Russia, and other powers, should simply enter into an agreement with each other that they would respect the territorial integrity and the political independence of every other country; that none of them would make a war of aggression against any of the others; that if disputes should arise which they could not settle through the channels of diplomacy, they would consult together; that if the dispute should be of such nature that they could agree to settle it through arbitration, they would do so; that if it were not an arbitrable question, they would at least agree to submit it for an investigation and a report, and to give that report full publicity to the world before they should resort to arms, to the end that the people of each country and the world would know which country was in the wrong; and that all would consult together for the purpose of securing a settlement of the difficulty. That is as far as we ever need to go. There is no necessity of and should be no promise or agreement to support any contention by arms or otherwise. A nation may sometimes break its word with another nation, but it will not break its word with all the other great nations of the world. It will not stand dishonored before all nations.

Mr. President, we have here in these treaties an association of nations for the maintenance of peace in the Pacific. Is it not an opportune time to ask the President and the administration, What has become of the general association of nations for the peace of the world? When the Versailles treaty was before the Senate the Committee on Foreign Relations by appropriate reservations amended the Wilson League of Nations compact, eliminating from it all promises of force to defend any other nation from assault, and reduced that compact to a mere promise to refrain from a war of conquest and to consult together whenever serious international difficulties should arise. The then President and his administration refused to accept those reservations and the treaty failed. But, Mr. President, the Members of the Senate and the public generally, no matter how wide their differences on the Versailles treaty, all agreed that some step should be taken through some kind of international agreement to prevent another such world conflict.

Therefore, the Republican Party in its platform met this sentiment for some kind of international world agreement when it declared:

> The Republican Party stands for agreement among the nations to preserve the peace of the world. We believe that such an international association must be based upon international justice and must provide methods which shall maintain the rule of public right by the development of law and the decision of impartial courts, and which shall secure instant and general international conference whenever peace shall be threatened by political action, so that the nations pledged to do and insist upon what is just and fair may exercise their influence and power for the prevention of war.

That declaration did not mean that we should enter into an association with just those nations with whom we had been allied in war. It meant an association with all the great nations, with our late enemies as well as with our late allies. It meant an association with Germany and Austria, as well as with France and Great Britain. An association with a portion of them only would be a trouble breeder rather than a peace assurance.

What the world is wanting to-day is the same assurance in Europe that these treaties give to the Far East. France still fears Germany and the bolshevism of Russia. She still maintains a large standing army. Bring Germany, France, Russia, Great Britain, Italy, and the United States into just such a compact as is written in these treaties and the armies of France will dissolve, her soldiers will be producing articles of commerce and the necessities of life to trade for commodities which the erstwhile soldiers of Germany are now producing, and this return to productivity and normal commerce which the world is praying for will be speedily quickened into renewed life.

The Senator from Massachusetts, in his interpretation of these treaties and in his exposition of their purposes, everywhere stressed their importance as peace-assuring compacts in the Pacific and among the signatory powers. I agree most heartily with his conclusion, but I ask the question, Why should we not proceed immediately to bring about such a compact with all the nations of Continental Europe?

Just prior to the war we entered into separate agreements with each of 31 different Governments—agreements which contained similar articles for consultation, investigation, and report upon every international dispute which could not be settled by diplomacy. We asked Germany to join with us in a like treaty. I am informed that she declined our proffer, giving as her reason therefor that while she had no objection to such a treaty with us, if she made it with us she could not consistently refuse to enter into like agreements with nations of Europe, and she did not desire to do this.

But, Mr. President, that was military and aristocratic Germany. The German people were never consulted as to whether they should enter into such a treaty. Those people have now assumed control of the Government, and I am certain that they are as peace loving as any people and would to-day welcome a compact with us and with all the important nations which would allay all suspicions of France or of any other country, and which would leave them free to contest in the world for commercial equality or supremacy.

Senator LODGE, in his address on the four-power treaty delivered a few days ago, declares:

> It was our earnest hope that in a portion of the earth's surface at least we could do something to substitute the assurance of peace for the arrangements and calculations of war, and in so doing keep clear of all alliances of any sort which are in their very nature ultimate breeders of war and which always have hidden behind them penalties and force.

Mr. President, is it not pertinent here to ask: Why should not that earnest hope for the assurance of peace in this portion of the earth's surface be expanded to cover Europe as well, a section of the world where even the suspicion of a future war is more disastrous to world progress and welfare?

Again, he says:

> We hope and believe that agreements resting on the good faith, the honest purpose, and the highest aspirations of nations and peoples, carried out as they have been here, will have a permanent and lasting effect.

I agree with every word of that sentence. I have no doubt in the world of its permanent and lasting effect in the regions of the Pacific, and because I believe it I want to extend those principles to other countries.

Again, he says:

> But if we are right in thinking that men and women alike have learned the lesson of the war, then much can be accomplished by the agreements reached in Washington, and the door will stand open for further attempts to breed a larger kindliness and a more forbearing spirit among the nations of the earth, and in this way help us to take further and ever more assured and steady steps in the same direction.

But, Mr. President, is not now the most propitious time to take these further steps, to do just what we assured the country we would do and just what President Harding in his speech of acceptance declared we should immediately proceed to do?

Mr. President, I am supporting these treaties not only because of their limitation of armaments but more particularly because they contain these elements of a great international agreement which I hope will some day be consummated.

Everywhere in them are contained two fundamental principles necessary for world peace: First, a recognition of the right of every nation to live and work out its own destiny and an agreement that its independence and complete sovereignty will at all times be respected; second, an agreement that in case of misunderstanding the nations will consult together and endeavor to settle every matter of difference.

Taking the first treaty presented to the Senate by this conference—the treaty between the United States, the British Empire, France, and Japan, relating to their insular possessions and dominions in the Pacific Ocean—we have this agreement:

> Each of the contracting parties agrees to respect the rights of the other.

That is a very simple phrase, but it is full of force and full of meaning. It does not agree to enter into war to defend those rights. It simply says that it will commit no wrong against the other parties.

These contracting parties further agree that if they are unable to settle any dispute arising out of these Pacific questions by diplomacy, all of the contracting parties shall meet in joint conference for their consideration for the purpose of adjustment.

That, Mr. President, is all we need to secure peace among those powers which might be endangered by any contingency arising in that section of the world.

In the nine-power treaty relating to China, by article 1, the contracting powers other than China agree—> to respect the sovereignty, the independence, and the territorial and administrative integrity of China.

And by article 7—

> The contracting powers agree that whenever a situation arises which, in the opinion of any one of them, involves the application of the stipulations of the present treaty, and renders desirable discussion of such application, there shall be full and frank communication between the contracting powers concerned.

So, Mr. President, we everywhere find in all of these treaties the essential agreements which I hold to be necessary for general world peace, and all that is necessary, according to my views.

If these treaties mark a vast forward step in international understanding among those nations which border upon and which have possessions within the Pacific, why should we not bring within the fold the great nations of Continental Europe? Why should we stop the good work? Why should we make no attempt to extend to all great nations the principles agreed to with reference to humane rules of warfare, with reference to disarmament, and with reference to the pledge to recognize at all times the political and administrative integrity of other nations, and, above all, the principle of open discussion of all disputes before resorting to the arbitrament of arms? Why should these principles be bounded by the shores of the Pacific Ocean only?

Mr. President, I am looking forward to a real assurance of world peace. No man of heart and conscience can but shudder at the mere contemplation of another such devastating war. Centuries will be required to rid ourselves of its burden of debt.

But, Mr. President, there are two great powers in the world which must be taken into consideration in any matter affecting world peace—Germany and Russia. We are now at peace with Germany, with Austria, and with Russia. We have shown our good will toward the latter by pouring out our treasure to aid the destitute. We should now extend the hand of friendship to our late foes, Germany and Austria. We should ask them immediately to join with us in these declarations of principles. We should ask them to join with us in an agreement that they will not war on each other until every effort has been made to maintain peace, and that this effort shall be made through the joint agreement that all will meet together and discuss matters of difference before engaging in any war.

It may be that Russia has not at the present time a government sufficiently stable for us to enter into any agreement with her. That, however, can not be said of Germany. I do not claim, Mr. President, to be a prophet; but anyone who knows the German people and their ability to organize and maintain a stable government that will meet every exigency must be blind if he fails to see that of all the European nations which engaged in the late conflict Germany will be the very first to resume her old place in the commercial affairs of the world. Outside of the reparation she does not owe one dollar except her indebtedness to her own people. She surrendered her antiquated ships to her victors, but is to-day building an immense line of small, cheaply operated, economic vessels for her foreign commerce. Her people are working longer hours and with greater efficiency than the people of any other nation of the earth. She has learned her lesson of life through her distress. Great Britain and France, and to a certain extent the United States, have their lessons yet to learn—the lesson of increased productivity, the lesson of greater economy in production, in order to compete with the markets of the world.

Germany has no navies and no armies to maintain. All her man force and all her woman force and much of her child force are dedicated to the struggle for commercial supremacy. In less than five years from to-day she will, as she did in 1914, lead the world in her foreign commerce.

Let us, therefore, forget the animosities of the late strife. We as a Nation are of the blood and bone of each of these countries, friend and foe alike. Let us take the initial step, as we did in the Disarmament Conference, and invite these Governments, now no longer allies and no longer foes, to join us in a union of declared principles, not backed by any force or any promise of force, but resting entirely upon the sacred national honor of each Government, supported by an informed public conscience that will not brook any international injustice.

Mr. President, I wish to include as a part of these remarks the form of an international compact embodying the principles which I have declared should be the standard of international conduct, and which provides for the settlement of all international misunderstandings without surrendering one atom of independent sovereignty or invoking any force other than that of national righteousness and national honor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

PROPOSED ASSOCIATION OF PRINCIPAL NATIONS OF THE WORLD FOR THE PRESERVATION OF PEACE.

The United States of America, the British Empire, France, Italy, Germany, Austria, Spain, Japan, and Russia—when she shall have established a stable government—realizing the appalling loss of life, the enormous devastation, the stupendous burden of indebtedness, and other incalculable evils occasioned by the late World War, and recognizing the vast commercial relations among the several nations of the world and their dependence upon each other, and that any war halting or destroying international communication becomes of itself a matter of vital concern to all the peoples and nations of the world, for the purpose of preventing the recurrence of another such war and substituting therefor the peaceful settlement of all international differences and disputes, hereby join in this solemn compact and enter into this agreement each with all of the others:

1. They declare it to be a fundamental principle of international law that the same code of ethics and morality which governs individuals in their relations to each other in nations of the highest enlightenment within their own domains shall govern nations in all their international relations.

2. That each nation of the world has the right to live and work out its own destiny, free from threatened or impending aggression by any more powerful nation.

3. That wars of aggression are not only a crime against the defendant country but also a most gross offense against civilization and against every other country which of necessity must pay the penalty caused by war's carnage, devastation, and the disruption of the world's commerce and trade.

4. To establish and perpetuate these principles and to substitute the rule of reason and justice for the rule of force in the settlement of international differences and disputes, the several nations parties to this compact solemnly agree, each with all the others, that each and all will faithfully adhere to the principles aforesaid in all their relations toward and with each other and all civilized States.

5. They further solemnly agree that in case of any dispute between any of the members signatory to this compact which fails of settlement through the ordinary channels of diplomacy they will confer together, either through an international council or court to be agreed upon, and will use their most earnest endeavors to bring about an amicable settlement of such dispute and prevent armed conflict.

6. They further agree that either through such aforesaid council or court they will formulate a code of international law which, when approved by the several nations of this compact in the manner provided by the constitution or usage of such nations, shall become the law of nations and govern the parties to this compact in their relations to and with each other.

7. They shall in such code consider and determine as nearly as possible what are justiciable and what are nonjusticiable questions. Such questions as are unanimously decided to be nonjusticiable shall, for the purpose of this compact, be so deemed by the parties thereto. When the determination of such question is not unanimously agreed to, each nation must for itself determine such fact.

8. The said parties to this compact further solemnly agree that in case of any dispute between any two or more of them, which dispute they are unable to settle through ordinary diplomatic channels, they will proceed as follows:

(a) If the question involved is justiciable they will submit the matter in dispute to arbitration, either to arbitrators to be agreed upon by the disputants, or to such international court as may have been or may be established to hear and determine international disputes. And they declare they will faithfully abide by the decision of such arbitral board or court.

(b) If the question involved is not included within the list of questions as aforesaid determined to be nonjusticiable, and either or both of the parties to the dispute claim the same to be nonjusticiable, the said parties will submit the matter in dispute either to such court or to a council composed of one delegate from each of the nations to this compact for investigation and report.

(c) In all cases of investigation and report the court or council, as the case may be, making the investigation shall invite the parties to the dispute to present their respective cases, and shall within six months after the conclusion of hearings thereon make its report to the disputants and to other nations, parties to this compact, containing its findings of fact, which shall be sufficiently full and explanatory to give the said disputants a clear understanding of the question involved, together with its recommendations for a just and amicable settlement of the dispute.

9. And each of said nations agrees that it not only will permit, but will assist in, the full publicity of such findings and recommendations to its people.

10. Each of the aforesaid nations further agrees with all the others that during the period of investigation aforesaid, and for a period of six months after the publication of such findings and recommendations, it will not declare or commit any act of war against any other party to the dispute, and that during such time it will advise with the other nations, parties to this compact, and use its best endeavors in conjunction with such nations to bring about an amicable settlement of the dispute.

11. Each of the aforesaid nations further agrees that it will enact such legislation, make such appointments as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of the compact, and bear its proportionate share of the expenses incident thereto.

12. Other sovereign nations of stable government and capable of fulfilling all their international obligations may, by unanimous consent of the other members of this compact, become members thereof upon agreeing to all the principles and obligations herein set forth. Such new membership shall be effectuated by action of the several nations in the same manner as the adoption of this compact.

13. This compact shall become effective when approved by the several nations, parties thereto, in a manner provided by the constitution or usage of such nations in the ratification of international treaties. (If deemed best that the nations, parties to the Versailles treaty, should continue their membership therein there should be added the following:)

14. Certain nations other than the United States who are parties to this compact, having previously agreed under the treaty of Versailles to a settlement of their international disputes by following the course specified in article 12 of said treaty, such nations, parties to this compact, may, if they so elect, use the instrumentalities of said treaty of Versailles for the settlement of their differences. In case of such election the United States, not being a party to such treaty and not being directly interested in such dispute, will take no part.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I shall endeavor to analyze the provisions of the pending treaty with special reference to the obligations which will be incurred by the United States if ratified, but before doing so I wish to make some general observations regarding the effect of failure to ratify the treaty.

While we have five other treaties pending, growing out of the Washington conference, which must be acted upon separately, nevertheless most of these treaties are to a large degree dependent upon each other, and a failure to ratify the treaty now under consideration may mean a failure of all the treaties and especially the failure of the treaty limiting naval armament.

I have heard Senators say the rejection of the pending treaty can not affect the naval armament treaty, for the ratification of that treaty is assured by the Senate. But it must be remembered that to make any of these treaties effective ratification must be had by the other parties to the treaty as well as ourselves, and if we reject the treaty now before us there is no assurance that such action will not form the basis for rejection of the limitation of naval armament treaty by some of the other powers. We know that France is not enthusiastic as to that treaty, and we can rest assured that the military party in Japan would not complain if all the treaties growing out of the Washington conference were rejected, for they do restrict and restrain her domination of the Orient. If the Nation that called the Washington conference and set the high standard for its deliberations shall be the first to reject one of the treaties, then there need be no surprise if other treaties are rejected by other powers and the work of the Washington conference be destroyed.

Mr. KING. Would it interrupt the Senator if I asked him a question at this point?

Mr. LENROOT. Not at all.

Mr. KING. The Senator will recall that in the call made by the President of the United States for the Washington conference, as I remember its phraseology, there was no reference to a quadruple alliance or to a four-power pact or treaty of the character which is now under consideration, and when the President addressed the conference there was no suggestion that that was a part of the agenda or would be a matter of consideration by the conference.

The Senator will also recall that Secretary Hughes, in his admirable presentation of the matter, did not allude to a four-power pact, and when he laid down the work of the conference and challenged attention to the limitation of armament, and offered the program to the conference, all the delegates from foreign countries, as well as our own, in so far as I remember their utterances, and the public generally, regarded that the program thus announced, to wit, the limitation of armament, as provided in the program announced by Secretary Hughes, was a remarkable achievement, and at the conclusion of that meeting, and upon subsequent days, before there was any talk of a four-power pact. the country seemed to be entirely satisfied with that program, and announced that the conference was a success. How, in the light of that, can the Senator contend that this afterthought is essential to the completion of the work of the conference and is indispensable to its success?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, while, of course, there was no reference by Mr. Hughes to this treaty, or any proposal that there be a four-power treaty, the Senator will admit that one of the subjects before that conference was a consideration of the problems in the region of the Pacific, and this is one of them, which has been settled through an understanding that made much more possible, in my judgment, the acceptance of the program for naval limitation.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have heard statements made on the floor of the Senate about a dozen times similar to the one made by the Senator from Utah, as to why this treaty was not in the agenda. The questions of the Far East were mentioned. Does the Senator from Utah think that the Secretary of State of this country would be apt to state that the subject to be considered in this conference was the termination of the Anglo-Japanese alliance?

Mr. KING. I shall not take the time to answer the Senator, but let me make the observation that if that interrogatory has been propounded I have not heard it, and if it has been propounded it has not been answered. I am sure the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] in his speech did not answer it. He has not answered it now, and he can not answer it.

I repeat, the call of the President did not contemplate a four-power pact, and the work of the conference, as announced by the great Secretary of State at that first meeting, did not contemplate a four-power pact. I admit there is some relation between the two subjects, but the questions which were submitted in the conference were independent of the other, and the four-power pact is in no wise essential to the disposition of those other questions.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not question that that is the Senator's opinion, but the Senator can not say that it is the opinion of other parties to this treaty. The point I am making is not that the rejection of this treaty may lead to the rejection of the naval limitation treaty by the Senate, but that it may lead to the rejection of that treaty by other parties to the treaty.

So grave is this danger that if this treaty is rejected I believe President Harding, if he should receive information that other treaties would be rejected by other powers, should consider the withdrawing of all the other treaties transmitted to the Senate and inform the other parties to the treaties that further action upon them will be postponed until the next Congress convenes, so that the country at the elections next November will have the opportunity in the election of Senators whose terms are expiring to express itself upon this important issue.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator says that the four-power treaty is so inseparably connected with the other treaties——

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator must not misquote me. I said no such thing. What I did say was that——

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will permit me to state my understanding of his statement, I will ask him the question I intended to put.

Mr. LENROOT. I want the Senator to ask a question based upon the statement I made, and not upon one I did not make. I stated that they were so connected that the defeat of this treaty might result in the rejection of the naval limitation treaty by some of the other powers.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator from Wisconsin had done me the courtesy to hear my question, he would have seen that that was exactly the premise I expected to lay, that the four-power treaty is so related to the other work of the conference that its rejection by the Senate of the United States would probably result in the rejection of other treaties by other powers parties to the four-power pact. What other power does the Senator think, for instance, would reject the arms limitation treaty if the Senate of the United States rejects the four-power pact?

Mr. LENROOT. I have just stated that I did not think—and the Senator does not think—that France is enthusiastic over the naval limitation treaty. The Senator must be familiar with what occurred with reference to that matter. I am not sure but that the military party in Japan would welcome its rejection. I am not speaking of the Government of Japan, but there is a party in Japan, as the Senator well knows, that does not desire any such treaty, or any of the treaties relating to Japan which are now pending before the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator permit me to make another statement with respect to the Senator's observations concerning France?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. It seems now to be well known that France sought an opportunity to become a party to the four-power pact; that at first there was objection to her admission by Great Britain and Japan, and that after Great Britain and Japan had consented to the admission of France to the four-power treaty then a draft of the agreement was prepared by the Secretary of State of the United States. Why does the Senator from Wisconsin think that France, in view of the fact that she sought admission to this treaty, would reject the arms limitation treaty if the pending treaty is rejected by the Senate?

Mr. LENROOT. I am not going into the question of the situation with reference to France and her final agreement and the limitations placed upon her navy in the naval armament treaty. The Senator is quite as familiar with that as I am. All I am saying with reference to France is that France is not enthusiastic over that treaty. Does the Senator think that France is enthusiastic over it? Does the Senator think that France does not believe to-day that while her representatives have assented to it she should have been permitted a larger ratio for her navy than is permitted in the naval armament treaty?

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will yield, I only want to call attention to what the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] said about the omission of the far eastern question. It is really of no moment. If the Senator will look at the agenda relating to China, he will find that Shantung is not mentioned.

The reason why Shantung was not mentioned in the agenda was because it was the subject of a treaty between two other powers. At the same time we had hopes of bringing about the arrangement, as we did. At the same time we did not begin by mentioning a treaty between two other parties to which we were not a party as a subject of general conference.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the only point I am making is that if this treaty be rejected there is no assurance that the other parties to the naval limitation treaty will ratify that treaty. That is the only point I am making.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, what is the assurance that they will ratify it even if this treaty be ratified? How can the Senator assure the Senate that if we ratify the four-power pact other nations will ratify all the other treaties which have been negotiated?

Mr. LENROOT. At least, if the Senate does not reject one of the treaties which has been agreed upon that will not furnish a reason to any other power for rejecting some other treaty.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SPENCER. The intimate association between the four-power treaty and the disarmament treaty, which the Senator from Wisconsin has so clearly announced, is illustrated by the following sentence which opened the report of the American delegation, and I venture, with the Senator's consent—for there are only two of them—to insert them in the RECORD here. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] seemed to have some doubt as to whether there was any connection between the four-power treaty and the disarmament treaty, or as to whether the four-power treaty had ever been in the contemplation of the Department of State or of this Nation when this conference was called. When the President called the original conference this is the reference which the report of the American delegation makes to it:

> On July 8, 1921, by direction of the President, the Department of State addressed an informal inquiry to the group of powers known as the principal allied and associated powers—that is, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan—to ascertain whether it would be agreeable to them to take part in a conference on the subject of the limitation of armament, to be held in Washington at a time to be mutually agreed upon. In making this inquiry it was stated to be manifest that the question of the limitation of armament had a close relation to Pacific and far eastern problems, and the President suggested that the powers especially interested in these problems should undertake, in connection with the conference, the consideration of all matters bearing upon their solution with a view to reaching a common understanding with respect to principles and policies in the Far East.

Then comes this four-power treaty, opening in its preamble with the statement that it has been agreed to "with a view to the preservation of the general peace and the maintenance" of the rights of the signatory powers "in relation to their insular possessions and insular dominions in the region of the Pacific Ocean."

It would seem as if the four-power treaty was clearly in the contemplation of those who originally caused this conference to be called.

Mr. LENROOT. To get back to the thread of my remarks, I had suggested that if this four-power treaty was rejected by the Senate, and the President should receive information that by reason of that rejection some of the other parties to the treaty would reject some of the other treaties, especially the naval limitation treaty, in that case the President would be abundantly justified in withdrawing all of the treaties which are now before the Senate.

Whether the President would take this course, I do not know, but if he believed that rejection of the four-power treaty by the United States would result in the rejection of the limitation of armament treaty by other powers, he would be abundantly justified in taking that course.

And may I say at this point that while I am anxious for the ratification of this treaty, if I were considering partisan advantage only for the Republican Party, I would welcome its rejection by the Democratic minority. I confess that at the present moment there may be some foundation for the optimism of our Democratic friends that they will make gains in the next election, but if this treaty be rejected I predict that no Democrat indorsing that action will be elected to the Senate in any Northern State. If this treaty be rejected, the Republican majority next November will be equal to that which it had in November, 1920.

But, Mr. President, anxious as I am for Republican success, I hope this and all the other pending treaties will be ratified. World consequences of rejection are too important to permit political advantage to control us in their consideration. That this treaty will be ratified either now or a year from now I have not the slightest doubt, unless other parties to it shall justify destroying the work of the Washington conference by the action taken by this Senate. I wonder if Senators realize what the destruction of the work of the Washington conference would mean. It would probably sooner or later mean war—war that would inevitably involve the United States. No conference looking to the maintenance of peace would be possible during this generation. Friendly understandings would be replaced by hate and suspicion. The race for naval and land armament will continue and eminent Senators who plead so eloquently for isolation and peace would find that in the isolation they have produced they have sown the seeds of war, for we must with that isolation become either as pacifist as China, or ready to fight at a moment's notice, and as we have the wealth and resources to outlast any other nation, the nations that can not so compete singly will inevitably form alliances that will be a constant menace to us.

May I say here, Mr. President, that if the understanding which has been reached in this four-power treaty alone will aid in the maintenance of peace in the future because at least four nations shall agree upon this understanding in the Pacific, nations which are potential enemies—and I shall refer to that a little later—then we may hope that other nations may make like regional understandings, and we may hope that the nations of Europe, those who were so lately enemies, may enter into like understandings with agreements such as are contained in this treaty, and having set the example here we have pointed the way for those nations to follow, but if this treaty shall be rejected, what hope is there for such like understandings to be entered into in other parts of the world?

Mr. President, I have made these general observations because I believe that we should realize the far-reaching consequences of rejection of this treaty. I do not for a moment contend that because of these consequences the Senate should blindly accept these treaties, but I do insist that because of them every presumption should be in favor of ratification and the burden is upon the opposition to clearly establish that the welfare of America will be better served by rejection than ratification.

Much of the debate, Mr. President, upon this treaty has not been creditable to the Senate. Here is a treaty consisting of six short paragraphs, in four articles, couched in simple language, and much of the debate has centered around the burning issue of "Who wrote it." Some Senators seem to take the position that if it was written by Balfour or Baron Kato it is bad beyond argument, while if it was written by Hughes or Lodge or Underwood or Root there might be some virtue in it. Mr. President, what difference does it make who wrote it if its construction be clear and intent unmistakable? Let us judge the instrument by what it is, and pay no attention to the attempt to create prejudice against it by allegations of authorship. However, it is now established that it was written by Secretary Hughes, and I hope that the question of who wrote it is answered for all time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield to a question?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator think that it can be stated that the intent and meaning of this treaty are clear in view of the fact that the conference itself which negotiated the treaty adopted two declarations in the nature of reservations before the treaty was reported; that it became necessary to report a supplementary treaty explaining the provisions of this treaty in their relation to the mainland of Japan; and, furthermore, that the Committee on Foreign Relations found it necessary to report the additional reservation proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]? In view of the course which the matter has taken, does the Senator think that the meaning of the treaty is entirely clear?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am very much surprised that the Senator from Arkansas should draw any inference or attach any presumption to the fact that there was a declaration of construction or a reservation inserted or agreed to at the time the treaty was made. The Senator from Arkansas must know that that is a very common practice in making treaties. I have on my desk several illustrations where the United States has entered into treaties in connection with which at the same time as the signing of the treaty declarations have been made as to their intent and construction.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LENROOT. No; pardon me; I want to finish my answer. So in the making of this treaty, with reference to the reservation which was adopted simultaneously with it, one of two courses could have been pursued. In the first place, the language which is affected by the reservation is all inclusive; that would be the natural way to frame the language; and its framers then could have excluded that which they intended to exclude by the reservation, by a proviso, or they could have done so by a declaration simultaneously made. One would have been as simple as the other; but they adopted the latter course, which is not an uncommon practice.

Next, as to the reservation adopted by the Committee on Foreign Relations, I am not going into that now, because the whole purpose of the remarks I am now about to make is to attempt to demonstrate that there is no obligation of any kind upon the United States such as the reservation adopted by the Committee on Foreign Relations attempts to provide against; in other words, my position is that the treaty would mean exactly the same thing whether the reservation be adopted or rejected. I understand, however, Mr. President, that there were two or three members of the Foreign Relations Committee who did take the position that there might be some obligation upon the part of the United States for the use of force; that without the reservation the treaty might be regarded as an alliance. Both those questions I shall discuss as I proceed; but I undertake to say that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], who is one of the able Members of the Senate, at the time he offered the reservation, which was adopted by the committee, had not made a careful study of this treaty and all the circumstances attending it—for he could not have had the time to do so—which all Senators have since had the opportunity of making.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not think the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] took the position that the reservation was necessary, but he was afraid somebody in the world at some time might think it was necessary.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me, I desire to say that the Senator from Connecticut did not take any such position.

Mr. KELLOGG. I think the Senator from Idaho is mistaken.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Connecticut took the position that the reservation was necessary, and he contends now that it is necessary. If the Senator from Minnesota thinks that the Senator from Connecticut does not think it is necessary, then let us take it out and see what the Senator from Connecticut will do.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will say that the Senator from Connecticut admitted that there was no obliagtion on this country to go to war or to do anything else except to consult; that is the position of the Senator from Connecticut; but he thought some other country might take some other position at some other time.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, now that the Brandegee reservation has been made the subject of comment, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. As I understand him, the Senator from Wisconson seems to apprehend that the naval disarmament treaty will not be ratified if the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas shall be adopted. If the reservation offered by the Senator from Arkansas would imperil the naval disarmament treaty, can the Senator give us any information as to how the Brandegee reservation will affect the naval disarmament treaty?

Mr. LENROOT. There is a very clear distinction between the Brandegee reservation and the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, there is, but the Senator——

Mr. LENROOT. But in my view the treaty means exactly the same whether the Brandegee reservation be adopted or not. That is the answer.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that may be a correct statement, but in last Sunday's New York Times there is a statement by Mr. Tardieu to the effect that if the reservations which had been offered were adopted the treaty would be perfectly meaningless.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator refer to the Brandegee reservation?

Mr. BORAH. The reservations which had been offered. He did not designate any particular reservation.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Idaho does not hold any such view as that, does he?

Mr. BORAH. No; I do not. But I am speaking now of what the other countries may do with reference to the naval armament.

Mr. LENROOT. At this point, Mr. President, I might as well spend a moment to discuss the circumstance that throughout this debate there have been quoted here alleged opinions of citizens and statesmen of other countries as to the construction of this treaty. There are some Seantors who seem to be willing—not the Senator from Idaho—to have some other country construe a treaty for the United States. There is no one, Mr. President, who can construe this treaty for us except the United States of America. We will construe it for ourselves, and we will give it such construction——

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I will yield in a moment. We will give it such construction as was the plain intent, as I shall be able to show, when this treaty was signed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Now, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield for a question.

Mr. ROBINSON. If a controversy arises, as it has arisen in this case, as to the true interpretation and meaning of the treaty, and Senators differ as to the correct construction of its terms, it is not improper, it is not unfair, is it, to bring to the attention of the Senate the construction placed upon the treaty by the representatives of other nations as tending to show what is the correct legal construction? If the United States places its own construction on the treaty, each other nation, of course, will have the same right to determine its construction of the treaty. Is not that true?

Mr. LENROOT. It will, of course.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then, is it not desirable before entering into the treaty to reach an interpretation upon which all nations entering into the treaty will agree, if possible?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the point that I am making is that the Senator from Arkansas seems to be willing to quote the construction of some one in France or some one in Japan or some one in Great Britain, but he seems to ignore the construction given by the American delegates and accepted at the plenary conference. That is what I object to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield further to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Arkansas quoted the construction of Earl Grey and the construction of Prince Tokugawa in reply to an alleged construction as of date of March 10. I quoted their first construction, placed upon this instrument almost immediately after it had been negotiated and made public, for the purpose of showing their real interpretation of the instrument.

Mr. LENROOT. I think I shall be able to show——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, with the permission——

Mr. LENROOT. I want to say a word right there.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

Mr. LENROOT. I think I shall be able to demonstrate before I am through that the statement just made by the Senator from Arkansas is hardly accurate, for I think I shall be able to show that the head of the Japanese delegation clearly accepted the construction given to this treaty by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] at the time of the plenary conference.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senate will remember that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], in his address, read an interview purporting to have been given by Prince Tokugawa to the press on the 10th of March, 1922.

During the course of his remarks I asked the Senator from Alabama if he had seen the statement attributed to Prince Tokugawa in the Japan Advertiser of January 31, 1922, and he said that he had not done so. I asked that the statement be placed in the RECORD in connection with the remarks of the Senator from Alabama, and he refused permission. After the Senator from Alabama had yielded the floor I read into the RECORD the statement of Prince Tokugawa, published in the Japan Advertiser, of January 31, a month and 10 days prior to the statement read by the Senator from Alabama, showing that Prince Tokugawa said that in losing one ally Japan, by securing the four-power pact, had gained three allies. I also read the statement by Earl Grey, reported in the Manchester Guardian, showing that he construed the four-power pact at that time as an alliance, instead of a mere agreement to confer.

Now, as to the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin——

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I can not yield, of course, for a speech.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from Wisconsin permit me to reply briefly to one statement which he made respecting my refusal to take the interpretation of the American delegates?

Mr. LENROOT. I can not yield for a speech.

Mr. ROBINSON. The American delegates, with all due respect to them, have been inconsistent, in the construction which they have placed on this instrument. Both the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Alabama have said that this is the most important document which has been brought before the country in their lifetime. They have declared that the future peace of the world depends upon the ratification of this treaty, and then, in order to escape the responsibility for the obligations which we contend are involved in this treaty, they have said that it means nothing but an obligation to confer. I say, in view of that kind of interpretation, the Senate must place its own interpretation upon this treaty and not rely upon the interpretation placed upon it by those who represented us in the disarmament conference.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, what I said was that the American interpretation was placed before the plenary conference before the treaties were signed and that interpretation was accepted by every one of the other powers concerned. The Senator from Arkansas must have known that was what I was referring to, and my statement was limited to that fact.

Mr. President, I am very glad to yield for questions, but, without wishing to be discourteous, I must say that I can not yield for the interjection of speeches in my remarks.

Some Senators complain because they think it in conflict with the League of Nations, forgetting that this is exactly one of the regional understandings expressly permitted by the league covenant, and which it would have been very proper to enter into had we joined the League of Nations. I refer to article 21 which reads:

Nothing in this covenant shall be deemed to affect the validity of international engagements, such as treaties of arbitation or regional understandings like the Monroe Doctrine, for securing the maintenance of peace.

I now come, Mr. President, to an analysis of the rights and obligations imposed by the treaty before us.

The first paragraph of article 1 reads:

The high contracting parties agree as between themselves to respect their rights in relation to their insular possessions and insular dominions in the region of the Pacific Ocean.

By the supplemental treaty signed on February 6 the mainland of Japan is excluded. Concerning the effect of this and the circumstances surrounding it, I shall have something to say later in another connection. For the present I confine myself to the obligation in this paragraph as modified by the supplemental treaty referred to.

What is our obligation under this paragraph and what benefits do we receive under it? We obligate ourselves to respect the rights of the other three powers in relation to their possessions in the region of the Pacific. Does any Senator object to that? Will any Senator assert that we ought not to enter into such an obligation? Can we for a moment assume that at any time in the future the United States will have any desire to infringe upon the rights of the other three powers in the Pacific? Happily no Senator has yet had the temerity to criticize this obligation, and that is the only obligation imposed upon us by this paragraph. The next inquiry is what benefits do we receive from this paragraph? Under it Great Britain, France, and Japan agree to respect our rights in the Pacific, which means that for a period of at least 10 years our rights in the Philippines, Hawaii, and our other islands in the Pacific will be respected, and that, no matter what the circumstances of any of the other parties may be, if they be engaged in war with each other or with any other power, there can be no violation of our rights unless a solemn treaty shall again be treated as a "scrap of paper" by a great power. But, Mr. President, the consequences to Germany in regarding a solemn treaty as a "scrap of paper" have not been such as to encourage a repetition of this practice by any nation at any time in the future.

But it is said by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] that we have now treaties of peace and amity with these same powers under which this same obligation now exists. Granted; but the Senator forgets that those treaties may be lawfully terminated, usually upon one year's notice, while the pending treaty can not be terminated within 10 years. This distinction becomes important when we consider the questions still at issue between the United States and Japan covering Japanese immigration which could not properly come before the Washington conference.

So, Mr. President, this obligation to respect our rights in the Pacific for 10 years does have a definite, substantial value.

The next paragraph of article 1 reads:

If there should develop between any of the high contracting parties a controversy arising out of any Pacific question and involving their said rights which is not satisfactorily settled by diplomacy, and is likely to affect the harmonious accord now happily subsisting between them, they shall invite the other high contracting parties to a joint conference to which the whole subject will be referred for consideration and adjustment.

I do not understand that any Senator asserts that in this paragraph there is any hidden obligation for the use of force. On the contrary, by its very terms its object is to avoid the use of force and secure an amicable settlement of disputes involving rights covered by the treaty. It involves nothing more than the parties not involved in the dispute using their good offices in joint conference with the parties involved to effect a peaceful settlement of the dispute.

Some Senators contemptuously refer to this as a debating society—as a "talk fest"—out of which no good can come. But, Mr. President, the extending of good offices to nations involved in a dispute is well recognized in international law as being a most valuable aid to peace. It was the good offices of this Nation that put an end to the Russian-Japanese War, and I believe that the most effectual means to preserve the peace of the world are agreements exactly like that contained in this paragraph.

These conversations, which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] speaks so scornfully about, were frantically sought just before hostilities began in the World War, and denied by the Kaiser of Germany. Why did he refuse to enter such a conference? It was because he knew he could not defend the course he was taking with Austria, and if he entered the conference he would have had to agree to assist in preventing war or stand condemned by the judgment of the world.

But when the treaty of Versailles was before the Senate the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] entertained a different opinion of the value of good offices, for at that time he offered a reservation which reads as follows:

The United States does not assume any obligation under article 10, but will use its friendly offices, when requested so to do, under the provisions of article 10, in assisting to procure a just and peaceful settlement of territorial or political controversies between nations.

All that this paragraph of the treaty does is, in case of dispute between two of the parties in regard to their rights in the Pacific, the good offices of the other parties will be used to secure a peaceful settlement, and this being a conference, as has been pointed out by the Senator from Massachusetts, there can be no settlement or adjustment unless it is accepted by both of the parties to the dispute.

However, I understand that there is no serious contention that this paragraph injures the United States, especially with the reservation which was agreed to by the parties and which accompanies the treaty, that the controversies referred to in this paragraph shall not be taken to embrace questions which, according to principle of international law, lie exclusively within the domestic jurisdiction of the respective powers.

I therefore pass on to article 2, which reads as follows:

If the said rights are threatened by the aggressive action of any power, the high contracting parties shall communicate with one another fully and frankly in order to arrive at an understanding as to the most effective measures to be taken, jointly or separately, to meet the exigencies of the particular situation.

This is the article around which the contest here is waged. It is asserted by most of the opponents of the treaty that there is here hidden a moral obligation upon our part to go to war if the rights of any of the other three powers are threatened by the aggressive action of any other power. But nowhere in the language of the article can there be found any such obligation expressed or implied.

While I agree with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that we can not conceive of any power outside of the four parties to this treaty becoming strong enough within the next 10 years, or during the life of this treaty, to threaten the rights of these four powers in the Pacific, let us assume for the moment that there is such aggressive action by an outside power. Let us assume that the red army of Russia does drive the Japanese out of Siberia and sends an army across the ice, as suggested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], to Sakhalin. In the first place they would have to build 600 miles of railroad from Vladivostok to a point on the Strait of Tartary, where the soldiers could cross upon the ice, and even assuming this absurdity, when the red soldiers got to the island they would be in Russian territory, to which this treaty does not apply, but would have to march south between one and two hundred miles to get to Karafuto, which is included in this treaty, and remember there is no railroad upon the island.

Mr. President, to conjure up a menace to us by reason of the inclusion in the treaty of the southern portion of the island of Sakhalin shows the desperate stress the opposition is in to find reasons for opposing this treaty.

But, assuming that the red army does get there, what would happen under article 2 of this treaty? Japan would communicate the facts to the other three parties to the treaty, and undoubtedly would announce her intention of letting the red soldiers stay there until summer came, and they would then with their navy keep them there, for the northern part of Sakhalin has for generations been a Russian penal colony, and the entire population of the island outside of convicts is not more than 20,000.

But, Mr. President, for any Senator who voted for the League of Nations without reservations to suggest that this is a menace to the United States is beyond my comprehension; because, sir, if the League of Nations had been accepted as presented by President Wilson, and the red army did go to Sakhalin, there would not have been a conference. That would not have been the extent of the obligation. There would not have been an understanding to have been arrived at, but the United States, under its guaranty, would have been compelled to send its soldiers and its warships to the defense of Japan. How any Senator who was willing to enter into such an obligation under the League of Nations can hesitate because of any obligation under article 2 of this treaty is a matter for him to explain to the people of the United States.

But to return to the analysis of article 2. Assuming there could be a real case of threatened aggression within 10 years, and the party threatened communicates with us fully regarding the facts. We might first suggest our good offices as the best means to meet the exigencies of the situation. That declined or failing, we could suggest arbitration. If that is declined, we could agree that the party upon whom the aggression is made would be justified in resorting to war in defense of her rights and there our obligation would end without our becoming a party to the war.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] yesterday objected to article 2 because it did not provide for a conference of the outside powers. The Senator from Idaho admits that under his own construction, if there is an aggression by an outside power, our obligation would be fully met if we said to the party upon whom the aggression was made, "The way to reach an understanding, the way to meet the exigencies of this situation, is to invite that outside power into a conference." The Senator intimates that if that were done he would be willing to agree to this treaty. That course is exactly open, and the obligation of the United States would be fulfilled to the fullest extent if that suggestion were made by the United States and refused by the other party to the treaty upon whom the aggression was made.

But, Mr. President, assuming that the threatened aggression was of such a nature that we believed our own rights would later be threatened, that unless we should act jointly with the power upon whom the aggression is made that our own existence was in danger, then under this article it would be entirely proper for the President of the United States to lay before Congress the facts communicated to him, and Congress would decide whether in our own interest we should by force of arms come to the defense of the power upon whom the aggression is made. Congress would be entirely free and independent in its action, and, unlike the provisions of article 10 of the League of Nations, there would be no moral obligation of any sort to employ our Army or Navy in the defense of the power attacked.

Mr. President, there is no obligation to use force expressed in this article and there is none implied. But conceding for the sake of argument that the article is susceptible of two constructions, then we have the right to examine the circumstances surrounding the making of the treaty in order to ascertain its intent, for it must be admitted that if the intent is proven, and that intent is not contrary to the language of the contract, such construction will be given as will carry out the intent.

Upon this proposition the proof is overwhelming that there is no obligation anywhere in this treaty for the use of force. We have the statement of the draftsman of this treaty, Secretary Hughes, we have the construction placed upon it by Senator LODGE when he placed it before the plenary conference, and no word of dissent from his construction by any delegate present. In presenting the treaty to the plenary conference, Senator LODGE said:

> There is no provision for the use of force to carry out any of the terms of the agreement, and no military or naval sanction lurks anywhere in the background or under cover of these plain and direct clauses.

This construction was accepted by the heads of the delegations representing the powers concerned. Mr. Viviani, representing France, said:

> I assent without reticence and without reservation to everything implied in the agreement just read by Mr. LODGE, who has followed it up with an analysis at once so simple and so powerful.

He a moment later said:

> He [Mr. LODGE] has pointed out that when four great powers are determined that peace shall prevail in a given part of the world, the consent of these powers without provision for naval or military action is all that is needed to assure the preservation, the guaranty, and the protection of that peace.

Mr. Balfour, following Mr. Viviani, after paying a tribute to Senator LODGE and Mr. Viviani, said:

> So far as I am concerned, I have nothing to add to what they have said upon the general aspects of the treaty.

Prince Tokugawa, the head of the Japanese delegation, said it was unnecessary to add anything to what had already been said by Senator LODGE and Mr. Viviani and Mr. Balfour, but upon his return to Japan he was more definite in his construction of the treaty, for on March 10, in a speech which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has placed in the RECORD, he said:

> Critics of the treaty are trying to read into the very plain terms some moral pledge binding the nations to war as well as to peace, but that interpretation is too far-fetched to need repudiation.

I may say at this point with reference to the article from the Japanese Advertiser placed in the RECORD by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] that there is nothing in that report of Prince Tokugawa's views that is contrary to the views expressed by him on March 10. He did use, apparently, the word "allies," a word which he might well have used as indicating that in the future there would be none but friendly relations between Japan and the United States. Does the Senator from Arkansas accept that little word, used in that connection, as against his express declaration that the treaty was not susceptible of the construction that the Senator from Arkansas now endeavors to place upon it?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, since the Senator has asked me a question, will he permit me to make a reply?

Mr. LENROOT. I shall be glad to have the Senator answer the question.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Prince, in the statement that I read into the RECORD, congratulated the Japanese Empire on having through the four-power pact secured three allies instead of only one under the Anglo-Japanese alliance, and I reassert that it is a fair conclusion to be drawn from his statement that at that time he regarded this treaty as being an alliance.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, Prince Tokugawa, standing by his construction of the treaty that here was no obligation to use force, then chooses, because of the friendly relationships established by the treaty, to call us allies. That, of course, he can do; but the Senator will not contend that in the use of that language he was endeavoring to give to the treaty a construction contrary to the express construction that he gave to it on March 10.

Finally Secretary Hughes, who drafted the treaty, states in his letter to the Senator from Alabama that it was distinctly understood from the beginning of the negotiations—

> That this Government could enter into no alliance or make any commitment to the use of arms or which would inspire any sort of obligation as to its decisions in future contingencies.

Mr. President, in the face of this record how can any Senator assert that there is here any commitment to the use of force?

I want to remind the Senate that most of the Senators—not the Senator from Arkansas, but most of the Senators—who have thus far addressed the Senate construing this treaty as an obligation to use force, construing this treaty against the United States, are the very men who desire isolation for the United States, who object to the United States entering into any kind of contractual relations, and yet they are the ones who are giving to this treaty a construction which if their construction should prevail might involve the United States in war in the future.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. LENROOT. For a question.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator, of course, is familiar with the address by President Harding before the Senate when the treaties were presented to the Senate. Upon the question of construction of the true meaning of this treaty has the Senator's attention been called to this language on page 9 of Document No. 125, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, in which the President said:

> It is easy to believe, however, that such a conference of the four powers is a moral warning that an aggressive nation, giving affront to the four great powers ready to focus world opinion on a given controversy, would be embarking on a hazardous enterprise.

Does not the Senator construe that as meaning that any nation making aggression against one of the four powers would be taking aggressive action against all of them?

Mr. LENROOT. It means this—and I take it the President in that connection had in mind unprovoked aggression, concerning which I shall have something to say a little later—a clear violation of right; and, of course, it would serve as a warning. If here is some outlaw nation attempting to infringe upon the rights of sister nations, and four nations agree that they shall communicate fully and frankly with each other concerning that matter with a view to coming to an understanding as to what measures shall be taken to meet the exigencies of the particular situation, of course it will be a warning to that outlaw. I would not have it different.

But there are other circumstances supporting the construction that there is no obligation. It will be remembered that the treaty before us includes the mainland of Japan, which is excluded by the supplemental treaty pending. This inclusion, for reasons stated by them, was agreed to by the American delegation. They have said they saw no particular reason for excluding Japan, as there was no obligation to the use of force and no commitment except to respect the rights of the other parties and consult. But, if there had been the remotest idea that there was any commitment to the use of force, does anyone believe that Secretary Hughes, Senators Lodge and Underwood, and Mr. Root would have agreed that our Army and Navy should be used to protect the mainland of Japan with no obligation upon the part of Japan to come to the assistance of the United States if our home territory was attacked? To believe that these distinguished Americans would make any such agreement is unthinkable. This in itself is very strong proof that there could not have been in the minds of any of the American delegates any such obligation as is now claimed by the opponents of this treaty.

But there is another circumstance even more persuasive that there is no commitment to the use of force in the treaty.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask a question there? I do not know that I understood the Senator. Do I understand the Senator to say that it was never in the mind of the American delegation to include the homeland of Japan?

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no—to enter into any obligation to use force. In my judgment the treaty as originally drawn was not susceptible of any other construction than that the homeland of Japan was to be included.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, why was it included?

Mr. LENROOT. I, of course, would not undertake——

Mr. ROBINSON. There is no secrecy about it if there is any reason for it, is there?

Mr. LENROOT. I have not any secret.

Mr. ROBINSON. Japan did not want her homeland included; the people of the United States did not want it included, according to the statement of Secretary Hughes; and yet he included it. Now, why was that done?

Mr. LENROOT. I do not know why it was done, Mr. President. I have heard, as the Senator from Arkansas has heard, the reasons given for it by our delegation, that they considered it immaterial whether it was included or not, inasmuch as there was no obligation upon our part for the use of force, and that we would respect the homeland of Japan anyway, as we would respect the rights of others; but I think I can see a reason.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why did they go to the trouble of taking it out by a supplementary treaty? The President—with the Senator's permission for just a moment—evidently thought it was material, because he issued an interview declaring that there was no intention on the part of the framers of this treaty to include the main islands of Japan. Thereupon the Senator from Massachusetts and the other American delegates informed him that his construction of the treaty was wrong, and immediately the conference prepared and reported, contemporaneously with the four-power pact, a treaty construing it so as to make it clear that there was no intention to do what all of the delegates admitted was done in the first instance. Why did they take it out if it is so utterly immaterial?

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator doubt the word of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that Japan was the first to object?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have no disposition to question the veracity of any Senator. The Senator from Wisconsin has no right to ask me such a question, in my opinion. I asked him why the mainland was first included and then excluded; why the President treated it of so much materiality that he first declared it was not embraced within the four-power treaty, and, upon discovering that his interpretation was wrong, had the conference report a supplementary treaty excluding the main islands? Why was all that done if it was so utterly immaterial?

Mr. LENROOT. As I said, of course I know no more than does the Senator from Arkansas as to what was actually done. It has been related, and the Senator has had as full opportunity to learn of that as I; but I think I can see a reason why that was done. In the Pacific were Australia and New Zealand, both of them insular dominions. New Zealand and Australia desired the benefit of this treaty. They were insular dominions, great commonwealths, and I can see the embarrassment in excluding Japan in the first instance if Japan desired to be included when Australia was included.

Of course, that is based wholly upon the theory that there was no obligation in this treaty except to respect the rights of the other parties in case of controversy between them, to confer in case of aggression by one of the parties, to communicate fully and freely with each other in case of aggression by an outside power. That is the obligation. Of course, if there was any obligation in this instrument to use force, does the Senator from Arkansas think the Democratic leader in the Senate [Mr. UNDERWOOD], who was a delegate to that conference, would have been willing to include the mainland of Japan?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have repeatedly stated that I do not think the Senator ought to ask me questions the answers to which might involve a criticism of or reflection upon the motives or conduct of my associates, either on this side of the Chamber or the other side of the Chamber. I have no hesitancy in saying in reply, however, that I think the Democratic leader has made a very grave mistake in urging the Senate to advise and consent to this treaty in its present form.

If the Senator will yield to a further question, Secretary Hughes, in his letter to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], made no explanation whatever of the reason why the main islands of Japan were included in the first draft, which he said he prepared. He failed to make that explanation notwithstanding the fact the matter had been the subject matter of discussion between the President and the American delegates to the conference. In his letter, however, he said that the people of the United States and Japan both objected to the main islands of Japan being included in the treaty. What I desire to know is why they were ever included in the treaty if Japan objected to their inclusion, and if it is utterly immaterial, why they were excluded by a separate and supplementary treaty?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas is one of the ablest lawyers in this body. Did he think that Japan was excluded in the first draft of the treaty?

Mr. ROBINSON. I did not. I think the main islands of Japan were included.

Mr. LENROOT. I thought so. I was very sure the Senator from Arkansas would answer the question in that way.

Mr. ROBINSON. I disagreed with the construction placed upon it by the President, and thought it was manifestly the intention of our delegates to include them; but if the President thought it was immaterial, why did he raise the issue, and if the conference thought it was immaterial, why, after Japan had been included over her objection, was she excluded in response to the sentiment of the United States and Japan, as stated by Secretary Hughes in his letter?

Mr. LENROOT. The fact is that this has been done, and the Senator objects to my making an inquiry as to whether that if this treaty were a treaty of force, as the Senator from Arkansas contends it is, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] would agree to it. I say it is a very important circumstance, in construing the treaty. The reason I am very sure why the Senator from Arkansas raised the question he does is because he would be compelled to answer, for he is an honest and a sincere man, that he does not believe the Senator from Alabama or the Senator from Massachusetts believed for a moment that there was any obligation to use force behind this treaty.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have never said, or intended to say, that there is an express committal to force in this treaty. I have said, and I repeat it, that considering the course and the application which similar agreements have taken in history, if an outside power attacks any one of these great powers, and we enter a conference to determine the most efficient means to repeal that aggression, and the conference decides that the use of force is necessary, and we refuse to abide the judgment of the conference, we will be condemned as violating the obligations of our treaty.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, again, in order to take that position, the Senator from Arkansas must contend that the intent expressed by the American delegates at the time of the plenary conference, before the treaties were signed and accepted by the other delegates, must have no weight, and he would take the construction of a foreign power as against an American construction. No other conclusion can be arrived at if the Senator from Arkansas contends there is such an obligation in this treaty.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit an interruption at this point apropos of what he has said?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. KING. M. Viviani used the expression I shall read at the time the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] presented the treaty now under discussion to the conference. I read from pages 106 and 107 of the conference minutes. He stated:

> We fully understand that four great powers bind themselves to respect their mutual rights as far as the islands and dominions of the Pacific are concerned; we understand that if some controversy should loom up on the horizon which can not be settled through the ordinary workings of diplomacy, these powers shall take counsel together; we understand that should the rights of these powers be imperiled by the aggressive action of another power, measures would be taken to meet this situation.

Does not the Senator construe that language to mean that M. Viviani at least interpreted the obligation to be such as to require those delegates to take some concerted action, which might mean force, to meet the situation, and that it would imply some moral, if not legal obligation upon the part of the high contracting parties?

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator will agree that there are other measures which can be taken to bring about a peaceful adjustment other than force.

Mr. KING. Yes; there might be arbitration.

Mr. LENROOT. M. Viviani in that same speech expressly stated that the treaty did not provide for the use of force, that there was no provision carrying an obligation to use force, and therefore M. Viviani, under the Senator's own statement, must have had in mind measures other than the use of force, so far as the obligation is concerned.

Mr. KING. It seems to me the language used by M. Viviani, to which I have just called the Senator's attention, clearly implies that a contingency might arise which would require the application of force and that there would be concerted action upon the part of the signatories to the treaty to use such force, if force was the alternative, in order to promote the peace of those who were signatories to the treaty.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Utah is too good a lawyer to seriously contend for any such construction as that. When a court is construing an instrument, if it expressly excludes by construction the doing of one thing, and the contract provides that other things may be done, does the Senator contend that because of the general expression the thing which is expressly excluded thereby becomes included? No; the Senator from Utah is too able a lawyer to insist upon any such construction.

Mr. REED. May I ask the Senator a question for information?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RANSDELL in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LENROOT. For a question. I can not yield for any extended discussion.

Mr. REED. I am not going into a discussion. The Senator gave some quotations from M. Viviani a moment ago. Can he give me the page reference to them?

Mr. LENROOT. It begins on page 106 of the volume containing the proceedings.

Mr. REED. What was the language to which the Senator referred?

Mr. LENROOT. I quoted two paragraphs. He said in the beginning of his speech:

> I assent, without reticence and without reservation, to everything implied in the agreement just read by Mr. LODGE, who has followed it up with an analysis at once so simple and so powerful.

A little later in the same speech he said:

> He [Mr. LODGE] has pointed out that when four great powers are determined that peace shall prevail in a given part of the world the concert of these powers, without provision for military or naval action, is all that is needed to assure the preservation, the guaranty, and the protection of that peace.

Mr. REED. On what page is that?

Mr. LENROOT. On the next page—page 107.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator permit me to call his attention to the fact that the two clauses he has read entirely omit the very direct statement of Mr. Viviani, which I can not construe in any other way than meaning that force or any other means may be employed?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am not going to enter into a further discussion of that except to say that where Mr. Viviani says that it is his understanding that the treaty contains no provision for the use of force, I take it that that is his construction of the treaty.

Comparisons have been made between this treaty and the Anglo-Japanese alliance, and because one certain phrase occurs in both treaties it is asserted that the obligations are similar.

Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] insists that this is an alliance within the ordinary meaning of that term in international law. During the League of Nations debate the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] made a very valuable contribution to the Senate upon the subject of what constitutes an alliance, and he read into the RECORD definitions of international authorities of what constitutes an alliance.

At this point I want to read two or three of the definitions furnished to the Senate by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], who said:

> An alliance in international law is—
> "A union or association of two or more States or nations, formed by league or treaty, for the joint prosecution of a war or for their mutual protection in repelling hostile attacks." (Black's Law Dictionary.)

He then followed that with Bouvier's definition and comment, as follows:

> In international law: A contract, treaty, or league between two or more sovereigns or States made for purposes of aggression or defense.
> Defensive alliances are those in which a nation agrees to defend her ally in case the latter is attacked. Offensive alliances are those in which nations unite for the purpose of making an attack or jointly waging war against another nation.

Then he quoted from Oppenheim, as follows:

> Alliances in the strict sense of the term are treaties of union between two or more States for the purpose of defending each other against an attack in war or jointly attacking third States or for both purposes.

But, Mr. President, I quite agree with the assertion of the Senator from Arkansas, that, whatever this treaty may be, the terms of the contract itself settle the question, so that it does not make very much difference what we call it. I shall not, therefore, spend any further time upon that.

Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, comparisons have been made between this treaty and the Anglo-Japanese alliance, and because one certain phrase occurs in both treaties it is asserted that the obligations are similar. Therefore it is proper to compare the two documents. Article 2 of the pending treaty I again quote:

> If the said rights are threatened by the aggressive action of any other power, the high contracting parties shall communicate with one another fully and frankly in order to arrive at an understanding as to the most efficient measures to be taken, jointly or separately, to meet the exigencies of the particular situation.

Article 1 of the Anglo-Japanese treaty reads as follows:

> It is agreed that whenever, in the opinion of either Great Britain or Japan, any of the rights and interests referred to in the preamble of this agreement are in jeopardy the two Governments will communicate with one another fully and frankly, and will consider in common the measures which should be taken to safeguard those menaced rights or interests.

The language of these two articles is strikingly similar, and because of this similarity it is contended that this is merely a substitution of a quadruple alliance for the Anglo-Japanese alliance. If this were all there was to the Anglo-Japanese alliance there would be much force in the contention, but the substantive part of that alliance is not found in the article I have quoted. This article is like article 2 in the pending treaty, in that it is nothing more than an agreement to consult, and when it is remembered that long before the Washington conference was called our Government had expressed its desire for a termination of the Anglo-Japanese treaty, it would be very natural if Secretary Hughes, who had given that treaty careful study, should use some of the language in the article containing the agreement to consult in drafting the treaty now before us covering the same subject.

But when it came to the agreement for an alliance, Great Britain and Japan did not rely upon the article I have quoted. They well knew that that article standing alone could not constitute an alliance. They wanted to make an alliance and went ahead and did it by the use of appropriate language, and that was done in the next article, which is as follows:

> ART. 2. If by reason of unprovoked attack or aggressive action, wherever arising on the part of any power or powers, either high contracting party should be involved in war in defense of its territorial rights or special interests mentioned in the preamble of this agreement, the other high contracting party will at once come to the assistance of its ally and will conduct the war in common and make peace in mutual agreement with it.

This is the article which made the Anglo-Japanese treaty an alliance. The makers of that treaty clearly did not intend that article 1 should commit either party to the use of force, and desiring to be so committed, they did it in the next article, no counterpart of which is found in the pending treaty. Therefore, those who invite comparison between this treaty and the Anglo-Japanese treaty to ascertain whether we are entering into alliance for the use of force must admit that in that alliance there was an express commitment to the use of force in the second article and therefore none can be implied from the first article which is similar to article 2 of the pending treaty.

But the point is made, Mr. President, by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]——

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. McCORMICK. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the two preceding treaties of alliance between Great Britain and Japan in order that the Senator may note the significance of article 2 of the treaty between Japan and Great Britain to which he alludes. Article 2 is found not only in the treaty of 1911 but in the treaty of 1905, while it is not found in the same language in the first treaty, the treaty of 1902. If it were not important as constituting an offensive and defensive alliance, it would not have been incorporated in the second and third treaties while it is absent from the first treaty.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly not, Mr. President. The Senator from Illinois is, of course, correct in that statement.

I was about to say that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] made a point of the fact that in article 2 of the pending treaty the word "aggression" is used without being preceded by the word "unprovoked"; but I submit that upon reflection I think both of those distinguished Senators will concede that the absence of the word "unprovoked" in article 2 of the pending treaty lends emphasis to our construction that there was not and could not be implied any obligation to use force. Why? In the Anglo-Japanese alliance, remember, the obligation is to resort to war, for each nation to come to the assistance of its ally; and therefore it was, of course, thought, and naturally so, before undertaking an obligation to make common war with its ally, it should be understood that not any kind of aggression but only unprovoked aggression should impose any obligation upon the other party to the treaty to come to the defense of the party upon whom the aggression was made. Now, when we come to this treaty the word "unprovoked" is omitted. Why? Because, Mr. President, there being no obligation for the use of force, the treaty was meant to include all aggressions, and to leave the parties to whom the facts are communicated free to assert that the aggression was a just aggression; to leave them free to attempt to bring about a peaceful adjustment of disputes, where under the Anglo-Japanese treaty only an unprovoked aggression could be considered. So when the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] insists that he is going to offer a reservation providing that only unprovoked aggressions shall come within the purview of article 2, the only effect of such a reservation would be to prevent a possible amicable and peaceful settlement where there was aggression, through the use of our good offices or the good offices of some other party, because under his proposed reservation there would be no duty to communicate fully and frankly with the other parties to the treaty unless the aggression was unprovoked. So, Mr. President, the very absence of the word "unprovoked" in the pending treaty gives force to the construction which I think has already been made plain.

Mr. President, I have now analyzed fairly I believe the substantial provisions of this treaty and I submit that under all proper rules of construction, upon the clear intent of those who framed it, upon a consideration of all the circumstances attending it and upon a comparison with the Anglo-Japanese treaty, which it terminates there is no alliance, no commitment to the use of force, and no reservation upon these points is necessary.

The great advantage which the United States secures by this treaty is the termination of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, which makes possible and safe the reduction of our Navy to the point provided in the limitation of naval armament treaty.

I realize, Mr. President, there are some among us who desire complete isolation of the United States from the rest of the world, who believe that we should enter no kind of an association with other nations looking to the maintenance of the peace of the world. That they are just as honest in their views and just as patriotic as those of us who differ with them, I freely admit; but, Mr. President, it is true that there are some elements in America who are not thinking of America first or her welfare, who are not thinking of peace, but war. There are elements who do not desire friendly relations between the United States and Great Britain, who would welcome war to-morrow between them, heedless of the cost in American lives and money. They are not many it is true, but they are attempting to stir up opposition to this treaty, especially among Americans of German and Irish descent. Their opposition is not because they believe this treaty breeds war, but because they believe it breeds peace. They hope that Americans of German descent who still love all that is best in their Fatherland will believe that with insured peace between England and the United States, Germany will be less able to regain her lost place in the world. They hope that Americans of Irish descent will believe that Irish independence is less likely with peace than with war between the United States and Great Britain. But, Mr. President, though a few of these elements may here and there be swayed by such arguments, their overwhelming majority are American patriots and they desire as much as any other Americans peace with all the world. They know what war is now—all its suffering and all its cost, and they want no more of it. Then there is another group, sincere and honest, who believe that if this treaty is defeated we will eventually enter the League of Nations. Mr. President, if these treaties are defeated, not only will we never enter into the League of Nations, but we will not during the lives of any one of us enter into any international conference for peace. Who would want to confer with us after the experience of the past three years, and what President of any party would venture to call another conference or participate in one? If this treaty is rejected the isolationists will have won their victory, but many of them will live to realize that their hour of victory was the Nation's hour of peril.

Within the walls of this Chamber, Mr. President, this debate has thus far been conducted upon both sides without misrepresentation of facts, but it is not so throughout the country. Much of the propaganda against this treaty has no regard for facts and is based almost wholly upon misstatements and misrepresentation.

To illustrate, the charge has been made that there was a secret agreement that the mainland of Japan should be included. To use the language of one speaker, "It was only through the happy accident of a blundering statement by President Harding that the American people were able to discover that a secret agreement had already been arrived at by Secretary Hughes and the delegates of Great Britain, France, and Japan, that the four-power treaty served to guarantee the mainland of Japan and not merely her long line of insular possessions."

Passing the misstatement that there is any "guaranty" in this treaty, I call attention to the misstatement that there was a secret agreement that the mainland of Japan was to be included. Of course, there could be no such secret agreement because by the very terms of the treaty the mainland of Japan was included and it requires another treaty to exclude it. The reason for the inclusion in the first instance has been stated by the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Alabama and also the reason for its exclusion in the subsequent treaty. Instead of the American delegates being compelled by public opinion to exclude the mainland of Japan, it is now proven that the first objection came from Japan herself—which by the way is conclusive that Japan did not believe there was any guaranty of force in this treaty, because if she had so believed it is not likely that she would have objected to this advantage given her.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to devote—and I shall not speak very much longer—just a few moments to two or three assertions made in the debate yesterday by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. The Senator from California undertook in his speech to read into this treaty a guaranty to maintain the rights of all the powers because of a recital in the preamble, and he called attention to the fact that there was very little discussion of the preamble in the Senate; that all the discussion centered around articles 1 and 2, and he seemed to imply that the advocates of this treaty were afraid of something in the preamble and for that reason would not discuss it.

I can not remember that any Senator other than the Senator from California has raised the point made by him; but I want to take a moment in analyzing his contention, because I believe that on reflection he himself will admit that his contention is not well founded.

What is the preamble?

With a view to the preservation of the general peace and the maintenance of their rights in relation to their insular possessions and insular dominions in the region of the Pacific Ocean—

Have determined to conclude a treaty.

Then follows the contract.

What is the preamble? It states the purpose of entering into the contract. The purpose is stated to be for the preservation of the general peace and the maintenance of the rights of the respective parties in the Pacific, and the contract proceeds to carry out that very thing. To the extent that we obligate ourselves to respect the territory of the other powers and they obligate themselves to respect our rights, to just that extent is the purpose of the preamble carried out—the preservation of peace and the maintenance of the rights of the different parties to the treaty. To the extent that agreements to confer under article 1 in case of dispute between any of the parties to the treaty will lead to an amicable settlement of that dispute instead of resort to war, just to that extent is the purpose of the preamble carried out—the preservation of peace and the maintenance of rights. To the extent that wherever there is an aggression by an outside power, and through communicating fully and frankly with the parties to the treaty war is averted and an amicable and peaceful settlement of the dispute secured, just to that extent is the purpose of the preamble carried out—the preservation of peace and the maintenance of rights. But, Mr. President, when those things in the contract so clearly carry out the purpose of the preamble, what Senator is there that would for a moment think of referring to the preamble to find some obligation that is not found in the contract?

I listened very closely to the speech of the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] on yesterday, because I need not say that which every Senator knows: There is no abler debater in this body, no greater student of international law, no more courageous man than is the Senator from Idaho, nearly always logical, carrying through his proposition from beginning to end; and all of us can not help but admire him, although we may differ from him. So I confess, Mr. President, that it was with a great deal of surprise that I found the able Senator from Idaho yesterday apparently disagreeing with himself, which certainly is very unusual, because, in response to an interruption by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], the Senator from Idaho yesterday used this language:

I will say for the benefit of the Senator from Minnesota that the Senator from Idaho is in favor of a conference with any nation in the world whenever a controversy arises between that nation and the United States.

The Senator from Idaho is unalterably opposed to contracting in advance to conferring with any particular nation to take care of a war situation in which the United States may not be at all interested. If any controversy arose between the United States and Japan, I should be in favor of a conference; but I am not in favor of the United States tying itself up to take any particular action with reference to an attack which may be made upon another nation, and I do not propose ever to vote for a treaty or bind the United States to take part in any quarrel except its own.

The Senate will remember that the able Senator from Idaho yesterday throughout his discussion assumed for the purposes of his argument—and that only, I take it—the construction that the proponents of the treaty give it. Am I correct? If I am not correct, I should like to be corrected.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I assumed it for the purpose of the argument.

Mr. LENROOT. That is what I say—for the purpose of the argument; so that this statement was in accord with the Senator's assumption for the time being of the construction that we give to the treaty; but earlier in the able speech of the Senator he used this language:

No one here objects, so far as I know, to the provision for a conference in article 1. If article 2 were stricken out of the treaty, there could be a vote on it in 10 minutes.

What surprised me, because the Senator usually is so very logical, is this: Article 1 provides for and binds the United States to enter into a conference if England should threaten Japan, although the interests of the United States were not in the least affected. According to the Senator's statement, he was willing to enter into that conference, and I assume from his speech that if article 2 were stricken out of the treaty he would favor it.

Mr. BORAH. That is a violent assumption.

Mr. LENROOT. Then I stand corrected. I gathered that from the statement that if we struck out article 2 we could have a vote in 10 minutes.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; you can have the vote, but you can not have my vote.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well. I stand corrected; but the Senator certainly used this language:

No one here objects * * * to the provision for a conference in article 1.

If no one objects to the provision for a conference found in article 1, then there must be assent to the proposition that the United States will be willing to enter into such a conference if two of the other parties are involved in a dispute, although the United States is not a party to it.

But, Mr. President, as stated a moment ago, the Senator from Idaho yesterday throughout his speech assumed, for the purpose of the argument only—because he himself holds a different view—that there was no obligation anywhere in this treaty for the use of force; and then he centered his objection upon the proposition that this was a diplomatic group, and that the very existence of the group, without obligation, would tend to the creation of another group, and eventually lead to war. I think I have stated his position correctly; and he used as an illustration the Triple Entente of England, France, and Russia, and showed, and correctly showed, that the understanding between France and Great Britain at the time of the breaking out of the European war created no greater obligation upon either of the parties than this treaty creates under our construction of it. But, Mr. President, the Senator overlooks one important factor. If he would draw an illustration analogous to this four-power treaty, instead of that being a Triple Entente of Russia, England, and France, suppose Germany had been in it with the same kind of an agreement—an agreement to confer—does the Senator think that it is not at least possible that the World War might have been avoided? And here is the distinction, Mr. President.

The Triple Entente was a group of associated powers loosely joined together because of potential enemies, constituting the triple alliance; but in this treaty what have we? A group of four powers that are entering into an understanding not because they fear aggression from some outside source, such as did the Triple Entente. Who is there to fear to-day, or for the next 10 years? That is not the purpose. The purpose of this treaty is to have an understanding between powers that are potential enemies and get those powers together, and replace hate and suspicion by friendly understanding and concord. That is what this treaty does; that is the purpose of this treaty; and there is the distinction, as wide as the world, between this treaty and the alliances and the entente to which the Senator from Idaho refers that have taken place in the past.

With reference to conference, I want to emphasize, in connection with my comments upon the Senator's speech, that he gave as his ground of objection that we did not provide for a conference in case of an aggression upon one of the four parties to the treaty by an outside power. Mr. President, if at any time there be an aggression, and the facts are freely and fully communicated to the United States, as the obligation is in the treaty that they shall be, the United States can say to the party on whom the aggression is made, "We believe that you should invite the other party into a conference to consider this matter and see whether it can not be peacefully settled." If the invitation is accepted, we have exactly the kind of a conference for which the Senator from Idaho contends. If the suggestion is rejected, that is the end of it, so far as the United States is concerned.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I have tried to prove by analysis of this treaty that in it there is no alliance, no obligation or commitment to the use of force under any circumstances, but under it the sovereignty and independence of the United States is left unimpaired; that it is a treaty of peace and not of war; that it is in accord with American principles and American ideals; and if ratified by the Senate we can not only look for peace in the Pacific but we may hope that the nations of Europe who were lately enemies may follow our example and enter into like understandings of friendship and good will.

Mr. WALSH of Montana obtained the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me just to have a very brief document printed?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have found with some difficulty the declaration of war made by Great Britain at the opening of the Great War of 1914. It is as follows:

A STATE OF WAR.

His Majesty's Government informed the German Government on August 4, 1914, that unless a satisfactory reply to the request of His Majesty's Government for an assurance that Germany would respect the neutrality of Belgium was received by midnight of that day, His Majesty's Government would feel bound to take all steps in their power to uphold that neutrality and the observance of a treaty to which Germany was as much a party as Great Britain.

The result of this communication having been that His Majesty's ambassador at Berlin had to ask for his passports, His Majesty's Government have accordingly formally notified the German Government that a state of war exists between the two countries as from 11 p. m. to-day.

Foreign Office, August 4, 1914.

It will be observed that the only cause of war there stated is the invasion of Belgium.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before the Senator from Montana proceeds——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. I want to call attention to the press dispatch, No. 148, dated August 2, 1914. I shall comment on it later in connection with other documents. This is from Sir Edward Grey:

After the cabinet this morning I gave M. Cambon the following memorandum:

"I am authorized to give an assurance that, if the German fleet comes into the Channel or through the North Sea to undertake hostile operations against French coast or shipping, the British fleet will give all the protection in its power."

That was the real declaration of war between Great Britain and Germany.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; I am familiar with that note of Sir Edward Grey, as he was then; but I merely wanted to call attention to the fact that the invasion of Belgium played a very important part and was not by any means overlooked or neglected.

Mr. BORAH. A proposition which has not been controverted or suggested by anyone.

Mr. LODGE. I am glad to hear that it was not.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I had hoped to find an opportunity to commit to writing my reflections upon the very important question before us. They might be in more succinct and connected form if I had done so; but I address the Senate briefly this afternoon rather for the purpose of stating my position with reference to it than in the hope that anyone will be convinced or converted by anything that I may say.

I have a very sincere desire to vote for this treaty if I can do so and satisfy my conscience. I voted for the Yap treaty not because I considered it as of any particular consequence or conferring upon the United States any rights of any particular value but chiefly because I could find no reason for doing otherwise, and I hope to vote for all of the other treaties; but I shall not vote for the treaty that is now pending before us unless the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] or some amendment in substance like it is adopted.

I am prompted to speak also because, from something that has transpired, it might be inferred that I am desirous of seeing article 2 excised from the treaty. I have no such desire. I should like to see article 2 stay in the treaty, modified as provided by the Robinson amendment or some amendment quite like it.

I remind the Senate at this time that the question before the Senate is not the resolution of ratification. It is the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas; and I have yet to hear a word uttered in criticism of the amendment or a reason urged why it should not be incorporated in the treaty. The discussion has all been conducted upon an entirely different plane.

Let me inquire, what is the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas? As finally perfected it reads as follows:

Each of the high contracting parties will respect the rights and possessions of all other nations and refrain from all acts of aggression against any other power or powers. If there should develop between any of the high contracting parties and any other power or powers a controversy relating to said insular rights and possessions or to any far eastern question which is not satisfactorily settled by diplomacy and is likely to affect the harmonious accord subsisting between any party or parties to this compact and any other power or powers, the high contracting parties shall invite all powers claiming an interest in the controversy to a joint conference to which the whole subject shall be referred for consideration and adjustment.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator to read the first portion? I have the printed proposal before me, but it is only the first portion which appears to be changed. I ask the Senator to read again the first clause.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It reads:

Each of the high contracting parties will respect the rights and possessions of all other nations and refrain from all acts of aggression against any other power or powers.

Mr. President, if I were preparing this amendment, I should make it very much briefer than it is. I should cut out the clause just read, and make it read as follows:

If there should arise between any of the high contracting parties and any other power or powers a controversy involving said insular rights and possessions, threatening war, which is not satisfactorily settled by diplomacy, the high contracting parties shall invite all powers having an interest in the controversy to a joint conference, to which the whole subject shall be referred for consideration and adjustment.

If I had any hope of making any impression upon the gentleman in charge of this treaty I should commend to their very careful consideration the amendment tendered by the Senator from Arkansas thus revised.

Let me explain just exactly what it means. Under the treaty, if one of the contracting powers, Japan, for instance, should be assailed by another—China or Russia, for instance—a conference will be called. On the other hand, if Japan should attack China or attack Russia, no conference will be called.

Second, in either case the outside party is not invited to participate in the conference. That is to say, if Japan should attack either Russia or China, a conference would be called in which Japan, the United States, Great Britain, and France would participate. China or Russia, as the case might be, would be on the outside. Exactly the same situation would occur if the aggression came from the other side. The conference would consist of representatives of the four powers named, China or Russia, for the purpose of illustration, being on the outside.

I inquire of the gentlemen who are urging the adoption of this treaty, if a conference is desirable when the possessions of any one of these are assailed or likely to be assailed, why a conference is not equally desirable if any one of them contemplates assailing the possessions of an outside power?

Likewise I inquire of them, if a conference, no matter for what purpose, other than for the purpose of engaging in war against the assailing party, is desirable, why both parties to the controversy should not be invited in?

I have no controversy whatever with the gentlemen who assert that the treaty under consideration does not obligate us in any sense whatever to the use of force, nor that we are obligated to do anything under this treaty except to confer. I shall not take time to dwell upon the reasons which have impelled me to that conclusion. They have been recited here in the course of the debate and set forth by able Senators, as well as the considerations, which can not be dismissed lightly at all, which would lead the mind to the other conclusion. Neither shall I attempt to enlarge upon them. I give the Senate my own view about the matter.

Likewise, Mr. President, I am not impressed with the idea that there is no value whatever in a conference when a war is threatened between two of the great powers, even though they are not empowered to resort to force in order to make effective any conclusions at which they may arrive. It has been frequently asserted, and generally accepted, I believe, that if the powers which subsequently became belligerents could only have been brought together around one and the same table with other nations, neutral, which were interested in the controversy, the probabilities are that the Great War of 1914 would never have occurred.

When Priam assembled the Trojan chieftains in order to arrive at an understanding as to the most effective means to meet the situation which confronted them, the great Hector, wise in council as he was valiant in battle, gave this as his judgment, "Let Helen go." That was his way of meeting the exigency of that situation.

So, Mr. President, if an aggression upon Japan, involving her insular possessions or dominions, were about to take place upon the part of Russia, we will say, because Japan continues to occupy Russian territory despite her promises to withdraw, for instance, and we participated in a conference called under the terms of this treaty, we might say, "The most efficient means to meet the situation is for you to get out of Russia," and we would be entirely within our rights in proposing that as the most efficient means to meet the situation.

That reminds me, Mr. President, that it has been asserted that an assumption of that kind can not be indulged, that it is impossible to conceive that Russia should within the period of this treaty so rehabilitate herself as to permit us to imagine she might attack Japan. We must not forget, in the first place, that this treaty is not limited to a period of 10 years, as has been asserted here. This treaty goes on for an indefinite period. It simply comes to an end when one of the parties gives 12 months' notice of its desire to withdraw from the treaty. But we must forget the history we learned about the revolution in France to conclude that it is not possible for Russia, within the period of 10 years, to become a militant power, worthy of reckoning in treaties of peace which look to the future. France, it will be remembered, when red revolution had brought her Government to chaos and her industries to utter ruin, was attacked by all Europe, when she was without money, without credit, and without an alliance, and she held all Europe at bay, and, as the historian tells us, with one hand carried the torch of revolution beyond her borders and with the other stifled the flame which was devouring her within. We can not omit these possibilities in the consideration of this matter before us.

I agree quite frankly that the conference when it is assembled might agree that force is the only remedy for the situation which is presented, and the conference might agree that the nations signatory should join with the assailed power in a military operation to overcome the attack; but, Mr. President, I think the world by this time quite clearly understands that such an agreement entered into by any representative of the United States would be utterly ineffective unless it had the approbation of the Congress of the United States, or at least of the Senate. Nor is there any agreement here that we are to abide by the decision of the majority.

So far as the moral obligation is concerned, we are in exactly the same situation. I do not regard us as being under any moral obligation in the premises other than as the treaty itself provides. But I do not desire to discuss that. I want to direct my attention to the question now before us. Why not invite every outside power interested in a controversy which is likely to precipitate war to sit down at the table with us? What reason is there for imagining that any one of the powers signatory to this treaty will hesitate for one single moment to accede to such an amendment to this treaty?

We are told that if this treaty is defeated it may mean the defeat of the naval disarmament treaty by failure of some other power to accede to it in that situation. But why should any one of the other three powers signatory to this treaty refuse to meet the other party to a controversy in a conference for the purpose of arriving at an adjustment of differences likely to precipitate war? All three of the other powers are now members of the League of Nations, and by its covenant have already stipulated and agreed that if any difference shall arise between them and any other member of the league they will submit that difference to arbitration or to the arbitrament of the council of the League of Nations, so that they are already committed to the principle of submitting differences of this character to the conciliatory influence of an arbitral body of some kind or other.

The question has been presented, however, as to whether there is not something inconsistent between such an agreement as this and the covenant of the League of Nations, to which three of these powers have subscribed. I do not see anything inconsistent or difficult about it at all. The covenant of the League of Nations contemplates that when differences arise the parties will endeavor to settle them by diplomatic action, and even that they will call in the friendly offices of other powers for the purpose of adjusting them, and if they are not able thus to agree by mutually getting together upon the matter, then the party which threatens the attack may be cited before the council for action there.

So that the parties would proceed under this treaty to hold the conference, the League of Nations meanwhile keeping its hands off in order to permit the parties, if they can, to arrange the matter in a manner entirely satisfactory to themselves. Then, if they fail to do it, any one of the three powers could cite in the party threatening the attack before the council of the league.

The very fact that the treaty before us does not provide for calling in the other party to the controversy is a circumstance which leads to the conclusion that this treaty is not an arrangement for arriving at a settlement of controversies by conference and composition, but leads to the other conclusion, that it is an agreement under which the possessions of these four powers are to be defended by force, if force is necessary. In other words, opposition to this amendment tendered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], at least as it would be amended as I have heretofore suggested, gives color at least to the argument that this is not a treaty purely for the settlement of differences by composition and conference, but is an agreement under which the possessions of the four parties are to be defended by force.

If an amendment of this kind should be rejected by the Senate of the United States, it would naturally arouse the suspicions of the countries outside likely to be brought into conflict with any one of the four powers, and thus would precipitate the organization of a counter group of some kind or other.

Mr. President, in the course of the discussion of the Versailles treaty, and particularly with reference to the League of Nations, we heard much in the way of warning about Washington's Farewell Address. Declarations of statesmen such as that must, of course, always be considered in the light of the facts attending their issuance. The President of the United States was not issuing that farewell address without being guided by the experience of his administration and his acquaintance with public affairs. At that time it is perfectly well known that Europe was divided into two hostile camps; the one gathered about Great Britain and the other gathered about France. Undoubtedly Washington had that situation in mind, and he was warning us against tying ourselves up with one nation or with one group of nations as against another nation or another group of nations.

Those of us who favored the covenant of the League of Nations insisted that his argument had no application to the situation when all the nations of the earth of any consequence should be assembled in one league, and there was no possibility of getting another counter or opposing combination to meet it. It was, of course, contemplated at that time—and I think it was a mistake that it was not promptly done—that Germany would be admitted to membership in the league, and that Russia, as soon as she established a government that would be recognized, would also be admitted as a member of the league. Therefore, there would have remained no antagonistic powers on the outside.

However, Mr. President, that is not the situation that is presented here. Here we are asked to tie ourselves up with three nations, with the likelihood, indeed, the contemplation, that another league or alliance or association, competitive in character, will be organized against it. It is said, Mr. President, in that connection, that there is no reason why the outside power might not be invited to participate in this proposed conference; that is to say, an outside power threatening some aggression against Japan, for instance, a conference would be called, as provided in article 2 of this treaty, participated in by the United States, by France, by Great Britain, and Japan, and the United States might then propose that Russia or China, in the case supposed, should be invited to participate; but it must be remembered that the decision would be reached by unanimous action, and Japan might very readily be imagined to refuse to invite the other party. It is necessary to assure beforehand by the treaty that the other party will come in and will have the right to come in, not merely upon the suggestion of anyone but that no one will have the right to keep it out. That is the question which is presented here.

Mr. President, we are told that this is an all-important treaty; in the first place, that we get substantial and important concessions by it, and, second, that if we do not ratify the treaty it will seriously affect and may possibly result in the failure of the entire work of the recent conference. I wish to discuss those two contentions for a moment. What do we get by this treaty? We are pointed to article 1 of the treaty, which is to the effect that if differences arise between any of the four powers a conference will be called for the purpose of adjusting them, and, second, that the rights of the parties will be respected. Thus, it is said, we are insured for a period of 10 years that no attack will be made upon our island possessions—the Philippines, Hawaii, Guam, and so forth.

Mr. President, we get nothing by that provision of article 1 to the effect that the parties, respectively, will respect the rights and possessions of the other parties. As has been shown, we already have treaties of amity and commerce with all of these nations, by which they have agreed to respect our possessions; but if there were no such treaties, that is an acknowledged principle of international law, as I understand international law; that is to say, that every nation, being a member of the family of nations, impliedly agrees that it will respect the rights and possessions of every other nation.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. Assume the last statement of the Senator from Montana to be correct, what was the object of putting such a clause in the League of Nations covenant as that contained in article 10?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I did not hear the Senator's question.

Mr. KELLOGG. If it is true that under international law—and I do not dispute it—it is the duty of every nation to recognize the rights of every other nation, what was the object of putting article 10 into the League of Nations covenant?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota will doubtless very distinctly recall that when it was proposed to eliminate from article 10 everything except the provision therein to the effect that each member of the league agrees to respect the territorial integrity of every other nation, I said we might just as well—and that I would then be perfectly willing to do so—eliminate the whole article. I did not conceive that it would then give anything to us. It would then be a mere declaration of an acknowledged principle of international law.

Mr. KELLOGG. Under article 1 of the pending treaty the nations agree to respect each other's territory in the Pacific. What is the objection to the nations having possessions in the Pacific making such an agreement?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not object to that at all; it is perfectly proper to declare it in a treaty. The point I am making, however, is that we get nothing by it.

Mr. BORAH. We might as well put in the Ten Commandments.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

The next benefit which it is said we get by this treaty is the abrogation of the Anglo-Japanese alliance. Mr. President, I have not heard of anybody in America who was losing any sleep or spending any restless nights over the Anglo-Japanese alliance. It was offensive to the people of the United States, but they never feared it. Just stop and reflect about the matter for a single moment. It is said it was a peril to us because it signified that Great Britain would go to the aid of Japan if Japan should make war upon the United States; that it tied those two nations together as enemies of the United States if either one of them should make war upon us. Let us examine that matter from both angles. What is the probability that Great Britain is going to make war upon the United States and call upon Japan as an ally? Is anybody fearing that it is going to happen next week? That it is going to happen within 10 years? Let us take the other angle. It is said that Great Britain would come to the aid of Japan in the event Japan should make war upon the United States. I undertake to say, Mr. President, if the Anglo-Japanese treaty were renewed, solemnly signed and subscribed by Great Britain, and Japan should attack the United States for the purpose of establishing the principle of racial equality, that she could not raise an army, she could not raise money to carry on that war even in the islands of Great Britain, not to speak about Ireland, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa. It would mean the dissolution of the British Empire.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in reinforcement of what the Senator from Montana is just saying, if I remember correctly, there was in the Anglo-Japanese alliance, so called, the last time it was renewed a provision that it would not apply to any country with which Great Britain had an arbitration treaty, and we are such a country.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from Mississippi is quite right about that, and that is only one circumstance. Moreover, before the council of the League of Nations both of those countries solemnly put upon record their conviction that that alliance was contrary to their covenants as members of the League of Nations, and was therefore in effect abrogated.

Mr. President, I said that it would mean the dissolution of the British Empire if she should ever join Japan in a war upon the United States for the purpose of establishing Japan's principle of racial equality. Whatever the occasion of any controversy between this country and Japan which might be likely to result in war that would be the cause of it, and in any treaty that might be negotiated after a successful war thus waged by Japan, of course, that principle would be recognized. In that view just imagine for a moment Great Britain making war upon the United States for the purpose of enforcing upon the people of this country that idea.

Mr. President, we should like to have the Anglo-Japanese alliance abrogated, because it bears some semblance of unfriendliness toward the United States; but that is all. I learned with some astonishment from the letter of Secretary Hughes to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], which was read here the other day, that some representations had been made by the United States to Great Britain concerning the matter. So far as my knowledge is concerned, nobody in this country asked that any such representation should be made or indicated the slightest apprehension to our country by reason of that alliance.

Mr. President, the despairing note with which I commenced these remarks, that I did not expect anybody would take any different view of this matter by reason of anything I might say, does not, however, prevent me from indulging in the very fervent hope that those in charge of the treaty will agree to the inclusion in it of an amendment, in substance at least, like that offered by the Senator from Arkansas. I should like to inquire now of the Senator from Alabama, seeing that he is here, would he object to an amendment of that kind?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will be glad to say a few words when the Senator from Montana is through; I do not like to speak in his time.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Very well; I will conclude in just a few moments.

Mr. President, I inquire if this is an agreement for the composition of international differences by conciliatory and pacific means, then would it not be in the very last degree desirable that both parties to a controversy, whatever it may be, arising between one of the signatory powers and a power outside should be brought to exactly the same table to sit down with the other signatory powers who are not directly interested in the controversy for the purpose of adjusting their differences?

I can appreciate perfectly well that the distinguished gentlemen who prepared these treaties for us would like very much, indeed, to see them ratified exactly as they were framed, but at the same time it will not be forgotten that among the most ardent advocates of this treaty are gentlemen who were entirely unsparing in their criticisms of a former President of the United States, who they asserted was unduly insistent upon the ratification of the treaty negotiated by him without any change whatever, without, as they expressed it, the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t."

We are told, Mr. President, that if this treaty is rejected it will wreck the work of the conference. I do not believe it. Moreover, I am perfectly satisfied that the people of the United States are concerned, and principally concerned, in the treaty providing a reduction of naval armament, and perhaps in that alone; but if it is true that the rejection of this particular treaty will destroy the work of the conference, will result in the rejection of the other treaties, why peril the other treaties and the work of the conference by rejecting the very proper amendment tendered by the Senator from Arkansas? The majority may have enough votes to secure the ratification of this treaty without an amendment of that character, but would it not be eminently wise to get every vote that can be obtained in favor of it, to ratify it not by a bare two-thirds, but to put it in such shape that those of us who are sincere and desirous of helping complete these treaties may find ourselves able to give it our assent?

There is just another word, Mr. President, which I can not conclude without uttering. We have been appealed to by the President of the United States and by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and the appeal has yet been repeated by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], to give our assent to these treaties, because if we fail to do so none of the great powers of the earth will ever again sit down at a conference table with us with a view to devising some system to redeem a sick world or to preserve them from the horrors of war which must extend to all and not be felt alone by the participants in it. I recognize the peril; I appreciate the delicacy of the situation; but I remind Senators that those who were the moving actors in the famous round-robin protest against the League of Nations must bear a large share of the responsibility for that unfortunate state of mind which prevails among the nations abroad with respect to the efforts to engage with the United States in treaties general in their character. The admonition, Mr. President, might come better from some one other than the gentlemen who are so largely responsible for the sentiment they deplore.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, the State of Georgia is one of three of the original thirteen States which unanimously adopted the present Constitution of the United States, not a vote being cast against it, all being for it, as was the case in New Jersey and in Delaware. Therefore, while it may be a mere sentimentalism, I have a special reverence for that great national instrument to which we swore allegiance here a year ago, taking a solemn oath to preserve, protect, and defend it. My conviction is very deep, Mr. President, that these treaties violate the Constitution. I do not find in it a single line that authorizes us to tax the people for any other war except a defensive war, and we have always claimed that we never have taxed the people for anything but a defensive war.

If this treaty is ratified we are, in my judgment, committed to something which will logically and inevitably lead us into war, and that war may carry us into the Pacific; and another expeditionary force will go much farther than 3,000 miles from home, and American boys will again shed their blood on foreign fields. In my judgment, and with the utmost respect for those who differ from me, we have no constitutional authority to consent in express terms to Japan's spoliations, and by implication, at least, those of Great Britain.

No one can say with any reasonableness that, after having expressly ratified the seizures which Japan made in the Pacific, we can hereafter be heard to say that Great Britain has not good title. We estopped ourselves by the Yap treaty. That conclusion is perfectly clear to my mind, and we might just as well have put in the name of Great Britain as to put in that of Japan, when we expressly said that we consent to the robberies she committed during the Great War, the spoils of which she now holds.

Mr. President, what friends will we make among the nations if we ratify this treaty? If the Anglo-Japanese alliance was a menace to us, it is a menace to other nations; and that menace is made twice as dangerous when it gains the accession of our Government and of France. This four-power treaty will arouse the suspicions and the animosities of all the other nations—nations which now perhaps have only friendly feelings for us. As to the other three parties, they make no new enemies. We are the loosers; they are the gainers.

Let us take the nations separately.

Does France make any new enemy by this treaty in which we give mortal offense to Germany and to Russia and to China? France makes no new enemies, Mr. President. Between her and Germany there is an age-long feud, intensified by what has happened since the war. Between France and Russia there can be nothing but the deepest hostility, because, as we all know, France fought her in Siberia and used Poland against her after the war, and after 4,000,000 Russians had died in defense of France. Everybody knows that when the great Russian hosts broke into east Prussia there had to be detached from the advancing German hosts, who were almost within cannon range of Paris, several of the best divisions of the German crack troops to go back to east Prussia and stem the Russian tide. But for that, in all human probability, Paris would have fallen, and perhaps the war would have been ended before we ever got in.

Does China love France? She makes no new enemy out of China, because France was one of those nations that made the opium war upon China, forcing her to accept that ruinous drug—she and England making bloody war upon a helpless, unarmed people, burning the summer palace, sacking her cities, butchering her people, and stripping her of those vast Provinces of Cochin China. No; she makes no new enemy of China by this treaty.

Take England. Does she make any new enemy by going into this four-power pact? She makes none. Germany already hates her. Russia already hates her. China already hates her; and China has good reason for hating her, because it was England that first committed an outrage upon China by seizing one of her ports.

Does Japan make any new enemies by this compact? She makes none. Germany hates her, because she takes what Germany had previously taken, and she is holding that of which Germany was stripped. Russia has good reason to hate Japan, and it is only a question of time when the legions of Trotski will be marching toward Siberia and the frontier, where they will meet the troops of Japan.

So it is, Mr. President, with all these nations. They make no new enemies, but they kindly give their old enemies to us.

Is this an alliance? Why, it most assuredly is. Who will believe for one minute that all of those rejoicings in Japan and Great Britain would have taken place if it had not been believed in London and in Tokyo that they had something better and stronger than they already had in the Anglo-Japanese alliance?' Nobody believes it. The idea of those astute diplomats of Japan and Great Britain spending month after month here, incubating behind closed doors, and bringing forth nothing except a mouse! Those mountains do not labor to bring forth mice.

Mr. President, the human memory is short, and history has a way of repeating itself. We heard that extraordinary speech of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], appealing to our hopes on the one hand and to our fears upon the other. Oh, the war clouds all over our political heavens! Where are they? He could not point them out.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] can not point them out. Nobody can point them out. There never would be a cloud upon our heavens if we stayed home and minded our own business, and the appeal to our fears was made in reference to those whom we are now asked to take as our allies. We are asked to take into our national bosom, our confidence, our friendship, the very two nations that they now say hang clouds of war upon our heavens. Could inconsistency be greater?

Then the Senator from Massachusetts—such a master of words, though it does not show in this treaty—spoke of the dawn of a new era, the new hope that had taken possession of the world, and appeals to us not to break the heart of mankind by rejecting this treaty. Innocent treaty! Once upon a time there was another innocent treaty, just about a hundred years ago. Article 2 of the Holy Alliance compact expressly renounces force. Why do you not do it in this treaty? Why not renounce it?

In the compact of the Holy Alliance force is especially renounced. Let me read it. I read from Italy and the Unholy Alliance, by W. O. Pitt, page 35:

After a preamble:

In consequence—

Of what they had already said—

the sole principle of force, whether between the said Governments or between their subjects, shall be that of doing each other reciprocal service and of testifying by unalterable good will the mutual affection with which they ought to be animated to consider themselves all as members of one and the same Christian nation—

We are using the identical language, and using it to a nation which is not Christian, and in all probability never will become so—the three allied princes looking on themselves as merely delegated by Providence to govern three branches of the one family—Austria, Prussia, and Russia—thus confessing that the Christian world, of which they and their people form a part, has in reality no other sovereign than Him to whom alone power really belongs, because in Him alone are found all the treasures of love, science, and infinite wisdom; that is to say, God, our Divine Savior, the Word of the Most High, the Word of Life. Their majesties consequently recommend to their people, with the most tender solicitude, as the sole means of enjoying that peace which arises from a good conscience and which alone is durable, to strengthen themselves every day more and more in the principles and exercise of the duties which the Divine Savior has taught to mankind.

Mr. President, for the next 30 years those three nations were drenching Europe with blood, striking down every democratic movement, repressing every reform, doing their best to degrade the people and keep them in subjection to their masters.

Before these three princes adopted that holy document, of which I have only read one clause, they held an open-air celebration of the most magnificent and spectacular character. I read from Anecdotal Recollections of the Congress of Vienna, by the Comte de la Garde Chambonas, page 26:

The sovereigns came on the ground on horseback, and the soldiery formed a huge double square, in the center of which stood a vast tent, or, rather, a temple erected in honor of the general pacification. The columns supporting the structure were decorated with panoplies of arms and with standards fluttering in the breeze. The lawn immediately around was strewn with flowers and foliage. In the middle of the tent there was an altar covered with rich cloths, and set out with all the ornaments of the Roman Catholic ritual, magnificently chased, either in gold or silver. Countless wax tapers shed their light, somewhat subdued by the rays of the sun standing brilliantly in the sky. Red Damascus carpets covered the steps of the altar.

Then comes a description of the entrance of the nobility and of the archbishop of Vienna, who went forward to perform high mass.

Practically the whole of the Vienna population had repaired to the spot to enjoy the spectacle.

At the moment of blessing the bread and the wine, the guns thundered forth a salute to the God of Hosts. Simultaneously, all those warriors, princes, kings, soldiers, and generals fell on their knees, prostrating themselves before Him in whose hands rests victory or defeat. The feeling of reverence had evidently communicated itself to the huge mass of spectators, who spontaneously bared their heads and also knelt in the dust. The cannons became once more silent and their thunder was succeeded by a solemn hush, amidst which the high priest of the Lord raised the sign of the redemption and turned toward the army to confer the supreme benediction. The religious ceremony was at an end. Amidst the clanking of swords and the rattling of muskets the huge gathering rose to its feet, and then a choir intoned in German the hymn of peace, which was accompanied by an orchestra of wind instruments. Without any premeditation the strains were taken up by the voices of the numberless spectators. No human ear ever heard anything more imposing than this spontaneous and harmonic praise of peace and the glory of the Highest.

The description continues, but that is enough. Mr. President, in every contemporaneous work we find the same thing—how the belief was universal that the Congress and the alliance would put an end to war. It is pathetic to see how really they did believe that they were putting an end to war by a formula of words.

From Lipson's "Europe in the Nineteenth Century," page 213, I read briefly. Speaking of the Holy Alliance, the author proceeds:
